(Blanking the Slate is set in its own continuity, spinning off Into the Black)*

Initial Setting Pitch:

This is a mixed Human and anthro world.
Technology is "classic cyberpunk".
Style and appearance is Blade Runner-styled noir with touches of Detroit, Shanghai, Hong Kong, Camden, Deus Ex: Human Revolution and some Batman Beyond Gotham City.

Plot: The year is 2037, great leaps in computer science and biology have allowed the once impossible: the seamless fusion of flesh and machine. However, the utopia envisioned of such a world is not to be. Greed, crime, corruption and apathy have plagued the great urban landscapes that are the hallmark of this new world.

Despite this, many of the inhabitants try their best to live in this world. But there are some opposed to this new world.

They call themselves "The Purifiers". A shadowy anti-technology group that seeks to make all augments and implants completely illegal. While most of their actions have been legal, if hateful, protests, some have taken this message further to heart and have engaged in vandalism, sabotage or even outright murder.

Title: Into the Black series full cast
Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on July 30, 2018, 02:35:43 AM

Into the Black is a classic cyberpunk world started by Serris. It has four RPs within its canon, Into the Black (http://www.gangoffive.net/index.php?topic=12341.0), Racing the Storm (http://www.gangoffive.net/index.php?topic=13105.0), Blanking the Slate (http://www.gangoffive.net/index.php?topic=14550.0) and Around the Folf (http://www.gangoffive.net/index.php?topic=14553.0). Since none of the authors added their characters to their dedicated threads in this section, I thought it might be useful to have a master sheet for the entire franchise.

Into the Black introductions

Name: Soren Almaya
Player: Serris
Age: 34
Species: Human
Augmentations: Homemade powered exoskeleton that grants him super strength as well as a degree of protection from gunfire and other hazards.
Appearance: Medium build. Brown eyes, black hair, tan skin, almost always dresses casually. Wears a set of glasses that have augmented reality capabilities as well as ability to zoom and see in infrared.
Biography: A cyberneticist by day, but an avid tinkerer by night. He makes his living repairing and modifying external augmentations like artificial limbs. Ironically, despite being so intimately familiar with augments, he refuses to get one himself as he is afraid of surgery. He had heard of "The Purifiers" before, but he dismissed them as obnoxious cranks. That all changed when his workshop was looted and everything in it destroyed. He immediately knew who was guilty thanks to the cracked gear emblem scrawled on the wall.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate

Name: Emilena Echo (https://i.imgur.com/BI73nOm.png)
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Species: Anthro Fox
Age: 21, biologically 7 (see below)
Gender: Female
Faction: Purifiers
Occupation: Law Enforcement/Paralegal
Weapons: Basic police equipment (handcuffs, taser, nightstick, flashlight, pepper spray). Not allowed to carry a firearm due to being on probation.
Description: Orange fur, with black markings on her arms and tail. Long Red hair, tied in a loose ponytail with a black ribbon. Wears a standard-issue police uniform with woven titanium fibers for protection.
Personality: Extremely uptight, nicknamed "Analena" by her fellow officers, she has seemingly no sense of humor and a well-known repulsion for any form of social attachment.
Brief History: Emilena was an orphan, the fifth who volunteered for a controversial "growth acceleration" process, designed to cut down on homeless children by rapidly aging them to adulthood. Her personality is common for those who underwent the procedure, though her asexuality is not. She is currently on probation after inexplicably burning down the orphanage she once lived in, leaving her past records lost to time.

Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, After the Storm

Name: Axel Whent
Player: bushwacked
Gender: Male
Age: 21
Species: Rat
Occupation: Computer technician
Appearance: White fur, tall and lanky. Augmented arms (that don't give extra strength) and eyes. Scarring near his eyes and nose.
Weapons: Whatever he can get his hands on, not exactly an expert.
Biography: A 21 year old rat, gifted with computers and other electricals. After sustaining injuries in a terrible car accident 4 years ago, Axel's arms and eyes were replaced by cybernetic technology, and his face remains horribly scarred. His implanted eyes give him a unique view into the workings of any electrical equipment, furthering his abilities and allowing him to hack with ease. Extremely shy, only opens up to close friends, and would sometimes help Soren with his work on augments.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate

Name:Marita Jones
Player: nick22
Age ; 25
Species; Great Dane
Augments none
Bio: a stellar student in school, Marita gradates at the top of her class and majors in computers and technology.. got hooked on the extremely addictive drug biproxytol in her teens years and was forced to become a computer hacker to raise enough money to support her habit. through hard effort and willpower she manages to kick her addiction and live a quiet life in Lanthae
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, Around the Folf

Name: Tony Stracci
Player: Pterano
Gender: Male
Age: 25
Species: Ferret
Occupation: Underboss in the Stracci Crime Family
Appearance: Typical ferret, slightly shorter than average, likes to dress in 1930s garb with a vest, slacks and flat cap.
Weapons: Guns
Biography: Heir to the mighty Stracci Crime Family empire, Tony spends his days conducting family business for his father, training to succeed his father someday, and maintaining the vast collection of his father's vintage automobiles. He has a passion for those cars, and drives them any chance he gets.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, After the Storm

Name: Anne "Nitro" Phoe.
Player: Serris
Age: 43
Species: Shetland Pony
Augmentations (Cybernetic): Implant that allows her to recieve and transmit radio waves as an artificial form of telepathy. The antenna for the implant is disguised as a cosmetic "unicorn horn" implant (surprisingly popular with young Equines). This horn is both sharp enough and firmly implanted enough that she can gore her opponents with it.

Augmentions (Genetic): She carries some artificial genes that allow her to produce much more red blood cells than average and without ill effect so she resists the effects of low oxygen environments and has higher endurance than normal.
Bio: She is an "oil farmer" (a vertical farm that grows genetically engineered algae that produce biosynthesized crude oil). She is very intelligent but few would know that because outside of work, she is almost always high on something. In addition, she has racked up numerous hospital bills due to her rampant drug abuse and subsequent injuries and/or overdoses.
Her drug dependency came about during her college and grad school years. Her perfectionist attitude meant that nothing less than the highest grade was acceptable. In addition, she often took numerous difficult classes (usually going over the permitted credits limit). As a result of this, to make perfect grades, she began using drugs of all sorts ó ranging from nootropics to classic stimulants. No one ever found out but she paid a heavy price ó she became a full blown drug addict. Since her job doesn't pay enough to fuel her drug habit, she has resorted to various legal and illegal ways to make enough creds to buy drugs ó everything from synthesizing and selling drugs, to assorted odd jobs. Currently, her alternative income now consists of stealing augments, parts and other electronic devices and hocking them to fuel her addiction.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate

Name: Lily North
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Species: Human
Age : mid-twenties
Gender: Female
Faction: Fugitive
Occupation: Unknown
Equipment: Tattered gray dress, hiking boots, nothing else
Description: Dark-skinned, with straight black hair and brown eyes.
Personality: At the moment, she is incredibly paranoid and confused. Just trying to survive to the next day.
Backstory: Lily woke up in a field, having no memory of who she is or how she got there. Several close encounters quickly taught her that the police are currently undergoing a massive manhunt for her, and her only goal at the moment is to escape the country. But she doesn't even know where she is or why they want her.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate

Name: Vergil Speicher
Player: Pterano
Gender: Male
Age: Unknown
Species: Mutant gecko
Occupation: None/Ivitz Federation Spec Ops Agent
Appearance: Pure white skin with large, round, orange eyes and two lines of white feathers that stick out of the back of his head with the tips pointing slightly up. He's short, only about four feet in height.
Weapons: Powerful psionic abilities, energy blade.
Biography: Vergil woke up in a test tube deep inside the Purifier base with only vague memories of who he was. He assisted the group in opposing Agent Lupis and the Purifiers, but is desperately seeking to unlock his past. He's found out he used to be former Special Forces in the Federation government, and served in the former war-hero-turned-traitor Rex Sardolemuel's army. He's fascinated by Rex's life, and wants to find out Rex's motivations for turning traitor, as well as who he himself is and why he's mutated. Currently searching for Torment's Cataract.

Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, Around the Folf

Name: Aaron Geasbrecht
Player: Serris
Age: 41
Species: German Shepherd
Augmentations: None
Appearance: A tall and very solidly built German Shepherd. He has brown eyes and tan fur. Almost always dresses in flannel and blue jeans.
Biography: A former construction worker who had his job replaced by an augmented person. Despite protests, he was let go. It was this moment that he felt resentment towards the augmented, feeling that they were taking jobs from honest, hardworking unaugmented beings. What finally drove him over the edge was that his own son had announced that he was going for augmentation surgery. Fuming, he severed all ties with him. Later that night, he read an article about a anti-augmentation protest by "The Purifiers". This eventually leads him into the ranks of this organization.
Appearances: Into the Black, Blanking the Slate

Name: Marcus Hayton
Player: bushwacked
Species: Doberman
Age: 38
Faction: Purifiers
Appearance: 7 feet tall
Bio: Marcus is a member of 'The Purifiers' who hates implant-augmented beings, and thinks they are a disease who should be eliminated. Fast, powerful and deadly with guns.
Appearances: Into the Black, Blanking the Slate

Name: Adrian “Nairda” Kibagami
Player: StarfallRaptor
Age: 22
Species: Red Fox

Augmentations
Appearance: Dark Red (almost black) fur over most of his body. White accents over his hands and chest, as well as the tip of his tail. Slim build, with a shock of vibrant red hair that covers his right eye.
Biography: Adrian worked as a detective for a time, until he lost an arm and part of his eye in an incident that also cost innocent people their lives. For a time, he fell into despair and regret, but now has begun to act as a vigilante, starting to act to defuse situations, many of which involve the Purifiers...
Notes: Eye augment is capable of seeing across multiple spectrums, including IR and Electromagnetic.
Neural Augmentations are able to enhance his reflexes, enabling him to easily dodge or counter nearly anything, though it strains him.
Carries a Hyper-Vibrational sword in a case that resembles an instrument case. Sword design is akin to a massive rapier.
Skilled Free-Runner.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm

Name: Yoshihiro Kojuuro. ((Note: Name follows Japanese order, so Kojuuro is his first name))
Player: StarfallRaptor
Age: 40
Species: Hokkaido Wolf
Gender: Male
Augmentations: Biological alterations, enhancing speed and strength to higher levels than average beings. Armor suit further increases his strength and defensive capability.
Appearance: Grey fur, with significant fading from age, with bright blue eyes. Favors a military-style outfit with significant armor plating, including a large number of straps and extra equipment pockets. Wears a black Kevlar coat over the armor. Black tactical mask on his face, covering it in it's entirety, save for his eyes.
Biography: Kojuuro made a living as a mercenary, taking any contract that would pay until he was assigned to a mercenary firm that was working abroad, in an "anti-terrorist" operation. Assigned to shepherd a unit of conscripted child soldiers, his entire squad save for one boy were wiped out by a set of Strain. After returning home, he abandoned the mercenary lifestyle, drifting aimlessly until joining the Purifiers for a brief time. However, when he was asked to participate in a terror attack on an augment facility, he left the group, and began staunchly opposing them.
Notes: Carries an SL-8 Sniper rifle, a High-Frequency broadsword, and dual pistols.
Appearances: Into the Black, Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, Around the Folf

Name: Patrick Anderson
Player: Rocky
Age: 25
Species: Liger
Augmentations: None yet
Appearance: Patrick is a young Anthro Liger with white fur, black stripes, and a gold a mane on his head and a golden tuft on his tail. He has green eyes and wears a white suit and golden tie.
Personality: Patrick is up beat and outgoing. A Optimistic Anthro who perfers to see the glass half full rather than half empty. An easy guy to get along with, Patrick is also a flirt who is real good with the ladies. A technology Genius ho seeks to improve the world.
Biography: Patrick was adopted by a wealthy, but childless couple after they found him as a baby on their home. Growing up raised by humans in a kind environment made Patrick fairly tolerant, Which is why he openly Opposes and criticizes the Purifiers as anything but pure. Patrick grew up and took over his adopted family's company, Anderson Augmentations, who are one, if not the largest and well respected Makers of Augmentations.
Appearances: Into the Black

Name: Doctor Tsing "Thomas" Jiang
Player: Serris
Age: 44
Species: Human
Augmentations (cybernetic): total ocular replacements that grant him zoom-in capability and ability to see outside normal Human visual range (UV and infrared). Both hands are class 1 augments with fingers capable of changing size and becoming magnetized at will. Processors in the hands eliminate hand tremors.
Augmentations (genetic): More efficient detoxification pathways in liver and kidneys, resulting in heightened resistance to drugs and poisons.
Bio: Born to a wealthy Chinese immigrant family who had a stake in Tsun Wan Industrial Electronics ó a Chinese electronics megacorporation, he had the best education available. He graduated high school and college with the highest honors possible. He eventually earned his Ph.D in neuroscience with his thesis on brain-machine interface for remotely controlling vehicles. He then went to medical school where he earned his Cy.d (Doctor of Cybernetics, licensing him to implant, remove and repair cybernetics).
However, he operated in Palladia and was not authorized to implant class 3 augments. One day, his greed and curiosity overtook him and he agreed to implant a class 3 arm for three million creds. As was the law, he told the augmentee to come back after twenty-four hours and then schedule an appointment.
The next day, he was shocked to find several cops waiting for him at his office. It turns out he had gotten caught by a sting operation to find and shut down illegal implanters of augments. Facing several years in jail, he forfeits his entire operation and license to the Palladia PD in exchange for a jail sentence.
He then flees to Lanthae where he opens a back alley augmentation clinic. Despite it being called a "back alley clinic", it is just as clean and professional as a legit augmentation clinic. However, unlike a legit clinic, he doesn't care if the augmentee is licensed to possess an augment before he implants it ó or for that matter, if the augmentee legitimately obtained the augment.
Appearances: Into the Black

Name: Emile Kibagami
Player: StarfallRaptor
Species: Anthro Fox
Gender: Male
Faction: Mercenaries- Vulture group
Occupation: Salvager
Weapons/Equipment: Kriss Super V/Vector SMG, Folding Shovel, Combat knife, Swords (Japanese), Colt M1911
Transport: Vulture- 18-wheeler truck with multiple M60 Machine Guns mounted on the cab and trailer.
Description: Emile has Light Red-Brown fur with a white underbelly and tail tip, with black shins and forearms. Long Red hair, tied in a loose ponytail with a black ribbon, hanging to about his tail base. Wears a tattered black trench coat over scavenged body armor.
Personality: Opporunistic, with a strong sense of justice and adventure. Able to outhink many people by virtue of his 180 IQ. Bisexual.
Brief History: Emile was born in Japan, to parents from the US and Japan. His family moved back to the US shortly befor the collapse, and both died in the ensuing chaos. He was taken in by the "captain" of the Vulture scavenger group, and has traveled with them since.
Appearances: Scorched Earth, Into the Black, Racing the Storm

Name: Lena Kibagami- Alias: Lena Kobayashi, Junko Misami
Player: StarfallRaptor
Species: Anthro Fox
Gender: Female
Faction: Mercenaries- Vulture group
Occupation: Salvager/Espionage

Weapons: Kodachi Knives, H&K USP, Folding Shovel, Heirloom Katana
Transport: Vulture-Same as Emile
Description: Lena has snow-White fur, with black markings on her arms and tail. Ankle-length pale blue hair, kept in a tight, ornate braid. Wears a low-cut top, tight hotpants, and a Blue trenchcoat.
Presonality: Flirty, seemingly a bit of an airhead, she's every bit as intelligent as Emile. In an open, incestuous relationship with her Brother. Bisexual.
Brief History: Lena was born a few years before Emile, and had a similar life to him, until they were separated by the Fall. The two were separated, and she had to make her living on her own, until the Vultures found her.
Appearances: Scorched Earth, Into the Black, Racing the Storm

Name: Warren Joseph
Player: Alien Ant Farm
Age: 40
Species: Human
Occupation: Law Enforcement; Chief of Police
Background: Overworked, overstressed, short-tempered Chief of the Palladia Police Department, and currently a candidate for Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police Service that oversees all urban regions of the greater city area. The rise in Purifier hostility and increasing tensions between them and the enhanced have caused the Chief to orient police focus to handling issues concerning the aforementioned.
Appearances: none

Name: Doctor Dorothea "Dolly" Wilmut
Player: Serris
Species: Sheep
Bio: Dolly was one of the pioneers for gene therapy. Her work with liposomes, retroviruses and gene targeting at the Watson-Crick Institute paved the way for safe and effective gene therapy. Going to the next step of her research, she moved into gene enhancements and cosmetics ó ranging from simple things like unnatural eye, hair or skin color to things such as enhanced strength and stamina.
Unfortunately, her latest work attracted numerous opponents. Some of whom sent her death threats and vandalized her lab. Despite this, she never backed down ó indeed, she became even more outspoken, sometimesbordering on polemic. Unfortunately, her "rock star" attitude earned her even more detractors, some of whom were themselves scientists, claiming that she was acting in an unprofessional and inappropriate manner.
On the plus side, she also had many supporters.
Sadly, her outspoken and aggressive nature and "rock star" attitude cost her life one dreary morning. During a rally advocating enhancement, an anti-enhancement zealot shot her. The shooter was quickly apprehended but the crowd was so enraged they killed the shooter before the police could arrive. By the time the police arrived, both Dolly and her assassin had died from their injuries.
The aftermath was quite brutal. After a week of mourning, bursts of violence broke out all across the nation as Dolly's supporters attacked anti-enhancement activists, even killing a few.
In the present time, gene enhancements have given way mostly to cybernetics due to their higher liklihood of side effects ó and the fact that cybernetics allows for enhancements not possible by nature, such as radio wave based telepathy. Most gene enhancements now are cosmetic in nature but there are a few who favor the genetic modifications.
Appearances: none

Racing the Storm* introductions

Name: Triste Acyle
Player: bushwacked

Gender: Female
Species: Spider Gecko
Occupation: Agent for the Ivitz Federation
Appearance: Slender. Light green skin, with a red, diagonal stripe across her face. Long, slightly spindly limbs.
Abilities: Extremely proficient in combat. Has very mild kinetic abilities, but using them for even a short amount of time exhausts her.
Bio: Trained as a soldier in the Ivitz Federation from a young age, Triste was brought up to believe that the Federation came first, always. Now one of the top agents, she's been sent to out into Corona to track down a potential asset. With the threat of Kalis looming, she knows she can't fail.
Appearances: Racing the Storm

Name: Flora (https://i.imgur.com/wyZW67y.png)
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Gender: Intersex
Age: 19
Species: Folf
Occupation: Emilena's gang
Bio: Flora has a female body with a male reproductive system, genetics that are part-wolf and part-fox, and nobody is sure whether she dyes her fur fuchsia or if it's somehow an artifically-induced phenotype. All anyone does know is that she's a bit off-kilter, and an incredibly good driver, her primary role on the team. She also has a transparent crush on Emilena, who puts up with it only because Flora is, actually, the best driver Emilena has ever met.
Appearances: Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate, Around the Folf

Name: Muyee "Marion" Wu
Player: Serris
Age: 38
Species: Human
Augmentations (Cybernetic): cermet lacing on bones rendering them nearly unbreakable, class 3 augments for both arms (left arm: modular weapons hardpoint; right arm: plasma cutter hidden inside forearm; both limbs are superhumanly strong), class 2 augments for both legs (superhumanly strong, can reconfigure into a "hoof" for fast running, retractable grappling claws/cutting spurs on the feet)
Augmentions (Genetic): None
Bio: Her parents (both of them former military) immigrated from Shanghai when she was child. She was an average student through high school and college. She eventually earned a Master's degree in mechanical engineering and she briefly worked at Shockley Electronic Works, a small augment repair shop in the edges of Corona. One day, while she was on her lunch break, some unknown suspects bombed the store, killing all six employees inside. The damage was so severe that the owner could not afford to replace all the losses. Desperate, she worked several menial labor jobs ranging from janitor to stevedore at the docks.
One night, while unloading cargo at the Corona Port, one of her co-workers (who was slightly tipsy at the time) begins flirting with her. Refusing to take "no" for an answer ó and fueled by a few too many beers ó the worker eventually gets quite aggressive. In desperation, she takes a swipe at him. Unfortunately for the man, she is wearing a powered exoskeleton intended for moving very heavy loads. The blow connects with his head, crushing his skull and instantly killing him. Horrifed, she calls the police.
Even though it is ruled a justified act of self-defense and she is cleared of all charges, she loses her job at dockyards (no one wants to work with someone who just killed their coworker). She eventually finds a job teaching a vocational training program at a local college.
After a few years as an instructor, she is approached by some recruiters from Zaloga Cybernetics and offered a job as a quality control technician at one of their factories. Attracted by the job, she agrees to an interview.
She gets the job and is quite happy with it. A year into her job, a tragedy occurs. Unbeknownst to her, she attracted the attention of Serami Heavy Industries ó in a bad way. A small strike team is dispatched to take her out and they plant a bomb in her car.

When she starts up the motor, the bomb detonates. She manages to survive but loses all her limbs, the majority of her bones are broken and she is severely disfigured by the burns. She opts for cybernetic limbs instead of vat grown limbs from her own cells.
At the hospital, surgeons and cyberneticists quickly work to repair the damage sustained from the bomb. Her bones are repaired and strengthened via an injection of nanomachines. Her limbs are replaced with basic class 1 augments. Cosmetic surgery manages to repair the most severe burns but it is not perfect; despite being in her early 30s, she looks like someone in their mid 50s.
After several months of physical rehabilitation, she returns to work as a show of defiance.
Later, her boss tells her about a lucrative promotion in the company ó corporate security trooper. The pay is nearly quadruple that of her current job. Enticed, she accepts.
The next year involves licensing for class 3 and class 2 augments, classroom time, training and live fire exercises. At the end of it, she becomes a member of Zaloga Cybernetics's Company Security Squad.
As of now, she has served with the squad for three years.
Appearances: Racing the Storm, Blanking the Slate

Name: Rio Chato
Player: bushwacked
Gender: Male
Age: 13
Species: Human
Occupation: Drug runner
Appearance: Thin, a little on the short side for his age. Black hair, tanned skin.
Bio: After running away from his abusive parents, Rio spent his time growing up on the streets of the slums. With his natural agility and skill in free running, at the age of 10 Rio was noticed and offered work by a local drug lord who called himself Slate. In exchange for food and shelter, he would transport Slate's product across the slums, using his outward appearance as a natural disguise to evade detection.

Name: Foley Hudson
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Gender: Male
Age: 34
Species: Human
Occupation: Emilena's gang
Appearance: Overweight, usually unshaven, but decently dressed. Has a number of augments such as a headset port on his temple and a memory chip embedded behind one ear.
Bio: Foley is well aware that most other hackers his age have moved on to professional white collar jobs or qualified for major criminal rings, and he doesn't take kindly to people pointing this out. He just suffers from crippling laziness and can't focus on much more than the sort of low-brow drug-running that Emilena's gang specializes in.

Name: Kaien
Player: yeswonderful
Species: human female
Appearance: In her mid to late 30s. Tall and slender with skin the color of roasted coffee beans. Quick, dark eyes and close-cropped black hair. Strong build. Augmented left hand, arm, shoulder, and left side of pectoral girdle. Class of augmentation currently unknown--will be revealed as the RP progresses.
Background: Unknown at the present time. Will be revealed as the RP progresses.
Appearances: Racing the Storm

Name: Ruozheng "Rory" Zhao
Player: Serris
Age: 31
Species: Human
Augmentations (Cybernetic): Class 3 augments for both arms. Right arm contains built-in 5.56 mm automatic rifle, left arm contains short vibroblade capable of shearing through steel and concrete. Both arms possess strength and flexibility in excess of Human baseline. Skeleton is not reinforced so arms cannot be used to full capacity in lifting or striking.
Augmentions (Genetic): None
Bio: His parents were "Mountain Masters" (Dragon Head, i.e. crime boss) of the Bak Long (White Dragon) Triadsóa powerful Chinese criminal syndicate in the city of Lanthae. His parents wanted him to have a normal life ó and get a college education he could further use to help the White Dragon Triads. He never had much of a taste for school and spent his youth cutting class, fighting, commmitting petty crimes and doing ó or dealing ó drugs. He is eventually expelled from school after attacking another student. Drifting between menial labor jobs, he is eventually sentenced to prison for fatally shooting someone in a street fight. Even though he is guilty, his parents bribe the judge to rule it a justified self-defense shooting.
He is released and his parents eventually decided to formally induct him into the White Dragon Triads as a 49er (rank-and-file member). He got augmented after a group of Augment street thugs beat him into a coma in the process of robbing him as he felt it would be necessary to ensure his safety.
He rises through the ranks and eventually becomes a "Red Pole" (enforcer) where he specializes in black marketeering ó specifically in drugs and counterfeit electronics.
Appearances: Racing the Storm

Name: Hal Bitparte
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Gender: Male
Age: 25
Species: Duck
Occupation: Emilena's gang
Appearance: Thin, a little on the short side for his age. Black hair, tanned skin.
Bio: Who cares, I'm killing him first chance I get. He's the contacts guy, not good at anything himself but he knows a guy who knows a guy.
Appearances: Racing the Storm

Name: Hania Enapay
Player: Belmont2500
Species: Jaguar
Gender: Male
Age: 19
Eye Color: Brown
Orientation: Bisexual
Religion: Pagan
Normal Outfit: Cloth tunic, pants and cape(which bears the emblem of his tribe.)
Personality: He is often very forlorn and defiant but occasionally can be friendly and easygoing at times. He is very reverent of Nature and a formidable hunter and warrior. He shows a good amount of respect to friend and foe alike.
Appearances: Racing the Storm

Name: Sergeant Karl Nairda
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato

Gender: Male
Age: 34
Species: Clydesdale
Faction: Scorched Earth
Occupation: Gunner
Appearance: Brown fur with white spots, on the short side with larger hooves than average
Weapons: Shotgun, Nailgun, Combat Knife, Assault Rifle, Revolver
Biography: Karl Nairda traveled with the Royal Expeditionary Force during the Scorched Earth war of the 2030s. He never was particularly notable and most posts didn't notice when he was restationed elsewhere. He often went awol to freelance with Emile and Lena Kibagami, two mercenaries, until he was dishonorably discharged and joined the Vulture Scavenger Corps full-time. Sadly during a raid on a Red Merchant supply ship he was shot by anti-aircraft turrets which shredded his body instantly. He is hardly remembered by anyone at all, with no family.

Species: Human
Augmentations(cybernetic): Air Tank, Digestive Expansion, Gecko Hands, Grip Feet, Hardened Bones, Hydraulic Limbs, Leg Enhancement, Nanobots, Reflex Enhancers, Control Rig, Datajack, Dermal Armor,cyberneticaly enhanced eyes capable of infrared and night vision, Tracheal Filter
Augmentations(bio): Poisionous, Sensory Enhancement, Tail, Shocking, Sleep Regulator, Flexible Joints
Appearance: medium build 5'9, Blue eyes, brown hair, tan skin, dresses in a trench coat with tail folded up when not on mission. when on mission heavily modified corporate assassin attire.
Bio, extra details: Raised by the head of Werner Industries Günter Stellwagen as an assassin and heavily augmented for the role. Was taught by a fellow WI assassin named 'Mr. Trigger' made his first kill at the age 15. He defended the company and it's head against many rival corporations gained the nickname 'Awe' after destroying a rival corprations oil rig that was the base for their assassins. After the several dozen more missions he was let go to his own devices and went freelance at 34. On first hearing of the "The Purifiers" he thought little of them.
After the destruction of Lanthae however he eagerly awaited the calls to take them down reciving several. While normally having a minimum twenty thousand credit fee this work he'll do for free
Appearances: Blanking the Slate

Name: Uziel Bautista

Player: Serris
Age: 24
Species: Human
Augmentations (Cybernetic): Left arm is a class 2 augment that contains an attachment point for various tools. It also contains shock absorbers and vibration dampeners to lessen the discomfort felt when striking with the arm or using the attached tools. The fingers can be magnetized at will to pick up and hold magnetic objects. Computers inside the arm also compensate for involuntary hand and arm movements for maximum precision when using tools.
Augmentions (Genetic): None
Appearance: An unremarkable looking Mexican man about 5′4″ with brown eyes, black hair and tanned skin. His left arm is a sturdy but rather beat-up prosthesis with numerous scuffs and dings. He usually wears a tan jumpsuit with numerous pockets and a tool belt.
Bio: Born to a family of Mexican immigrants, Uziel was an exceptional student in high school and college. He graduated with a degree in agriculture and soon found a job as a farmhand at Sky Farms, one of the many hydroponic farms in Seryet City. He proved himself to be a hard worker and coupled with his degree in agriculture, he soon became the foreman of the farm. Unfortunately, he attracted the ire of one of the workers, who happened to be an ex-convict Bison. Angry that Uziel had been promoted over him, he plotted to kill him and make it look like an accident.
One day while Uziel was repairing the algae press, the machine suddenly turned itself on, crushing his left arm. When they finally freed him and took him to the hospital, his arm was so badly damaged they had no choice but to amputate. Later, he learns that someone had intentionally turned the machine on, despite the switch being locked in the “off” position.
At first, he was fitted with an industrial-duty class 1 prosthetic arm but he decided to exploit the potential uses of his artificial limb and applied for a class 2 prosthesis license.
Despite the wages he earns, he is barely above the poverty line due to the legal fees he sustained suing the equipment’s manufacturer.
Appearances: Blanking the Slate

Name: Sakata Kintoki
Player: StarfallRaptor
Age: 21 (looks young for his age)
Species: Fox
Augmentations: none
Appearance: Wears a heavy exoframe with pneumatic shock dampeners and helmet with LED visor. Underneath it, he’s a scrawny gray-furred and yellow-eyed fox with unruly hair and a bushy tail.
Bio, extra details: Sakata was always fascinated with augmentations, but grew up in a household with staunchly anti-Augment sentiments. Knowing his parents would never allow him to work in cybernetics, and that he wasn’t smart or rich enough for school, Kintoki works under the table for Coxon as contracted muscle. Most of his spare funds go into upgrading his exoframe, though he’s always wished he could work up the nerve to openly defy his family and purchase some real augments for himself.
Appearances: Blanking the Slate

Name: Doctor Andrew “Andy” Schatten
Player: Serris
Age: 34
Species: Rhesus Macaque
Augmentations (Cybernetic): None
Augmentations (Genetic): Expresses GFP; as a result, his fur will fluoresce light green if exposed to UV light. Modified sodium pumps in neurons render him immune to sodium agonists or antagonists such as tetrodotoxin. Saliva is toxic, causing significant irritation if it gets into a wound, temporary or even permanent blindness if it gets into the eyes (from a Spitting Cobra).
Appearance: A Rhesus Macaque of average build (5′4″) with tan fur. His face has a few scars on it, including a rather long curved scar that stretches from his right ear to his neck. A freeze brand on his left bicep depicts the DNA double helix.

Bio: Born to genetic engineers of some fame, he expressed an interest in molecular biology since he was a boy. His parents encouraged this, hoping to continue their legacy. In high school, he proved to be an excellent, albeit troubled, ill-tempered and rather vain student. In contrast to his high grades and academic honors, he had significant disciplinary problems. Mostly fighting and shoplifting. He did grow out of this and later earned a Bachelor's degree followed by a Masters and a Ph.D.
He was soon hired by the Seryetian biotechnology company Drosha Genetics as a gene mods scientist ó at the relatively young age of 24. Most of the gene mods that he researched were supposedly for medical purposes only as Seryet City bans non-medical gene mods. One night, while overhears some young Seryetians lamenting that the largest biotech company in Seryet City doesn't do cosmetic gene mods.
Realizing that this could a very profitable side business, he opens up a black market in his lab specializing in various non-medical gene mods. Unfortunately, it did not last. He had found a way to target a viral vector containing the GFP protein to specific cell type and make it temporary. Seeing as he could not go through the company's ethics committee, he decides to test it on himself. As it is a success, he rather foolishly decides to publish his paper in the journal Genetic Modification, claiming that the experimental "subjects" were "Rhesus Macaque Lab Body Model III ". Since there is no such model of lab body, Doctor Schatten was very quickly found to have grossly violated the internal code of ethics of Drosha Genetics, several laws in Seryet City and the code of professional conduct for the Society of Genetic Engineers (SGE).
As a result, he is stripped of his SGE membership, fired from Drosha Genetics, permanently banned from ever working in the field of biological sciences, fined several million creds and sentenced to seven years in prison
Since he now has a rather extensive (albeit nonviolent criminal record), it is very difficult for him to get employment. He drifted between several jobs ranging from janitor to longshoreman to oil farmer. He even did a stint in a black market cosmetic gene mod company before they were busted.
Currently, he lives with Soren Almaya and Uziel Bautista. He works at a scrapyard at the edge of Seryet City as a "junkyard dog".
Appearances: Blanking the Slate

Name: Nigel Bailey
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Age: 30
Species: Monitor Lizard
Augmentations: Enhanced memory capacity, several cosmetic surgeries to increase attractiveness Appearance: A solid dark gold Australian Monitor Lizard with amber colored eyes. Usually wearing silver-rimmed glasses and metrosexual suits.
Bio, extra details: Nigel's father was a distinguished scientist who fully expected his son to follow in his footsteps. However, Nigel couldn't find himself interested enough to dedicate his youth to studying, and so he dropped out of high school and used his triple-digit IQ to successfully sweet-talk his way into salesmanship. Now he works as DJ Xyler's manager and sees to it that his current moneymaker is bringing in enough commission that he can feel like he made the right career choice.
Appearances: Blanking the Slate

Name: Ashley Kinc
Player: LettuceBacon&Tomato
Age: 35
Species: Andalusian Horse
Augmentations: None.
Appearance: White-furred with black eyes. Muscular but short for his species.
Bio, extra details: Ashley was the oldest and smartest of three children, and for that reason he was the first to go to college with the well-wishes of his parents and their ranch hands. Two years later, a drought drove the family farm out of business and prevented his siblings from joining him, but Ashley was making enough capital as a day trader to complete his education and even afford a virtual reality treadmill for exercise and pleasure. His acquaintances don't know him very well, but most people agree he's a nice enough guy. Ashley's nothing if not self-sufficient.

Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on May 14, 2019, 03:52:59 AM

I'll soon be introducing this secondary antagonist into Pterano's new RP, After the Storm (http://www.gangoffive.net/index.php?topic=16315.0).

Name: Storch
Age: 50 (equivalent to 70 in human age)
Species: Anthro Bat
Appearance: A slim, grey-haired, black furred and silver-eyed bat. He stands at 5'9'' and has quite a wing span, allowing him to fly very fast and silently. His wings can fold against his arms and sides in combat. He wears black combat jeans, a sideless assault vest and knee pads.
Specializations: Long range weapons. He has a Bushmaster ACR with the 18.5 inch sniper barrel attachment. For close-quarters combat he carries an M6A2 PSD. Both of his rifles use the same 6.8 MM round giving them good range and firepower. He also carries EMP grenades to equalize the playing field when fighting Augmented targets.
Augments: N/A
Personality: Storch is a cool and calm bat. He always reacts calmly to everything going around him and has a sniper's patience. He was in the military most of his life, and turned to bounty-hunting when he grew too old to serve. For Storch, urban combat is just a way of life, and he feels most at home crouched in a dark corner with his eye pressed against a scope.

Also, figured I'd grab the character sheets from Scorched Earth too, just because it was basically grandfathered in as a prequel RP to the series:

Name: Conrad Verner
Player: StarfallRaptor
Species: Anthro Wolf
Gender: Male
Faction: Terrorists- Sword of Damocles
Occupation: Terrorist Group Leader
Weapons: Glock 18, Colt M1911, Saber
Appearance: Grey fur, Massive burn scar over the right side of his face. Black outfit with red trim, matching trenchcoat.
Personality: Ruthless, cold, calculating, and obsessed with causing a global war.
Brief History: Dishonorable Discharge, US miltary.
Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Ronald Emmerson
Player: Myrkin
Species: Human
Gender: Male
Faction: Soldiers - Boston Guardians
Occupation: Group leader
Weapons/Equipment: M4 carbine, Combat knife, Beretta 92
Transport: Hummvee
Description: Tall, bearded, black hair. He wears tattered uniform of member of the National Guard.

Personality: Calm, cool-headed - these are the best words to describe him. He doesn't break under pressure.
Brief History: Ronald was born and raised by his parents in Boston. At the age of 18 he joined the National Guard and thanks to his calm demeanour and good thinking he had been promoted to the rank of captain. After the Fall, unit commanded by him and several others attempted to establish order in Boston, but they were eventually either destroyed or forced to withdraw by armed warlords. Emmerson led his unit out of the hot zone, escorting some civilians and collecting whatever resources they could find.
Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Cole Winters
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Human
Gender: Male
Faction: Mercenaries - Gun Hawks
Occupation: Tank commander
Weapons/Equipment: H&K USP handgun, modernized Siminov SKS rifle, flak jacket
Transport: M60A3 Patton main battle tank w/ 105mm gun, two M60 machine guns, M9 bulldozer kit & explosive reactive armor, some of which was spent in combat
Description: Caucasian, dark hair, dark eyes, 5'10", light build, desert camouflage clothing
Personality: No-nonsense, practical, cunning
Brief History: Cole was a trainer for tank crews in Fort Hood when it was attacked. No modern tanks survived in the first half of the invasion, but a surplus of working Pattons helped the soldiers repel the threat. As the highest and most experienced officer of the group, he becomes the commander of the group and they set out to help out the American citizens in their fight for survival.
Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Sky
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Human
Gender: Male
Faction: Mercenaries
Occupation: Traveler
Weapons/Equipment: Remington 870 shotgun, Uzi sub-machine gun, wakizashi sword
Transport: Modified 1969 Pontiac GTO w/ turbo kit, armor plating, off-road suspension, & twin M60 machine guns mounted on the front
Description: Caucasian, blond highlighted hair, dark green eyes, 5'9", light build Personality: Calm, common-sense, does not talk about his past
Brief History: Sky once had a another name, until his entire family and home have been destroyed by a volcanic eruption in northern California. Since then, he travels with a new name and his only companion, Runt.
Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Runt
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Feral Wolf-mix
Gender: Male
Faction: Mercenaries
Occupation: Traveler
Weapons/Equipment: None
Transport: Same as Skye
Description: Gray fur w/ lighter underside, gold eyes
Personality: Cocky, wry-sense of humor, loves to stick his head out the window Brief History: Runt was the runt of his litter when he was found a home with Skye and his family. Now he is all that is left of Skye's past, and his humanity.

Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Ken Winchester
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Scottish Deerhound
Gender: Male
Faction: Soldiers - Royal Expeditionary Force
Occupation: Tank commander; colonel
Weapons/Equipment: Browning L9A1 handgun, L85A2 bullpup rifle, Osprey body armor
Transport: Challenger 2 main battle tank w/ 120mm gun & 2x 7.62mm machine guns
Description: Dull silver fur, light brown eyes, 6', medium build, Royal Marines green uniform, beret
Personality: Practical, sarcastic
Brief History: Sent to command the Royal Marines in the United States, he was the only one of his command staff to survive the storm. Now he sits in the commander's seat as he leads his forces to their original mission.
Appearances: Scorched Earth

Name: Ogden "Oggie" Ward
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Anthro Belgian Shepherd
Gender: Male
Faction: Refugees - Well Town
Occupation: Tank commander and mechanic
Weapons/Equipment: Colt New Army revolver
Transport: M4A1 Sherman medium tank w/ 75mm gun & M1919 machine gun
Description: Dark brown brindle fur, brown eyes, 5'7", light build Personality: Not the brightest, except with anything mechanical, likes Kat
Brief History: Oggie was a farm boy in the Midwest United States, when everything went to hell. His home town had to seize some aging tanks from a history museum and bring them to working order. Although they never had to fight in the initial war, the home they knew was destroyed. Being the most talented when it came to tanks, he was dubbed the unofficial team leader of the new Well Town Village Guard.
Appearances: none

Name: Avery
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Badger
Gender: Male
Faction: Refugees - Well Town
Occupation: Reverend Weapons/Equipment: Bible
Transport: School bus
Description: Brown fur w/ white head & black stripes, brown eyes, 5'8", stout build Personality: Optimistic, hopeful
Brief History: Avery had been the pastor of the town before the chaos. He keeps the spirits of Well Town alive as they struggle to survive.
Appearances: none

Name: Kat Koney
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Coonhound-mix

Gender: Female
Faction: Refugees - Well Town
Occupation: Bartender
Description: Survivor of a formerly rich family. Maxwell Ciedrick (a male Whippet) and Oggie compete for her affections.
Appearances: After the Storm

Name: The Black Prophet
Player: Mirumoto_Kenjiro
Species: Human
Gender: Male
Faction: Terrorists - Black Moon Army
Occupation: Recruiter, tactician
Weapons/Equipment: AK47 combat rifle
Transport: Jeep
Description: Middle Eastern, dark eyes, gray hair & beard, 6', thin build, robes
Personality: Lunatic, ruthless, self-righteous
Brief History: It unsure if the Black Prophet was placed in the US as a recruiter before the chaos began, but he gained the initiative to take control of a makeshift army and lead a conquest of the war-torn land.
Appearances: none

Title: Scorched Earth
Post by: Mirumoto_Kenjiro on January 31, 2011, 12:14:15 AM

August, 2030 A.D.

The world, attempting to settle from the chaos of global war and disaster, bears vicious scars to make the land unrecognizable from the time only 10 years back. Now the survivors must endure and carve out their future in the new world...

(New York/Canada Border)

Heading south from the fallen country of Canada, seven tanks cruised across the landscape. Their mission was a disaster from the very beginning. They started out as an armored regiment of Royal Army & Marines, and set out across the sea to assist the United States in their war against Mexico. But what met them first were hurricane storms that destroyed all but one ship carrying a mere handful of tanks...

When they landed on the shores of Massachusetts, they drove immediately to the territory of Quebec for help. Instead, they were greeted by hostile separatist warlords, and barely escaped in one piece. They never faced armor, save for one Leopard 2 tank that they had to combine their shots to destroy. Otherwise, they attempted to save their 120mm shells and resort to their machine guns to fight off the opposition...

With no help in the war-torn land, the Royal Expeditionary Force retreated back into the United States for their original mission...to find the President in hiding...

(Central New Mexico)

Across the barren flat lands of the desert, a dark blue Pontiac GTO races west. A few minutes behind it, a dozen vehicles, cars, motorcycles, & sand rails, speed to catch up with the lead car...

((Colorado Area))
Inside a large, crudely-armored 18-wheeler truck, a pair of young foxes sat, listening to a J-rock song on a scavenged stereo, bobbing their heads to the music. The younger, Emile, looked up at his older sister, Lena,
"Hey, Lena. Where're we going again? Hard to keep track anymore."
He joked, running a hand through his long red headfur. Lena looked up at her brother, grinning a little.
"We're heading up north, Emile. Rumor's been going around that some pretty heavy stuff's going on up there. Probably going to be quite a few people needing help, and even more tasty salvage."
She murred, licking her lips seductively and looking at her brother.
"Again, sis? We've done it four times since we got into the state! You really need to get your libido under control."
He said, looking at the floor, a blush coloring his already-red fur. Lena smiled, leaning in closer, flaunting her ample bust at him.
"C'mon, bro. I have urges, just like you do..."
She said, placing her hand on his lap. Emile blushed more, looking around to make sure that that none of the other members of the crew were looking before nodding at his sister. In moments, they were all over each other as the truck rolled on towards it's destination...

((Undisclosed location, northern Canada))
A black-coated wolf paced the empty halls of the underground base.
"Heh...Soon, the world will be eclipsed in the glory of total warfare. And then, we, the Sword of Damocles will make our final move."
He laughed to himself...

(Oklahoma)

Heading east towards Colorado, a group of tanks & military vehicles rolled calmly across the landscape. With most of refugees in Texas heading north away from the fierce fighting between warlords, the Gun Hawks decided to seek out confirmation to rumors of a terrorist army, not cell, hiding in the States. The only information from a young man that escaped from the murderous group that took his family & friends as slaves...

(New Mexico)

Those riding in the pursuing vehicles hanged themselves out to fire upon the GTO, most were misses, but a few would ricochet off the armored plating.

In the passenger's seat, a wolf curled up in a ball. "Explain to me again WHY you just instigated them to chase us?!"

The human driver remained calm as he answered. "I was just making sure if they were the ones..."

"Yeah, but kicking dirt on them while they were taking a leak?! What ever happened to asking politely!?"

(Somewhere west of Boston, Massachussets)

A column of military vehicles was traveling through deserted and ruined areas outside of Boston. This group was one of the few units that had managed to get out from Boston, which was taken over by several warlords from arourd the state who decided to introduce their own order in the city. Due to being vastly outnumbered and outgunned, units of National Guard were forced to retreat from Boston and try to regroup their forces... somewhere.

(New York, just west of Massachusetts)

It did not take the Royal Expeditionary Force long to cross the border into Massachusetts. Since then, the lead tank, belonging to Colonel Ken Winchester, had mounted two flags on the turret. One was the only British flag that survived the fateful trip across the sea, the other an American flag, the only one they found intact in New York City.

Ken looked from his cupola and grabbed his radio. "Sergeant. Any response from Morris code yet?"

"Negative yet, sir," a reply came from one of the other tanks.

"Keep on it, then. Any American government or military by now would be using this code. They can't all be dead!"

"Aye, Colonel!"

(New Mexico)

The lone car weaved around the pursuers across the desert, using bursts from his front-mounted machine guns to blast away his attackers, especially those he caught wielding heavier firepower...

(Southeast Colorado)

A chorus of loud gunfire echoed from the 105mm guns of a small group of M60 Pattons, their targets being an ambush party of raiders manning a pair of older age Patton tanks among their other vehicles. Without care and added armor that was on the newer versions, the M46 tanks were no match, being ripped apart by the heavier guns, and other vehicles joining their fate in the counter-attack. This alone sent the survivors running for cover, and then away from their failed ambush.

Cole Winters, team commander, stepped out of his tank when a Humvee pulled up, and a Rattlesnake officer slithered out.

"Sir!" the Snake said. "We're getting a message in Morris code!"

Cole headed for the radio to listen, then shook his head in disappointment. "No good for us here," he replied. "Whoever it is, they're calling all the way from the east coast."

"Is it still any of our people, sir?"

"It's a British group. They must have come over when we were attacked."

"To help or conquer?"

"They said they're helping. We won't know for sure with them being thousands of miles away. Now, let's regroup and head north. We need to seek out a terrorist army that may be hiding somewhere up there."

"Yes sir!"

(Somewhere west of Boston, Massachussets)

The military column of vehicles stopped at deserted gas station. Soldiers needed a break, while officers had to discuss about such pressing matters as: where were other units who survived a disaster that was battle for Boston and how to get them all to one place?

Ronald together with his officers and team leaders looked at the map of state of Massachussets and it's neighborhood.

"Assuming that no joker replaced road signs, we should be here," captain pointed at some place on the map "Right between Newton and Framingham."

"Wasn't Wilson's tank group supposed to come through Framingham and join us?" one of sergeants asked. Emmerson just shook his head.

"It seems, from what we heard from Wilson on the radio, that this town and nearby parts of I-90 are an absolute warzone now. Wilson will try to go round Framingham, but that will take some time. Now, we haven't have any signs from other units that got out of Boston since a few hours ago, so..." he was interrupted by sergeant Miller, who was operating long range radio.

"Sir! We've just got a message from Royal Expeditionary Force!"

"Royal Expeditionary Force? What British military does in USA?" Ronald asked.

"Maybe they decided it's a payback time for that little tea party we threw for them a few hundres year ago?" one of officers joked.

"Let's hope not," Emmerson said, before heading to the radio himself. He listened for a minute, then ordered Miller to respond to that call.

"Sir!" radioed one of the tank commanders. "We're getting a response!"

"All stop!" Winchester ordered. "Take defensive positions!"

The tanks made a circle of themselves, their guns pointing every which way. They don't want surprises while they take their phone call."

"Tell them to have their radio to this frequency so we can talk."

"Aye, sir!"

The Morris code message was sent...

"Sir, they want to talk with you. I've already changed frequency," sergeant Miller said, giving captain radio microphone. Ronald nodded and spoke to the mike.

"This is captain Ronald Emmerson of Boston Guardians, US military. Who am I speaking to?"

"This is colonel Kenneth Winchester of the Royal Expeditionary Force, Royal Marines. We've been sent by request of Good King William to assist the United States in repelling the invasion. But the majority of our force was lost at sea, and all we have left is a small unit. We hope to merge with US forces and continue to help bring peace to the States, as in our primary mission."

It said...

After a pause, one of the tank commanders looked at his commander. "What do you think, sir? Should we trust them?"

"I'd take a chance with the Guards," Winchester replied, "but certainly not this Vulture bloke. Let's go to Boston and see if we can meet up with the Guards. Let's keep the line open but keep silent for now." He changes to the tank radio. "All hands make ready! We move east!"

The Challengers got moving together back into a column and soon started to cross the border into Massachusetts...

(New Mexico)

The lone driver made short work of the raiders, bring their numbers down to two vehicles, which shot off away from the battle, leaving their dead behind.

Stopping near the wreckage, Sky stepped out of the car with his shotgun and checked to see if his pursuers were dead, then proceeded to removing gas cans from the other vehicles.

Runt stuck his head out of the window. "You know we could've made it to Flagstaff if you hadn't have done that!"

"We heard that. You gotta forgive the captain. I think he likes being all ah dramatic like that. I'm Emile. My girlish giggle sister and I will join you, if nobody objects. We have our own equipment, and our talents could come in very handy. You'll need all the help you can get, I think."
Emile said, panting a little as he spoke...

Soon after, Winchester's sergeant called in. "Sir! We got chatter on the local police banner!"

"Let's hear it!" Winchester radioed back.

"Sounds like a war party leaving Boston, and they sound like they got tanks!"

"Where to?"

"Worcester by the sound of it, sir!"

"Alrighty then! We're up for a fight with tanks now! Let's make our way to Springfield as fast as we can and try to meet up with the Americans before this war party finds them out!" Winchester flipped the switch to long range radio. "Boston Guardians, this is the Royal Expeditionary Force! We just got word someone in Boston just sent out a party with tanks, perhaps to Worcester! If you're there, stay on your toes! We're on our way to Springfield in about 1 hour! Copy?"

Soren Almaya awoke to the bleating of his home security system. Quickly throwing on his glasses, he hastily punched in a combination to enter his environmentally sealed and fireproof control center. Taking a seat in the main console, he gasped.

The bright red letters on the screen told him all he needed to know.

Quote

> Threat: Fire
> Location: Home workshop

Swearing profusely, he immediately ordered the CO2 fire suppression system to activate. The next words caused his heart to sink:

To make matters worse, another warning came up:

> WARNING! POSSIBLE INTRUDERS APPROACHING HOUSEHOLD!

"Oh no," Soren muttered. Thinking quickly, he unlocked his gun safe and grabbed his Remington 870 shotgun. Despite the fact that compact laser weapons and magnetic accelerators existed and were commonplace, standard firearms were still very popular -- despite modern armor rendering them mostly obsolete. This was mainly due to their relatively low cost, low maintenance and sheer reliability.

He switched on the external cameras and saw a group of figures running away from his house. He also saw red and blue lights in the distance heading to his house.

He'd wait until they arrived before he got out of the safe room.

"Captain, this is Officer Echo," Emilena reported from the lead squad car, without a trace of emotion in her voice. "Approaching the suspected augment's living quarters."

"I know; I'm watching online news," the Captain snapped back over his walkie-talkie, from his sealed penthouse in another country. "Why the hell can't you ever keep stings quiet?"

"Augments don't deserve anonymity," she said matter-of-factly, "the world deserves to know of their treachery. Will be using lethal force."

"At least make reasonably sure it's an Augment!" He sighed. "With legally verifiable evidence!"

out in the street, m a great dane named marita jones was walking diown the stret, taping away at her laptop, as a police car raced by, lights flashing ' wonder what perp they're going after ' Marita said to herself probably an augment of some kind. ' marita had little love augments, she prefered creatures to be natural, not something that looked like it came out of some old movie about a mad scientist.

The police cars as well as several firetrucks pulled into his driveway. The firefighters got out and began dousing the blaze, fueled by the chemicals he used in his work.

Soren saw them approaching via the cameras. Making sure he appeared to be unarmed, he exited his safe room and made his way to the entrance of his house where he waited for the first available officer.

Officer Echo marched up to the front door. Suspect appeared to be cooperating. Wonderful. Normally, she'd just shoot him (exposed inner cybernetic parts are her favorite legally verifiable evidence), but since she's on probation she cannot carry a firearm.

"Name, occupation, identification," she demanded. "Anything you say can and will be used against you in the court of law."

Soren handed over his ID card. "Soren Almaya. Certified external augmentation service technician."

Inwardly, he didn't like the look this Fox was giving him. It was the look of a bitter law enforcement officer looking to pin someone with a crime.

From a rooftop nearby, a fox crouched, a hooded jacket covering his entire body, save for the faint shimmer of his augmented eyepiece.
"Hmph. Damnit, I was too late. They already got here."
He muttered to himself, casting his gaze between the officer and the man from the building...

"Mr. Almaya, did you know that if I punch you and you fight back any more than a sack of rice would, that legally counts as 'resisting arrest' and gives me authorization to haul you in for questioning?" She asked bluntly.

After giving a moment to let this sink in she swung her first in a low undercut, aiming for his stomach.

Soren staggered back from the punch. Luckily, the clothing he wore was inpregenated with shear-thickening fluid to soften the blow. It was a necessity when working around things that could deliver blunt force trauma on par with a car crash. "By the way, choose your next actions carefully, all video and sound is recorded," he said. He looked around, hoping another officer would help him. If worse came to worse, he'd fight back.

But obviously, Soren did not want "assault on a police officer" on his currently clean criminal record. But if this rogue cop was intent on killing him, what choice did he have?

"Everything everywhere is recorded, Mr. Almaya..." She narrowed her eyes. She didn't like it when she punched people and they didn't go down. "Mr. Almaya, have you ever constructed, used, or in any way interacted with biomechanical augments?"

Her fellow officers looked slightly uncomfortable but their professionalism stopped them from interrupting an interrogation.

"He'll run if we don't arrest him now!" She snapped, finally losing her cool.

When the feline attempted to step in her way, her face flushed and she drew her katana, pointing it at him for a split second.

"What the hell?" He breathed, but she had already sheathed it, realizing that she had just badly overreacted and the consequences were not going to be good.

After a few fruitless minutes, the officers gave up quickly.

As the police drove away, he drew his head back in alarm, scared they'd notice him. Light spilled across his face, revealing a heavy criss cross of scars around two glowing red, cybernetic eyes. Aaron sighed as he shut off the TV. "Screw this. I'm going for a walk."

He then dressed and got his keys, cell phone and gun. Technically, it wasn't legal to carry any gun without a permit in Lanthae but in truth, there was only one law about firearms in Lanthae: it's legal if you don't get caught.

Failing that: Have some cash or other valuables to bribe a dirty cop...of which there are many.

He exited his apartment and passed by a homeless Dhole begging for money. He looked over the Dhole for any signs of augmentation before he grabbed his wallet. Seeing as there were no visible augmentations, he placed some credits in the Dhole's collection plate.

The German Shepherd then took the elevator to midlevel, where he stepped out onto one of the many elevated walkways that crisscrossed Lanthae's buildings. Hoverbikers, frame-flyers and a few augmented flyers flitted through the smoggy air.

Aaron took a deep breath. The smoggy, biting air smelt like home to him. He then merged into one of the busier thoroughfares and continued his trek to his favorite late night snack joint: Electric Sheep.

They're infesting this damn city, like maggots on a rotting corpse*. He rubbed his eyes, a headache beginning to drill into his brain. It was late, and he'd been up for almost four days straight. Maybe it was time to call it a night.

He turned and began making his way back to the apartment he'd been staying for the last week. He passed a window, an orange pole stenciled in front, with a blinking, pink neon sign above the doorway. It said 'All Nude Augments, All Yours!' An augment strip club. Marcus shivered with revulsion, and moved his hand to the back of his trench coat where he'd hidden his .44 Magnum. He was about to break in the door and put a bullet in every one of them... then his hand relaxed and moved back to his side. It wouldn't do to be caught now. Always be careful. He carried on home.

On the way, he came across a Great Dane heading in the same direction. He barely gave her a passing thought as his long strides carried him past her rapidly.

After a few minutes of brisk walking, Echo opened the lock to her third floor "coffin room;" a digout of wall about the size of a large horizontal locker, fitting a cot, set of two drawers, sanitary spray dispenser (cheap, portable, and practical alternative to showers) and a laptop on the drawers.

"Make yourself comfortable," she offered hollowly; he literally had one place he could sit, the corner of her cot.

Echo removed her outer clothes and ran them through a slit in the wall; they would be sent to a steamer, air-cleaned, and returned in minutes. "I plan to either sleep for the next 4 hours, or if anything you've noticed requires immediate attention, investigate whatever requires it. Though I warn you I won't be able to grant the police-immunity I usually can if we hit hot water; my sting on Mr. Alamay was unsuccessful and I'm even closer to losing my job..."

Marcus walked down the corridor to his apartment, old wooden floorboards creaking, and stopped at his door. He took out a small, square device aimed it at the door, and pressed a button. A UV beam quickly scanned up and down the door. It showed no hand prints, aside from his own. Marcus nodded with satisfaction and let himself in.

He flicked the light on and crossed to the desk in the corner of the room, on which sat a closed laptop. From the distance, pounding club music drummed through the walls. The Electric Sheep club. Not his favorite place, but it was usually a good place to find fresh recruits.

Sitting at the chair in front of the laptop, he reached up to the shelf above and took down a half eaten can of baked beans. As he began spooning the contents into his mouth, he flicked on the laptop. A holographic symbol of a red, cracked gear flickered into existence in front of him.

Adrian looked away, averting his gaze from Echo as he nodded.
"It's nothing pressing, nothing we can act on right now, but there've been reports that indicate...trouble. Like something's been pulling the strings to incite these incidents. All the incidents have been happening the same way as what went down today. If you'd be willing to, it'd be something worth pursuing. If we find out it leads back to Alamay, then we can go after him. If we find anything else... well, then we'll have to figure out what to do."
He said quietly...

"We should investigate," she nodded. "Your intuition has been extremely good in the past at picking up what's important," she nodded. "But I need to bring down Alamay regardless of whether he's involved or not in 71 hours."

She had just finished using the antibacterial spray when her clothes rolled back out of the slit with a ding remnicient of a toaster. She slipped them on with as much dignity as a person with no elbow room could muster. "Shall we set out tonight or in the morning?" She asked. She honestly wasn't that tired but she knew meditations she could undergo to control her state of being, and could make herself tired if beed be.

The cracked gear symbol disappeared after a second, and was replaced with white lettering. A message.

One of our sources has reported Adrian Kibagami is operating at a location near you. May be investigating our recent actions against Soren Almaya. His elimination should be considered one of your top priorities.

Marcus' ear twitched as he read the holographic writing. Kibagami had been an irritation to their cause for too long. He still remembered their last encounter, still bore the scars. It would be a pleasure to cut him down once and for all. He's investigating Soren Almaya...

It would seem he had some watching to do of his own...

"Regardless of whether he's innocent or not, I need to take him down or I lose my job..." Echo stated softly. "But we can focus on him after some reconnaisance. Did you have a place in mind to inspect?"

In the forest near the city, a lone woman was sprinting through the trees. She heard the beeping of tracking bots somewhere behind her, but they were heading the wrong way.

She tripped and tumbled off the road, stifling a panicked cry. This proved to be quite fortunate when a police car drove down the road past her. She heard a fragment of the driver reporting into a radio.

"All clear, suspect may be heading for Chancellorsville instead..."

She staggered to her feet, mud now staining her soaked gray dress. She saw the edge of the trees up ahead. The lights of a city.

As she staggered through the trees, she noted a set of guards stationed by the road. As she crawled through the grass past them, one checked a feed outputter.

"Apparently the tracers just gave up on the trail from the river. She could be anywhere from the lake down to Chancellorsville."

The other groaned. "Aww, hell, she isn't gonna make it this far down! I want to go home to my wife!"

"If you weren't out here, you'd be busting that inventor with Analena," his companion reminded him, as their quarry dragged herself through the grass past them, hoping to reach the city.

Axel eyes glowed as he bent over the arm modification. He could see the current's flow, where it should flow, like a living organism. He replaced one section with another and then sighed, leaning back and rubbing his eyes with his black, robotic arms. These eyes are great, but they sure do hurt after a while... He switched them to their normal vision.

Axel stood up and bent down to pick up a pack of cigarettes. Crossing the room (softly, he didn't want to make any noise which might annoy his neighbors), he opened the window and slowly climbed up the stairs. The weird guy with the hood was still gone. Thank god.

He took a seat on one of the dusty ventilation units that looked out onto the edge of the woods and lit up. Swirling spotlights from further in the city would occasionally fall across the tree line, penetrating the darkness behind them. Axel stared idly into the trees, taking a deep drag, trying to clear his head.

Soren Almaya got up to go to the bathroom.

As he relieved himself, his mind swirled with questions. Why would a police officer suddenly attack him? More importantly, why were the police so disinterested in what seemed like a patently criminal act?

"Hmmm..." thought Echo. "You're right. We're going to need disguises."

She climbed over him and opened the door to her closet. "We're going to need a stripper costume and a bouncer costume. I have someone who can help me in that regard. Or at least, is about to start helping me..."

Lily reached the city limits and stumbled into the city. She looked around, unsure of what to do. She didn't know who she could trust.

Finally, she decided to crawl into an alleyway and try to sleep there. Unfortunately, the alley was occupied.

"Who the hell are you?" growled a thuggish-looking bum, opening his coat to reveal a shotgun.

She stumbled backwards. "Sorry, I didn't see you--"

"Don't move," he growled. "I ain't seen you on these streets. You an undercover cop?"

"No, I'm not, I was just leaving--" she stammered, but then the guy grabbed her arm.

"You know what? If you're not a cop, or hell, even if you are, I'd rather keep you right here," he grinned wickedly. "You ain't much of a fight at all."

"Let go of--!" Her protests were cut off by a large ham-sized palm pressed against her mouth.

As Axel stubbed out the end of his cigarette, he heard a woman's cry from down below. Standing up, he cautiously peered over the edge of the rooftop. In the alley adjacent to his apartment block, he caught a glimpse of a figure in a dress struggling with a larger man. Then they moved out of sight, and the only sound was the faint scuffing of shoes.

He felt a coil of fear in his stomach. He knew it wasn't just a couple fooling around. But what if he has a knife, or a gun? Then his resolve strengthened. What kind of rat would he be if he did nothing?

Axel jumped over the railing and ran down the fire escape as fast as he could. He could still hear a muffled screaming. I'm not too late... he thought, as he reached the tarmac and sprinted for the alley.

Echo frowned. "This will be the last time you discuss or gain access to my body my body in such a way," she cautioned. "Can you make the changes here, or do you need us to return elsewhere? Also before we go, I'll need to do some online searches...this individual is going to need motivation to assist us..."

The bum dragged Lily into the alleyway and roughly groped her. "If you don't scream, I'll kill you afterward rather than before..." he growled.

Lily didn't have the body structure or the strength to fight back. She screamed as loud as she could, but it was almost completely muffled by his hand. Still, several window lights clicked on, but as soon as each inhabitant noted the nature of the crime, clicked the light back off and sealed the glass to keep the sound out.

Axel slowed as he reached the alley and poked his scarred face around the corner. The guy attacking the woman was facing the opposite direction to him, and they were making enough noise to muffle the sound of his footsteps. Now's my chance...

He started running up behind the man, eyes searching for any kind of a weapon. No luck - aside from a few odd bits of trash, it looked like the garbage collectors had been especially thorough tonight.

Without missing a step he charged up and leaped on the man's back, who started bucking, trying to shake him off. Yelling, Axel drew a fist back and thumped him on the side of the head. His arms were only a class 1 augmentation, but metal was still stronger than normal flesh, and each punch made a solid THUMP!

"I shall promise you nothing of the sort," Echo affirmed, eyes glinting.

Acquiescently she removed her clothes (she was well aware of the body parts Adrian needed to "enhance," and aside from those there was little modesty remaining clothes would leave) and laid on the bed. "Were I in any better straits, there is no chance I would be trusting you with something of this nature," she felt like pointing out.

The man tried to swing his shotgun and hit his assailant, but Axel was too small. This threw the man off-balance and he tumbled off his feet, squashing Axel with a cry.

"Son of a bitch!" he yelled, hitting his head badly on the pavement. He glanced at Axel through blurred vision. "Who the--?"

He was cut off by a shotgun blast to his abdomen. Lily had retrieved the shotgun and clumsily reduced his lower body to red meat.

Echo stifled a gasp. Of course, physical sensation was to be expected considering the bodily area, but she still had an extremely negative perception on sexuality of any kind, so the feeling of stimulation, no matter how moderate, was...unpleasant to her. At least, that was the only way she felt comfortable with it.

She felt like saying something dismissive to express her disdain for this feeling, but for once her wit failed her and she remained silent.

Lily swayed, then raised her gun to a non-threatening position and dropped it. Exhausted, she dropped to her knees.

"I'm sorry, I...just can't trust anybody. Ever since I woke up people have trying to kill me...I haven't slept in days...and I can't even remember what my name is..."

When he saw her sink to her knees, Axel lowered his arms and stood up slowly. "Hey, it's ok... we, ah..." As he walked cautiously over to her, his foot caught on the toe of the dead man, and he almost fell flat on his face.

"Oh christ... Look, we need to get out of here!" Curtains in the windows around them were twitching. Gingerly, Axel approached the girl and tapped her shoulder. "It's not safe to stay here.We can figure out the rest later, ok?"

She looks like hell... he thought as he looked down at her. And what was she saying about people trying to kill her? Axel reached out his hand.

"Stop talking!" She snapped, embarrassed both at feeling the sensation and knowing he knew.

An emotional outburst unbecoming of her, she knew, but she wasn't exactly in her comfort zone at the moment. Besides, he's an Augment, she told herself, it doesn't really matter what he thinks.

Lily hesitated, but the rustling of a window shade somewhere above them convinced her to take his hand. "Thanks. And I'm so sorry...."

She willed herself to her feet; both felt like lead weights at the moment. "I don't--I want to get off the streets...not that I'm homeless but...I mean I might be homeless, I don't really know..."

He noticed the girl seemed wobbly on her feet, and he tightened his grip slightly to steady her. Normally this kind of interaction would make him extremely nervous, but with his adrenaline pumping he didn't even think about it.

"Are you okay to move?"

"Well...that...isn't necessary," she forced out, finding it tough to think. She almost asked if this was nearing being over, but she held her tongue rather than appear weak. She wanted to close her eyes but bad images kept popping up when she did that, so she had no choice but to watch her colleague at his work instead.

"Don't get too comfortable," she snapped, as he seemed to be enjoying himself a bit. "This is a one-time event. You augments are your sick fetish for metal parts..."

Lily nodded. "I'm not wounded...I don't think. I've just been on the run for, I think three days now..."

With Axel's help she began staggering to the apartment. "I used to have a fanny pack, with some things like food and a thermos, but I think I lost it sometime during the second day. A bullet broke the strap while I was running..."

She was far too exhausted to limit her words or use any sort of tact; she was ready to tell this person everything just because he was the first person in three days who hadn't tried to kill her.

"So... you can't remember your name, huh?" Axel asked as he started to help her up the old wooden stairs.

There was a sharp intake of breath. "Then...why did you become an Augment?" Echo groaned, panting slightly. "And how much longer will this procedure last?" She gritted her teeth. Her entire body was pale and covered in sweat.

Lily shook her head as Axel helped her up the stairs. "I don't remember anything..." she admitted. "Before I woke up in a field, in the woods, at night...I haven't even changed clothes since then...haven't stopped moving..."

Once they reached his room, she wasted no time in darting to the fridge and tearing into three frozen Hot Pockets. She hardly noticed the muddy footprints her hiking boots made on the floor, or the handprints she left anywhere. Exhausted, she collapsed on the floor in front of his refrigerator.

The chance to lay down, the thought that she was finally safe for a time, and the sudden stomach cramp that came roaring up, all hit her at once and she just began crying. In despair, in confusion, in fright, in relief....probably all of the above. And she couldn't stop.

"Sorry about the mess," Axel said as he bolted the door and turned around. Then he froze as he saw the girl had collapsed, sobbing, surrounded by muddy footprints and discarded Hot Pocket wrappers. He made his way cautiously over to her.

"Hey, you," he said. Comforting crying women wasn't one of Axel's strong points. When she didn't stop, he took out a cup of instant coffee and gently led her over to the couch. "It's okay, you're safe here," he said, as he pressed a button on the side of the cup, instantly heating up the coffee, and handed it to her.

"You can change if you want. My clothes should fit you. I, uh, I don't have any woman's clothes, though," he told her, as he fiddled with his ear awkwardly.

Adrian chuckled bitterly, as he attached the other thigh panel.
"I lost my arm and part of my face...Oh, a good few years ago. There was a bomb in someone's apartment, and I saved them. These were to save my life."
He sighed.
"Two more pieces. Roll over please."
He added...

Echo rolled over acquiescently, the initial embarrassment having subsided somewhat, and she was starting to get nettled by the fact that he must be enjoying this far more than he should.

"I suspect you're going to have to take these off for me as well?" she asked pointedly.

After roughly ten minutes, Lily had cried most of it out of her system and was laying quietly on Axel's couch.

"I'd prefer a shower...if that's okay," she finally answered, wiping one of her puffy red eyes. "If you could wash these, I want to keep wearing them...they're the only clues I have to who I am."

She sat up to sit her coffee, and noticed the couch was now badly soiled with mud. "Oh, I'm so, so sorry about all of this," she sniffed. "I'm sorry about everything..."

Adrian shrugged.
"Unless you want them to stay on, then yeah."
He said calmly as he placed the next one onto her rear, a much more intense tingle surging due to the proximity to other body parts...

"That's okay," Axel said, the newspaper crinkling under him where he'd placed it over the mud to sit next to her. "I guess this place needed a clean anyway."

He got up and crossed the room to a door next to the refrigerator. Opening it revealed a tiny bathroom, with a rusty shower attachment and a light that could barely perform its purpose. "Sorry, I know it isn't exactly glamorous. And... watch out for the water, sometimes it can turn ice cold for no reason."

Axel indicated an Auto-Wash machine in the kitchen. "Before you have a shower, you could pass your dress through the door. I made a few adjustments to the Auto-Wash so it'll only take 5 minutes, then I can just pass it back once you're finished. Oh! I, uh, I won't look!" He said, turning red.

Echo clenched up instinctively and let out a strangled grunt. A moment of realization later and she instantly reverted to her previous state. "That didn't...just happen," she glared over her shoulder. "Just finish already..."

Lily nodded and walked into the bathroom. "Thank you..." After a few seconds the door cracked open and a single hand dropped her stained clothes and hiking boots onto the floor. The door shut and soon the sound came of the water turning on.

Axel picked up the stained dress and slotted it into the machine. It automatically put in the soap, and after a few seconds started spinning. He splashed some water on his face to wash off the specks of red from his fur, suddenly more acutely aware of the large gash marks across it. As he bent down to pick up her boots and put them on another sheet of newspaper, he noticed the corner of a white sticker poking out from the sole. He peeled it off. Hmn. Boots must be new.

When that was done, he picked up the TV remote from the table and flicked it on for the late night news. Won't hurt us if the police have some big case on right now to take their attention off the guy in the alley, he thought hopefully.

"...This woman is extremely dangerous, and should be treated as such. If you see her, do not, we repeat do not approach her. Call your local police, and allow them to take action." The news reporter was speaking into the camera solemnly. Next to him was a picture of the girl who was showering in the next room.

"Oh, this isn't good," Axel said out loud.

Axel jumped up, startled. "I warned you about the cold water!" he called out. There was a thumping on the floor from below. "Sorry about the noise, Mrs Leibetz!" he called down.

When there wasn't a response from the bathroom, Axel started to get worried. He stepped closer to the door. "Hey, what happened? Are you alright?" He said, anxious, tapping on the door.

"I don't enjoy this!" Echo gritted her teeth. "Of course my body is going to interpret this as a pleasurable act, but that doesn't change that sexuality is vile and painful, a thing that common folk use as a recreation to distract themselves from their worthless existences!"

She winced as something mettalic connected electrically to her nervous system. "Let's just continue considering this the necessary evil that it is. Giving into the feelings is the first step to losing your soul to the Augments."

There was no response from Axel's bathroom.

After knocking several times, there was still no reply. "Alright, look, if you can hear me, I'm coming in!" He twisted the knob and pushed the door open. The shower was still running, and steam from the hot water had filled the room, making it hard to see for a second.

He said with a blush...

"Considering the nature of the establishment we're about to visit, I have a hard time believing you." Echo flexed her gluteus. The false Augments merged comfortably, allowing complete movement from her hip joints. Good. "Is that all?"

Lily had fallen over in the shower. "I'm sorry, I'm sorry..." she hastily scrambled to her feet, noting that in her shock she had torn the shower curtain down. "I just got startled by..."

Axel turned back from twisting the water off. "Woah... that's creepy as hell." He stepped further in, his shoes squelching on the floor, and bent in to get a closer look. "Looks pretty new, too. The skin around it's still kinda raw."

He frowned. "An eye. It's got to mean something... Like, a gang, or a company? I've never seen anything like it before." Axel suddenly blushed as he realized where he was staring. He held out a towel to her from the shelf.

"I choose not to spend time researching sex establishments," Echo answered matter-of-factly. "And you have not answered my question. How soon until we can actually go and begin the infiltration?"

In an attempt to distract herself from the proceedings, she grabbed her laptop and began researching a woman who had foolishly volunteered her name immediately after inconveniencing Echo...

"I don't like it...." Lily repeated.

Lily realized she was flashing her rescuer at about the same time Axel did, and quickly grabbed the towel. "Sorry!" she stammered for the umpteenth time that night.

She shut the shower off. "I think it'd be best if I just went to sleep...I know my clothes aren't done yet, I can just have them in the morning."

She trundled sleepily toward his couch.

He lowered his voice. "Look, don't worry. I know something weird is going on, and I'm going to help you figure it out." He thought it was probably for the best not to mention the police had a manhunt on for her just before she slept.

"Neither do I. I just happen to know about that particular one since there've been quite a few problems around that area. That's all. I don't do strip clubs."
He said calmly, then leaned back, eyes drawn to Echo's butt.
"And just as soon as you're ready, we can start going that way. Just gotta get some decoy parts on."
He said, blushing faintly...

"Well, don't be too slow," Echo said, eyes not leaving the computer screen. She was already trawling the police archives on a certain Marita Jones. "I'm fairly certain I've found what we'll need to grab our last team member...that was a shockingly simple search."

Lily nodded, wiping strands of wet hair out of her eyes. "I really appreciate what you've done for me." She hugged him, both out of gratitude and because she was about to fall over from exhaustion. "I wish I could repay you somehow..."

Silence fell as she couldn't figure out what else to say. She was already half-asleep.

Axel froze up, shocked by the hug. Then he slowly hugged her back. "It's no problem." When he looked down, he saw she could barely keep her eyes open.

"Come on, you're about to keel over." He half carried her into the bedroom and helped her in, pulling the bed covers over her. "See you in the morning," he said, smiling shyly, as he moved quietly over to the light switch and flicked it off. He stood for a moment, watching over her, then pulled the door shut lightly.

Axel walked into the main room and thoughtfully picked up the bar code he'd pulled from her boot. After a moment, he absentmindedly put it in his jeans pocket and sat down on the couch, suddenly feeling exhausted, keeping a weary eye on on the front door.

Adrian smirked, getting up and quickly stripping down as he pulled out several plates of another metal. He glanced back over his shoulder at Emilena, then busied himself with the plates. First came the thigh guards, which he slipped onto his legs, feeling the familiar tingle as they integrated into his nervous system. The next part was always his least favorite. He slung the belt with the manipulator system on, clasping it around his waist as the spineplate swung up, latching to his back before extending the needles that connected it to his spinal column directly.
"You know...ah, that stings... you're really quite pretty Emilena. You should try smiling more. I don't think there'd be anyone in the world who could resist your charms."
He said lightly, as he tugged on the mechanical arm sheath, as well as stepping into the boot-type leg armor. The last pieces to go on were a mechanical lower jaw cover and a mounted visor system, which he kept open for the time being...

Electric Sheep was quite crowded at this time of night. Pounding techno issued from the speakers as fog roiled around the dancing crowd lit up by strobes and lasers.

Among one of the dancers was an Indian Cobra named Sanjay Bhat. Despite his outward appearance, he was an Augment. In addition to his natural venom glands, he had two tanks that allowed him to inject his opponents with synthetic poisons or drugs. In addition, he also had an "infrared eye" implanted between his own eyes, granting him infrared vision like that enjoyed by Pit Vipers. He was originally from Palladis ó a city that totally banned weaponized augmentations for civilians. He had gotten special permission to have his venom tank implants as a security guard, but when he was fired, he fled the city to avoid having the mandatory surgery to remove his implants.

He gulped down a shot of vodka as he reared up and swayed to the music.

Marcus pressed the 'Off' button on the side of the laptop and folded his hands thoughtfully under his chin. Soren Almaya lived about 15 minutes away by car. If Adrian was going to be looking into him, then he'd be staying somewhere close too. Probably helping the augmented scum out there as well.

Knowing Soren's address was useful, but it probably wouldn't be much help. He knew that Adrian wouldn't just walk up to the front door. But... people loved to talk, especially about augmented freaks that thought they were the new Batman. And where else would they be more likely to talk than the most well known nightclub in the city?

It seemed the Electric Sheep was his next destination. As he rose from his chair, he muttered darkly to himself, his voice low and rasping. "I'm coming for you, Kibagami."

Axel groaned and stretched out. His tail was curled around in his hands and he'd been nibbling it in his sleep, laid out on the couch. "Hmn... No, no more apples..." He muttered, starting to drift back to sleep. There was a click, as his neighbor's door opened. "Hello sir, sorry to disturb you this morning. We're investigating a murder that occurred nearby..." The commanding voice penetrated through the thin walls.

Axel's eyes opened drearily. Low, early morning sunlight had begun to leak through the windows, falling on his face and making him blink.

"Yes, unfortunately we have reason to believe that she's the perpetrator of the crime, and that she's taking refuge in the area. We're conducting a search of the building, so if you'll permit us..."

Axel shot upright on the couch. "Oh, crap..."

Adrian stood outside the performer's door to the Electric Sheep, visor now shut, staring at the bouncer.
"Hold it. State your name and reason for presence here."
It droned, scanning Adrian with it's mechanical eyes. Adrian chuckled idly, glancing up at the towering hulk of metal and flesh that was guarding the door.

Lily continued sleeping, blissfully unaware there were cops marching up to Axel's door.

Echo glanced unflinchingly back at the guard. "StarPuppy Cimarron," she answered, somehow saying such a ridiculous name without breaking character. A heavy trenchcoat covered her inner outfit, which she was not eager to show off, but I guess she has no choice.

(OOC: Serris, perhaps their hacking was insufficient and they can't get in because they screwed something up? This would force them to go to Marita and grab her for her hacking skills.)

They were making a thorough job of it. Axel's heart pounded as he realized there was no way he'd be able to hide Lily from them.

Footsteps creaked in the hallway outside, heading straight for his door. "Oooohhh...." Axel's breath whistled as, wide eyed, he scurried silently to Lily's door.

"Hey! Hey, wake up!" He whispered desperately as he eased the door open.

But she didn't stop walking once they were out of earshot of the guard.

"We need a hacker. And I've got the dirt to convince one that lives nearby..." she muttered, grinning wickedly.

Lily took some serious convincing; she was plum tuckered out.

"Whu--? What's going...?" she asked sleepily, only a quarter awake.

"It's either the police, or a huge cub scout..." Axel hurried across to the window and looked down. Aside from a few cops walking over to the adjacent buildings, the streets seemed deserted.

He gulped and turned back to the girl. "They must have found the guy who attacked you. Damn, I didn't think they'd be so quick!" Outside, the pounding on the door continued relentlessly. "There's no way I could hide you here...Okay, hurry and get dressed, we need to get out of here. I know a guy who'd take us in, I think."

Lily staggered to her feet and stumbled into the kitchen to the washer. Her clothes hadn't been dried, but since it composed of a dress, hiking boots and socks she was able to put it on pretty easily anyway.

She returned to the bedroom on the second floor. She assumed Axel would rather stay with his house than come with her. "I'm not staying here when you open that door," she said. "They'll find me. I'll take my chances on the roofs." She hesitated, wondering if this was the last time they'd see each other. She could never really say thank you for what he'd done for her...

The pounding stopped, though that was more frightening than reassuring. What were the police about to do next?

Lily marched up to Marita Jones' door and knocked loudly. "Police!" She announced. "Open up in the name of the law!"

"Alright, go up to the roof but be careful!" Axel spoke into the silence. "There could be cops up there too. The guy I know lives..." A mechanical whirring from the corridor made him stop. Every second or so there was a thump and the ground trembled beneath their feet. He turned back to the girl. "What the hell is..."

CRASH! The door smashed inwards, showering the room with wooden splinters. On the other side, a huge Police-Bot stood hunched in the doorway, lowering it's ham sized fist. Two cops stood behind, cradling their automatic rifles. It scanned the room with it's glowing orange eyes, stopping when it reached Axel and Lily. "Fugitive sighted", the Bot intoned with a mechanical voice.

"Well, I'll be screwed..." One of the cops said. The other turned his head and shouted down the corridor. "We've found her! Apartment 426!"

The huge robot began to push his way through the doorway, an energy weapon building itself up in it's palm.

Lily wasted no time. In a second she had grabbed the bedside lamp and sent it hurtling through the window. She then leapt through the shattered window herself and went running along the roof, not even knowing what direction to go.

Emilena marched into Marita's room without another word and stripped off her outer clothes, revealing a metallic bra and panties with golden tassles.

"What's the matter, Marita Jones?" she asked, smiling sensuously but unable to completely hide her malice. "Like what you see? Want to take it to the bedroom? From what I heard, you make a good submissive..."

"what do you want? and who told you i was a submissive?" she demanded.

Axel heard glass smash and turned to see Lily disappearing through the window. "Hey, wait..." he began, then felt a rush of heat as the Police-Bot fired the energy weapon. The beam missed him and punched through the door frame, but was close enough to lift Axel off his feet and send him crashing against the wall.

He lay dazed for a moment. There was a loud hum as the weapon in the robot's arm charged up for a second shot. It lumbered closer; at this range it wouldn't miss. Groaning, Axel reached up and grabbed the window sill, pulling himself through and out. As he stumbled up the fire escape to the roof, he could hear the cops in his apartment. "They've escaped to the roofs! Follow them, and get a chopper out here now!"

When Axel reached the top, he started sprinting, looking desperately around him. There was no sign of the girl. "Hey! Where'd you go?!" he shouted. The only safe place I can think of is Soren's... how's she gonna get there if I don't show her?!

He added...

"A former lover of yours lost her assets when arrested by the police," Emilena chimed in. Pushing a button on her wrist, a projector hidden in her fishnet arm sleeves displayed a silent homemade video of Marita intimately involved with another female Great Dame.

"She didn't even pick this back up once she'd served her time," Emilena taunted. Of course, this was because the police never bother to tell prisoners that this was a possibility, but Marita didn't need to know the details. "She probably went right back to abusing...this."

Emilena held out a tiny bag of powdery yellow crystals. "Biproxytol. One of the most dangerous, scarce, and illegal drugs on the planet. Have you heard of it?" Her eyes sparkled knowingly. "Would you like to hold it?"

Lily saw the edge of the roof approaching quickly, and without hesitation vaulted the gap. One thing she had quickly learned about herself was her youthful athleticism.

Unfortunately her landing was not great went tumbling on the other side. Unable to regain control, she went thudding into the opposite balcony, startling a couple who had dozed off in each other's arms.

The male's cursing echoed behind her as she staggered to her feet and began limping away at a reduced speed.

Its extremely addicting, few are lucky enough to break free of its grip' Marita said, gazing at the bag. ' so i'm guessing you know where she is, and if i help you with- well whatever it is you're trying to do- you'll let me see her. Am I in the ball park ' Marita said ' Her name is Rose, in case you are wondering.." she added.

Axel heard a shout somewhere to his left, and he changed direction, shoes skidding on the rough surface. He soon reached a gap between the two rooftops, and as he approached he slowed down instinctively; heights weren't his strong point.

"They're jumping the roof to complex 3S!" Someone cried out behind him. Axel glanced over his shoulder and saw the cops were catching up, though their heavy body armor slowed them down. He picked up speed and leaped over the gap, stumbling when he landed on the other side but managing to keep his footing.

In front of him, a man was leaning on his balcony, a woman by his side. "Hey, did you see..." Axel started.

"Woman on the roof?! She went right. Bitch is crazy, you gotta put a leash on her!" The man said, gesticulating wildly. His companion nodded gravely.

Axel turned and started in that direction, catching a glimpse of a grey dress disappearing around one of the ventilation units. "Wait up!" he called out. The distant rumble of an approaching helicopter was getting louder. We need to find cover, now...

"You're smart," Emilena smiled. "We need someone smart. And yes, you can see Rose again, but only if you get us into The Electric Sheep. Your druggie friend is a....performer there. Let's go with that. And if you're a really good girl, we might let you have some biproxytol. It's been...what, ten years for you? Surely you miss the thrill."

The taunting certainly wasn't necessary, but this Great Dane had been involved in Emilena's humiliation at Soren's house, so she didn't feel like pulling any punches.

Lily was panting by the time she reached the edge of the roof. Below her she saw the apartment complex's illuminated pool.

Well, she was already wet...

Jumping feet-first over the side, she became incredibly startled when she hit a glass roof within ten feet and went sprawling. When she tried to get up, her leg seared in protest and didn't respond; it had been dislocated.

"No, no no no...." she muttered, tears stinging her eyes from the pain. She tried to get to her feet, but she'd cut her arm on Axel's window and her hand slipped in her own blood.

Adrian glanced at Emilena, then stepped towards Marita.
"I will expand on that deal. If, and only if, you fulfill the terms of the contract, I will help this woman be treated for her addiction."
He said curtly, eye glinting...

There was a thump up ahead, and as he rounded the ventilation unit Axel heard a cry of pain over the edge of the roof. He ran up and peered over, starting when he saw Lily lying in a heap on the glass ceiling over the pool. There was a small crack in the glass, but it didn't seem to be getting any bigger.

"Hang on, I'm coming down..." Axel slowly lowered himself over the side, and when he was hanging by his fingertips he let go, landing with a light thump. He made his way over to her, stepping gingerly and trying not to look down. "Are you okay?" Then he saw her leg twisted at an impossible angle. "Oh jeez..."

My my aren't you a vindictive bitch' Marita said curtly to Emilena. ' as i said before that stuff is extremely addicting, and its extremely difficult to break free from its grip. i dont want any part of that stuff.. i'm guessing this is somehow payback for me reminding you of your responsibilities as an officer... you dug up dirt on me to get even, huh. i'm guessing your superiors are loving you right about now?' she returned the jibe emilena had thrown at her. ' the electric sheep huh ' not exactly a high rent place , even as strip clubs go. they don't make enough to afford the highest level security so hacking in, will be a relative breeze.. what is roses stage name? Marita said as she went to her computer and powered it up..' i'll help you, but not for your sake. Its for Rose that I'm doing this. and you had better come through with that promise of detox.' she said looking at Adrian. " rose deserves better than what shes had to deal with.

He said, eyes gleaming confidently...

Emilena smiled. She'd suffered far greater insults from far more eloquent and dangerous people to care about such emotionally-charged retorts.

"Her stage name is 'Honey Bunny,' which makes no sense to me but I suppose it pays the bills...here's a false bio and work account for my own stripper identity," Emilena handed Marita a flash drive. "I thought we had incorporated the account already, but we must have erred somehow because we were denied access to the club. So just figure out what mistake we made, and get that account activated.

She glanced at Adrian. "Figure out something for you to do while you're at it. Adrian is my bodyguard, in name only." She felt like adding that last part to make it very clear she needed no protecting.

"Help me up!" snapped Lily, who despite the request managed to get to her feet on her own. With a pop and a flash of pain, her dislocated leg relocated itself. She began hobbling toward the side of the roof. She saw trees, and in her mind trees meant safety.

Before she reached it, she looked back at Axel. "If you can...break the glass...they'll think we went that way..." she forced out, and then dropped over the side of the building, aiming for some large bushy hedges flanked by a concrete walkway and a grassy but solid terrace.

she said as she printed out ids ' hers read ' elisa turner. ' heres yours ' she said tossing it to Adrian. and yours' she said to Emilena. ' by the way ' you're scheduled for a performance at 10 pm ' she smirked. ' had to make it convincing after all.

"Cutting it a little close, aren't you? Heh. Whatever. Once we're in, point out your sweetheart to me, and in the event that things get loud, I'll do what I can to get her out of there."
He said, voice masked by the overlay.

Axel watched Lily drop over the side, then turned back to the glass. The scuffing of feet from the roof above was getting closer, as was the thumping of the police helicopter heading straight for them. She was right, and it was now or never.

He stretched his foot out, and with a grunt stomped it down as hard as he could over the crack that had already formed. The glass panel shattered, the shards scattering over the pool below - luckily, nobody had gone in for a swim.

"Hey! Did you hear that?! It came from this way!" Someone yelled.

Axel quickly scrambled to the edge and fell over the side, landing with an Oof! next to Lily in the bushes, praying they hadn't been seen going this way.

Emilena started. "What? I wasn't actually going to dance, you dolt! There are more important things to focus on while we're in there!"

She checked the time. Of course, at top speed they would arrive with just enough time to make her...dance.

After a long frustrated guttural noise, Emilena put her tenchcoat back on and stomped out the door. "If any of those disgusting cyberphillic drunkards try anything, they'll be losing more than their tips..."

Lily helped him to his feet. "They're going to call for backup, and backup always arrives from the opposite direction of the initial cops!" She whispered frantically. "We can't leave the city! Where do we go?"

It was taking all her effort not to sprint for the forest...she knew they'd catch her. She had to put her faith in Axel once again.

"Ok... Where are we now?" Axel gasped, trying to get his breath back while craning his neck for a street sign. When he saw one, he nodded. "It's a few blocks away. It'll be safer if we cut through the side streets. C'mon, we can get to Soren's quick if we hurry."

Luckily, it looked like all the police had followed them up to the rooftops. He pulled Lily down the road and through the alleyway opposite. Whenever they had to cross the road, he looked anxiously from side to side, but apart from a few cop cars racing past, it was clear. The helicopter soon thundered over them, but kept going.

After 10 minutes, Axel spotted a large house in the distance. "We're here..." He smiled hopefully at Lily. "He'll take us in." Leading her up the driveway, Axel started thumping on the front door. "Soren! You in?! You gotta help us!"

Marcus stalked his way down the Electric Sheep's entrance corridor, his normally heavy footsteps dampened by the pink carpeting and pounding music up ahead. He tucked his fake identity card into his pocket. It was expensive, but worth it; fooling the guard had been easy.

He reached the two main double doors and pushed them open and instantly the music swelled, assaulting his ears. There were less patrons than usual, as would be expected at an earlier time like this. He skulked over to a table in the corner, brushing aside a dancer who tried to stroke his arm, and took a seat, watching the small crowd writhing on the dance floor. One must know something...

Soren heard the pounding on the reinforced door echoing through his house. Quickly throwing on his shear-thickening fluid impregated clothing over his pajamas. He donned his head mounted display and grabbed his shotgun. He silently prayed they weren't the bent cops he'd encountered earlier.

His house was illuminated with infrared light, rendering it completely dark except to those who could naturally see in infrared or who had augments or equipment designed to do so. Luckily, his head mounted display allowed him to see in such wavelengths.

The man made his way to the front door and patched his HMD into the house's cameras. As if the door didn't exist, he saw an Augment and a normal Human woman.

He recognized the Augment; it was one of his best customers. He opened the door but kept his gun ready.

"Axel," Soren said with a yawn. "It's four in the f---ing morning. What's so important that it couldn't wait until the next day?"

"Soren! Hey..." Axel grinned nervously. "I, uh, I know it's early but... we could really use some help." He indicated the girl standing next to him. "This is... well, we actually don't know her name, but..." Axel coughed, knowing what a mess they must look, and how bizarre the situation must be for Soren.

From somewhere in the distance there was the faint wail of police sirens. Axel looked behind them nervously. "Look, I know this looks really weird, and we'll explain everything, but could we come inside? It's not safe for us out here. Please."

Lily didn't say anything. This man was clearly armed, and she trusted Axel's ability to persuade him over her own.

She shivered in her damp clothes and couldn't help but glance behind her to see if the police were close enough to get a visual.

Emilena sat in the front, keeping her face and tone neutral. "Let's just get there and get this moving quickly. How long does a strip dance even go anyway?"

Soren sighed but quickly ushered the two into the house and bolted the door shut.

The lights immediately lit up, revealing a very sparsely decorated foyer ó just a few potted plants and sculptures made of old cybernetics hardware. He slung his shotgun over his back.

"How about we discuss this over some hot tea?" he said.

"You would know how long strip dances go off the top of your head, wouldn't you..." Emilena muttered, still sore from the prospect. "Make sure to stay ten miles under the speed limit for the rest of the drive, Adrian. Heaven forbid we get there at a reasonable time."

Lily zipped into the house impolitely fast.

"Th--that would be good, Mr. Soren..." She realized her teeth were chattering. She was colder than she thought. "Thank you, and I'm very sorry for the trouble..."

She looked at Axel, intending to follow his lead. She didn't want to risk insulting their host by touching or doing something she shouldn't.

Axel nodded, relieved to be off the street. "Some tea would be great. Thanks Soren." He smiled what he hoped was a reassuring smile at the shivering girl next to him, and moved closer to her. She looked completely lost.

He inclined his head towards one of the sculptures as they made their way through the foyer. "Hey, one of the old M87-D augmentations," he said, trying to start an idle conversation. "I thought those things were impossible to find now?"

Post by: Serris on September 14, 2013, 03:40:59 PM

"They are," Soren replied. "They're an old class 2 augmentation made by Scaerin Cybernetics from Palladia. As you know, Palladia bans class 3 augs for civilians ó no exceptions. Even if you're licensed from another city or whatever, they won't honor the license. Consequently, someone decided to exploit a loophole in the law by making augs with built-in tools that could easily be turned into weapons. Arms with laser cutters that had a tight focus and power output equal to that of a standard laser rifle, legs with 'traction spikes' sharp enough to tear apart metal. Stuff like that. They got busted and the company went out of business. Even then, their augs tended to be on the expensive side, so they didn't sell too many."

He pointed to the part that Axel mentioned in the sculpture. "As for the M87-D aug, it came from some guy who mangled it in an industrial accident. All I could do was detach it from the mounting points and sell him a cheap replacement that functioned only as an arm. As for what that arm did, it had a built-in line thrower so someone could fire a line to someone in distress or to help launch guy lines for construction or climbing. Needless to say, it doesn't take a genius to replace the line with a harpoon, a metal slug or even a grenade."

The trio soon arrived at his equally sparse kitchen. Steel countertops had all sorts of spices and cooking equipment scattered all over. Soren dispensed some hot water from his electric kettle into some beat up mugs he grabbed from the dishwasher.

A sprinkling of tea leaves over the hot water and in a few minutes, three cups of steaming tea graced a serving tray made from some old scrap metal and rivets.

The Human took a seat and held his mug of tea. "So, Axel, what brings you here?"

Post by: bushwacked on September 14, 2013, 04:37:51 PM

Axel took his own mug. He couldn't feel it's warmth through his hands, but the hot steam wafted up to his face, making him feel slightly more relaxed. He leaned against the counter, curling his tail around his leg nervously.

"Alright... the police are after us. Well, they're really after her, and now me indirectly," Axel began, indicating Lily. Then he paused and took a deep breath. "This whole thing's going to sound crazy, but I guess I should start from the beginning. It was... I dunno, a couple of hours ago. I was up on the roof, smoking. I heard a fight, and when I looked down I saw some crazy guy dragging her down an alley. He was gonna do stuff to her, Soren... So I ran down to help her, and there was a fight and... the guy ended up dead."

Axel turned his cybernetic eyes to Soren's. "But he was crazy, he was going to kill us!" He looked to Lily for support. "Right?!"

"What you did is not my business," Soren replied tersely. He sipped his own mug of tea.

He then fixed his HMD with its stark blue "guiding laser" on Lily. "I don't know you but since Axel says you're okay, I'll trust him. Now what's your side of the story?"

She shrunk away from the blue laser instinctively, having seem similar ones while on the run in the forest.

"Creativity is lost on a mind addled with circuits and chips," Emilena stated. "Their subroutines can barely handle Boolean values, answers become increasingly ignored the further they get from 'true' and 'false.' It's like self-inflicted retardation. Sickening..."

(OOC: I wouldn't trust what Emilena is saying right here. She's just being bitter; I'm sure cybernetics are capable of handling a vast spectrum of human emotions and thought processes. Just wanted to make sure y'all knew I wasn't trying to define Augments in this world.)

"I don't...have very much to say..." Lily said meekly. "I don't know who I am, or what my name is. Or why they're chasing me..."

She took a sip of tea to calm her nerves and chattering teeth, and started from the beginning. "Four nights ago I woke up in a forest, the same one outside this city. I was wearing these clothes, and had a backpack. I traveled to the plains and saw police officers there, but when I called to them they shot at me so I ran back into the forest. After that they brought helicopters and trackers into the forest, but I avoided them for three days...I didn't have time to sleep, or eat...at some point I lost my backpack which had my protein bars and water in it. I was starving after that..."

She glanced at Axel, and gave a small smile. "I reached this city and Axel let me into his house. But they tracked us there and...oh...they're probably after you now, too!" she realized. "I'm so sorry! You've been so nice to me, but now they're probably searching your house and telling the trackers about you...oh, I'm causing so much trouble for everyone..." She teared up slightly, but blinked and forced the tears at bay. She didn't want to break down again, not in front of Soren. Having already ruined her first impression with Axel, she didn't want to do so again.

She took a deep breath and another shaky sip of tea. "I wish I just knew who I was, whether I was worth all this. What if I'm a convicted killer or something? I have absolutely no clues to my identity..."

"We're going to figure it out. I promised you," Axel said firmly. "Look at her, Soren. Does she look like a mass murderer to you? She's even got some creepy tattoo that she knows she didn't have before. It's like some kind of... conspiracy or something."

"If it was a brain that desired cybernetics in the first place, I shant think too highly of it," Emilena muttered.

She opened the door before the car had even gotten into the parking space and marched over to the cyberbot guarding the door.

Marita's hacking had done its job. The droid scanned over Emelina.

"Welcome, Starpuppy Cimerron." The droid moved aside to let "Starpuppy" and her "bodyguard" into the dressing room.

One of the Augment dancers was using a wrench to adjust some wires on her gleaming metallic legs. The dancer was a Golden Retriever but her legs were distinctly equinoid with polished chrome hooves.

Soren looked at the tattoo. His HMD even scanned for matches on the web. Two words blinked in his visual field: No results.

"I've never seen a tat like that before."

He turned to Axel and drained the rest of his tea. "Speaking of conspiracies, something stinks about the police here. I mean, fire breaks out in my workshop, I call the cops, one of them tries beating me up and using a fake warrant to go snooping through my house."

He rubbed his temples, being careful not to knock his HMD off. "Something ain't right and I want to see what the hell'a going on!"

Post by: bushwacked on September 17, 2013, 02:25:20 AM

Axel gulped down some of the tea. "Yeah, I saw the cars. Aw man, there was was a fire in your workshop? Was it an accident? Is it bad?"

(OOC: The sticker's still in Axel's pocket, just thought it would be better to talk to Soren about his problem first)

"Keep talking," Marcus ordered.

"Oh, well I would... but... hic... my glass is... uh, empty..." The drunk slurred, the stench of alcohol on his breath strong enough to make Marcus' eyes water. He'd overheard the drunk talking with his similarly inebriated friends about a 'flying man in the city with a sword'. Gritting his teeth, Marcus had pulled him aside to the bar.

He narrowed his eyes. A broken arm would get him talking just as easily. Begrudgingly, he lifted a hand to the barman to signal for another whiskey, then returned his glare to the drunk, his back to the stage.

"You have a workshop? What do you make?" asked Lily. Perhaps she could get on his good side by showing interest in his chosen profession.

Emilena was barely let into the dressing rooms when a man in a tight suit rushed over to her. "Are you StarPuppy?!?" he demanded in a high voice.

"It's 'Miss Cimarron' to you," she retorted, narrowing her eyes.

"We found her, roll tapes!" he yelled into a headset. "If you're ever this late again, you can forget about working here ever!" he shouted at her.

She snarled in response, but held her tongue as he raced away. In the dressing room she unflinchingly borrowed the other dancer's blush.

"Hey--!" the Golden Retriever protested, but quickly submitted when Emilena flashed her eyes and bared her teeth menacingly.

"Quiet! Get out now or I'll rip your jugular from your neck!" Emilena hissed, and the stripper wasted no time complying. Emilena turned to her teammates. "Marita, you've done your job, go do whatever you want. Adrian, perhaps these three minutes could be spent locating where the less publicized functions of this establishment occur."

Ten seconds until show time, her mental clock counted. With that she strode backstage, and after a reassuring (and unwitnessed) gulp, crossed the curtain.

When she took the stage, there was no announcement, no fanfare, no real recognition. Just a bunch of rowdy drunks, some wolf whistles and cat calls, and the pungent smell of sweat, drugs, alcohol, and oil. After a brief curl of her lip when she noted the greasy state of the stripper pole, she began her best attempt at dancing sensuously, though she couldn't quite keep the frown off her face.

Adrian had made his way from the back of the stage to the floor of the club, keeping his visor shut so as to obscure any visible part of his features. Casting a glance around the room, his visor's systems quickly scanned through each face, comparing each to known members of the Purifiers. Passing over most as small-time members with little to no criminal involvement, he froze when he saw the back of Marcus's head over the crowd. Even with his visor unable to run the face through the database, he knew the Doberman. Instinctively, he took a small step back, memories of the incident that had cost him his arm and eye flashing through his mind. Unfortunately, that small step bumped his leg into a vacated table, rattling the glasses on it and sending one to the floor with a remarkably loud clattering sound...

- ah honey bunny. shes in room 5. interested in a blackout? the waitress smirked. usually thats 100 bucks, but her price is 20.. poor girl.. this place is basically her home.. she got foreclosed on when she got busted with the stuff. its said to see what shes become, that stuff is really powerful. shes a beautiful dancer when shes sober, but those days are fewer and fewer these days.. do you know her?

- yes i do, we were friends before.. she got hooked on the stuff. once it hooks you, theres nothing that can be done for you. therw detox buts its extremely expensive. Marita said.
- you better believe it, its 40 grand for a couple weeks worth of the detox stuff, and it literally squeezes the stuff out of you, in rivelets . its hard to watch and harder to endure. i bet. i'm marie.. " nice to meet you marita said. i'm a talent scout, looking for dancers with talent and moxie.. from what you've told me honey bunny could be a girl with potential.. if we can get her detoxed.

"I'm a licensed cyberneticist with permits to work on class 1 and class 2 external augs. I also have a license to make and modify class 3 external augs for personal use." Soren got up to refill his his cup with hot water.

"Anyways, Axel," he continued, sprinkling some additional tea leaves in his cup. "The cause of the fire's unknown. But I suspect it was arson. As for how bad it is, it's completely destroyed. I'm going to salvage what I can in the morning. I'm pretty much out of a job. Sure, I've got some cybernetics tools in my basement and house but my workshop had a nanolathe where I could pretty much create a part to order."

"Oh god, I'm sorry Soren," Axel said sympathetically. "If there's anything we can do to help, just ask. Maybe we'll be able to find something that'll tell us who started it?" He nudged Lily. "Hey, maybe it's all connected! Or... maybe I've been watching too many detective shows." He took another gulp of tea and blushed.

The drunk burped. "Oh yeah, he's like a... hic... a ninja who... protects Virtuatron..."

"Virtuatron?" Marcus narrowed his eyes. "What are you talking about?"

"Wha... wha' you mean?" The drunk giggled. "You haven't seen... Robo-Ninja VII?"

Marcus' ears flicked. "A film? You've been wasting my time with a film?" He started to rise angrily, but a clattering behind him turned his head. His eyes flicked over the crowd, noting that a new dancer had come on the stage, and came to rest on the table on the opposite side of the dance floor.

A figure was backing away, wearing a full visor which prevented him from seeing his face. But his size and figure were the same... Kibagami? Marcus rose slowly, keeping his glare focused on the figure opposite, his hand reaching down to the Magnum tucked under his trench coat.

Soren nodded looked outside his window at his ruined workshop. He sighed. "Since I'm awake, I might as well start salvaging what I can."

He finished his tea and headed downstairs into his basement.

Lily drank her tea too quickly, and started hiccuping. "Th-thank you for having me, Mr. Soren," she choked, words sounding slightly off because she'd singed her tongue.

She turned to Axel. "What are you going to do now?" She asked softly. "You don't want to live a life on the run, it's horrible. And you know who you are, so you have friends, and a support net...at least, I'm assuming you do. The cops will go after them if they think it'll help catch you."

At first Emilena merely tried to finish her dance. The whole time she hadn't stopped thinking about the vile perverts filling the audience in front of her. Just stomach their sinful gazes for another two minutes, thirty seconds... she told herself, gritting her teeth behind her lips. Then this unwholesome display will finally be...

Hold on? She started realizing that not many of the audience was actually viewing her. They were talking, drinking beers, doing drugs...nobody was actually staring at the stage. Why the hell aren't they watching me?

Despite herself, she began putting more oomph into her performance. A twirl of her hair, a flare of her buttocks, she matched the beat of the song and stretched her body to its limits. Grasping the stripper pole for the first time, she ground her chest against it and with a twirl, seamlessly incorporated an unclipped bra into her performance.

Nobody really cared. They'd seen hundreds of stripping women before.

Emilena's eyes flashed angrily. Using her removed bra like a strap, she swayed and turned and pirouetted, putting all her combat reflexes and sword maneuvers into creating as stunning a display she could muster. Sweat rolled off of her as she focused painstakingly on getting somebody's attention.

Perhaps its for the best nobody was noticing, because what she was doing actually looked nothing like strip dancing.

Adrian swore under his breath as Marcus turned to face him.
"Damnit, why did it have to be him, of all people? ... At least I can safely say that the Purifiers are involved somehow. Now I just have to hope that he doesn't realize it's me...Just long enough to get what data I need, for Marita to get Rose out of here...and for Emilena to finish her dance..."
He thought, before he noticed Marcus's hand reaching for something. Instinctively, he reached back, hand finding the hilt of his sword as he tensed...

Marita got her Perpsi and thanked the waitress befre heading back towards the3 dressing rooms./.
- in room 5 rose stared at the mirror. a haggard tied face statred back at her. she had been working at the club for 5 years now, but her dancing had continued to decline in quality thanks to the drug addiction she had.. ' i can't.. keep going.., like this..' she said slowly, as she pulled out a small bag of stuff from her dresser. ' it contained ' sawdust' as Biproxytol was called. she had been hooked on it for years, and it had caused her breakup with marita, who had managed to break free from it. there was a knock on the door. Honey Bunny? came a voice that sounded familiar ' i'm Elisa turner , from Starlight modelling.

- STARLIGHT MODELING?' Rose shot straight up, dropping the bag of Biproxytol on the floor. Starlight was a top-flight talent agency, involving acting, dancing, and voiceover work. as long as you had talent they would overlook it if you stripped in the past. ' do come in ' she said as marita entered the room.
marita gasped involuntarily as she saw rose. she looked terrible, her teeth were stained from biproxytol use and there were bags under her eyes from lack of sleep. ' well honey bunny, today is your lucky day. i've been told you're quite the dancer. so i'm offering you an audition in Mushu city on friday. you will have to leave now if you are going to get there on time..
- excuse me' said a suit who came up behind her. ' shes on in 9 minutes! We'll have to talk after her dance, Miss Turner/

sir, my instructions from the agency were quite clear. Miss Honey Bunny has an audition at 9 a, Friday morning at Central plaza in Mushu City, if she wants to get there on time, she will have to leave immediately.' Marita replied pulling out a list, which was made from official Starlight itinerary. 'we will compensate you for any losses in revenue from her missing her dances for the next few days. this is a golden opportunity for her sir, and we wouldnt want her to miss it, now would we?

the suit looked at the list.. ' alright, alright, you' he barked at rose. ' get your things and get out!' rose got up from her seat and rasn back to where she had her meager belongings. in a minutes time she had everything.
give my regards to Miss Runiyuki" the suit said to Marita " Honey , you dance your ass off for them, understand, or dont bother coming back here!

Yes mr Means" Rose said quickly. "good. i'll get tamara to pull double duty.. have a good evening Miss Turner" the suit nodded as marita gave him a calling card. and left. rose following right behind her..- they reached the main floor , where emilena was in the last half minute of her performance...

"Um. Well, I've never really had many friends," Axel said, shifting uncomfortably. "I've never really been the outgoing type, you know? The only people I feel comfortable being around are Soren... and you. And my Mom, but she's up at an old folk's home being reminded what her name is, so... yeah," he added quickly, turning red.

Axel looked up. "So I guess I'll hang around. If it's okay with you." He suddenly remembered what he had in his pocket. "Hey, I might even be useful. Here." He took out the barcode sticker and passed it over to her. "I found it on your boots. Maybe it'll help us find out... well, something about you."

Marcus' grip tightened on his magnum. He felt it start to slide out from the back of his trousers... Then another stripper stepped out in front of him.

"Hey baby, you look stressed. I can help that," she said, her voice slurred from drugs or alcohol, running a finger up his chest. Marcus glanced down at her, his concentration momentarily broken.

"Not interested," he growled, pushing past her. He looked back at the person opposite, and saw him moving his hand down behind him. Right where he always kept his sword... That was good enough for Marcus. He yanked his gun out, aimed across the room and fired, the blast sending a familiar impact up his arm.

The gunshot had its effect. The stripclub instantly flew into a panic with patrons, strippers and everyone else pushing and shoving in their haste to make it to the exit.

Sanjay Bhat gulped down his cocktail and slithered into an open liquor cabinet. He silently swore as he tried to calm his racing heart and ignore the shouting.

Soren returned clad in a full-body powered exoskeleton. His face was hidden underneath an armored helmet while his body was concealed inside a bulky armored metallic suit. Worklights attached to the sides of the helmet lit up the dimly lit kitchen with beams of stark white light. He reached an armored hand up to his helmet and flipped up the visor.

"Well," Soren said. "If either of you need me, I'll be outside. Help youselves to anything in the kitchen."

He opened the backdoor and stepped out into his yard.

Adrian swore as the gun was drawn, drawing his sword in a flash, using it to deflect the bullet as it flew at him, sending it ricocheting off into a ceiling light. She took it. "Is there are way to track these sorts of things? Maybe find out who bought the boots?" Her eyes lit up. "Could I actually figure out my identity?"

Emilena has just finished her strip dance, and was about to angrily chastise the audience for not paying better attention when a shot rang out. Very quickly any patrons with firearms/combat-oriented augments of their own got involved. And considering the dangerously high levels of intoxication/drug use, it was guaranteed to get ugly fast.

One thuggish augment with cybernetic parts covering his face, torso and muscular hands leapt the stage. "Hey dancer, you're coming with me," he sneered. "I'll protect you, and you can give me and the men another...performance at the barracks." One of his index fingers flipped open to reveal a loaded chamber.

"Well, I'm glad somebody liked my performance--hey!" Suddenly she realized what he had meant. "No, get the hell away from me," she snarled.

The thug chuckled and pointed his hand cannon at her. "Yeah? What's your butt-naked ass gonna do to stop me?"

She dodged his meaty fist when it tried to grab her. "You really should have developed a fetish for skin and fur," she retorted, pulling out a thin slip of metal which retracted into her beloved katana. With a twirl reminiscent of her recent performance, she dismembered his hand cannon. "Get a metal one of these!" she spat, stabbing him through the crotch viciously as he staggered backwards.

She saw security coming from behind the stage, so she vaulted into the melee in the seating area. Time to find Adrian and hope he'd made progress locating the hidden recesses of this facility.

marita had gotten rose out of the building before the shooting had started. rose got into adrians car, the backseat to be precise. ' thank yo for giving me the opportunity to perform, miss Turner.' " 5 years, 5 long interminable years. the pays horrible, the guys and girls are often drunk, and its degrading in a way you wont believe.." " not as bad as the the biproxytol you're still hooked on.." marita said. 'what- how did you know?" Rose demanded. ' your teeth are stained yellow, you have bag under your eyes, and your arms are pockmarked.. Marita said ' All telltales signs of biproxytol use..
- yeah, i'm been hooked on it for a long time. to get clean would require like half a million dollars.. which will take me at my current salary about 200 years. i mean if you can give me the gig..'

The Golden Retriever dancer bolted for the door and with a burst from her equinoid augments, she leapt nearly fifteen feet straight up. The floor cracked as she landed, the augments taking most of the impact. Luckily, no one noticed her run away.

An massive but unaugmented Bison was trading blows with an Augment. The sound of tearing metal was heard as the Bison grabbed his opponent's arm and tried to rip it from its mountings.

The whump of compressed air was heard as the Augment fired his built in line thrower at his attacker, nailing him to the bartop.

The arm whirred as it severed the cable and attached a new tip to the line. Glistening metal plates slid back into place as the launcher morphed back into a hand.

He clutched his right arm, now dangling by a few wires and dripping hydraulic fluid and rushed for the exit.

Sanjay gulped as a harpoon ó probably fired from a modified line thrower augment ó slammed into the liquor cabinet. He dared not enter the fracas ó lest he be killed. At the same time, when the police came, he was going to be in deep s---.

He had to make a choice.

What was I supposed to be doing again? thought Emilena, as she parried a drunkard's swung bottle and slashed his stomach open. "Now you've achieved your lifelong dream of having a disc drive, you freak!" she taunted.

Someone was making a run for the exit, who appeared to be a peddler of neurocotics, illegal mechanical skin patches that use artificial "cells" to alter desired brain functions, for a drastic, irreparable, and incredibly damaging (but incomparable) high. She thrust and stabbed him through the thigh.

She advanced on the horrified dealer, who was not pleased to see a naked psychotic stripper with a bloodied katana approaching him. "What's the matter?" she smiled widely and narrowed her eyes. "You like sex don't you? I've heard its kinda like this...only it's your turn for a whore to penetrate you."

She was raising her sword over the sobbing man when a bullet grazed her arm. She turned and noted that a deer with a small assault rifle was firing on her. Well, she'll deal with him as soon as--

"--Aughh!"

Taking advantage of her distraction, the neurocotic dealer had slapped a patch onto her hip. Immediately, Emilena felt woozy, and stumbled. Smashing her knee against a table, she tumbled to the floor as the dealer bolted for the exit.

Feelings...pain...maybe...she couldn't tell. Her head was spinning, but she forced herself to remember the skin patch was rewriting some aspect of her brain.

Groaning, she stumbled to her feet. Another bullet embedded itself in the floor near her. The deer hadn't forgotten about her, and only his severe intoxication had prevented her from being hit already.

Shaking her swimming head, she glanced around at her environment. Her eyes lit upon a Black Mamba hiding behind an upturned table. Is it the skin patch, or is that Sanjay Bhat, escaped Augmented soldier and treason-class felon?

She stumbled over to the panther and rolled awkwardly over his table. "Sanjay Bhat," she said through slurred speech, "Public enemy number 7, wanted for...uh...cases of Augment theft, evasion of arrest, and violation of your sworn...as a national soldier...you are in...so much deep... if you don't kill that deer. I'm a cop and...will have them...you in jail after they rip the...from your body!"

What was this feeling the patch was pumping through her system? If she could only keep her damn head straight!

Axel nodded. "Yeah, should be simple. It'll let us know where you got them, and from there we could get into their system and see who bought them using the code as a reference. Unless you were some kind of notorious shoe thief," he teased.

When Marcus saw his target deflect the bullet, he swore loudly. It IS him! He started striding forwards, continuing to fire on the upturned table Adrian was using as a shield. The bullets punched through, not finding their target. "Just die, you slippery bastard..." He snarled under his breath.

All around him, hell had broken loose but he paid no attention to the screaming, the gunfire, the terrified patrons tearing for the exit. Out of the corner of his eye, he noticed one of the club guards, a human, running towards him with a taser. Marcus slid a combat knife free from the sleeve of his trench coat. As the guard reached the taser out, he quickly leaned back to avoid it, then brought his arm upwards in a sweep, cutting the man's arm off at the elbow. As the man stared in disbelief at his stump, Marcus spun his revolver around and put a shot through his chest, sending him flying backwards.

Focusing his attention back on Adrian, Marcus speed-loaded his gun, a well practiced move that took only a few seconds, then leaped over the barrier onto the dance floor. Bulling his way through the screaming civilians, he charged towards Adrian.

Adrian growled as the bullets struck his makeshift shield, one of them grazing his left arm just above where the augment stopped, causing him to wince in pain. The instant he heard the sound of Marcus's gun reloading, however, he sprung into action. Quickly assessing the situation, he saw the deer with the assault rifle, saw Emilena go down when the drug dealer slapped something on her, and noticed a Black Mamba slithering off. Without hesitating for a second, he turned, using the augmented strength in his arm to fling the table at the deer, striking him soundly in the chest and sending him sprawling. However, throwing away his shield was a poorly-planned idea, and as he did so, another human member of the Purifiers fired at him with a high-powered handgun, several shots tearing into the vulnerable skin at the base of his augmentation. Adrian staggered a little, cursing as he tossed his sword up, grabbing a throwing knife from a leg pocket and sending it through the man's throat as Marcus charged him. Flipping himself over another table, he caught his sword as it fell, dashing towards Marcus.
"Damn you, Marcus. This time...I'll pay you back for what you did to me...with interest!"
He chuckled coldly...

"I'll finish the job this time, freak..." Marcus snarled as he ran forward. As they came together, he sliced the knife downwards, aiming for Adrian's face.

Sanjay considered helping the cop but seeing as someone already killed the target she told him to attack ó and that said cop was currently drugged, he simply shrugged his shoulders.

"See ya!" He crouched low to the ground and hugged the wall, avoiding gunshots and other projectiles.

Seeing as the liquor cabinet was smashed open, he took the opportunity to swipe a bottle of Kozlov brand vodka.

Soren tossed aside a several hundred pound piece of concrete as he worked under the dim light of dawn. The rubble had cooled enough that it was safe to handle barehanded ó not that his exoskeleton would have been affected. He scowled.

He hauled out a crushed and scorched case and placed it aside. He smashed a large piece of concrete with his fist and threw the pieces aside.

Emilena glared as the cretin dashed away from her. Why the hell did she think somebody would HELP her anyway? That's not how the world works.

In her hatred for the punitive figure vanishing into the darkness, she had her first clear, unbothered thought. I am going to stab that man without warning if I ever see him again...

That was what she needed, she realized. Genuine rage. The only thing that can cut through this fog of confusion that damn patch had done to her.

Channeling her years of overreacting into a new focus, she got to her feet. She gripped her katana. "I cannot afford to be incapacitated now..." she hissed through gritted teeth to nobody in particular.

She marched forward, one step at a time. She had to find her own way into the recesses of this facility. She can't rely on anybody else.

Adrian spun his sword gracefully, knocking each bullet fired at him aside before bringing his sword up to meet Marcus's knife, stopping it mere inches from his head.
"Heh. Is that the best you have? After what you did to me last time...I was expecting more from you!"
He taunted, slinging a foot up to meet Marcus's chest...

Post by: bushwacked on September 22, 2013, 02:26:51 PM

Marcus grunted as Adrian's foot connected. He recovered quickly and kept pushing forwards. "You got lucky last time," he growled, baring his teeth, meeting each of Adrian's attacks with his knife. A disorientated patron stumbled towards them, and Marcus kicked him away.

"But your impants can only take you so far!" He roared, as he ducked under Adrian's sword and swung his arm up, smashing the butt of his revolver on the underside of Adrian's visor.

Axel heard a crunching sound and looked over his shoulder. Through the window, he could see Soren out in the yard, clearing through the burned ruins of his workshop. "Aw man, I feel so bad for him. Who the hell would do this?" He winced as he recognised a expensive augmentation part sticking out of the smoking cinders.

"Do you think we should try and help him out there? You know, before we ask to borrow his computer?" Axel said, looking back at Lily. "That workshop was his life..."

Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on September 23, 2013, 11:39:34 PM

Lily wanted no more than to go to sleep, but Axel made a valid point. She nodded sleepily. "If we can help, we should. He's sticking his neck out for us, letting us stay here."

She walked out to the workshop. "Hey Soren, can we help you rescue what we can? Or at the very least clean up..."

A security guard had his pistol out and was accosting two drunks wielding broken bottles. "This is your final warning! Leave now!"

The drunks looked itching for a fight, but after a glance at something behind the guard immediately complied. Out of his peripheral, the guard noted a lithe female form.

"Can I escort you to safety ma'am--" he started, but before he could blink a blade was pressed against his throat and she had him pinned to the ground.

"I know there's a hidden facility here," she whispered huskily. "Take me there or I slit your neck!"

She seemed to be drugged or something, so he kicked her in the stomach. She staggered, and he pistol-whipped her in the head. As she slid backward screaming along the ground, he aimed his pistol but hesitated; he wasn't one for shooting wounded females. Instead he decided to go warn the higher-ups that the underground facility had been compromised somehow.

Shooting two Hell's Angels out of his path, he reached the offices and punched the entry code into a seemingly unusued one. After rotating a potted plant, the desk slid aside to reveal a set of stone stairs leading down.

As he began his descent, he felt a sickening thud and fell to the floor, unconscious. Emilena stood behind him, shaking.

"You brought me here as promised...so I'll let you live..." She muttered even though he can't hear her. She stepped forward.

But something made her pause and look at the unconscious man lying below her. Nobody would know what she did here...she could stroke his hair, expose his body...do other things...She felt a surge of blood in her abdomen thinking about it.

What the hell? Why am I suddenly thinking such horrid thoughts?

Repulsed, she tore her gaze away from his body and staggered down the stairs, sword at the ready. She had to get to the bottom of this. His body will still be here when she gets back.

Soren hurled aside a large piece of concrete. He turned to face Lily. "Dunno what's left to salvage but I could use a hand."

Sanjay slithered into an alley as two tracking bots flitted over the dirty road. He looked upward and noticed a fire escape. He slithered onto a dumpster and reared up as high as possible. Teetering precariously, he grabbed hold of the rung and wrapped his body around it.

With a grunt of effort, he began slithering up the ladder.

Axel followed behind Lily and stood looking at the wreckage. "Alright... do you want us to clear out some of the stuff that's collapsed inside?" He took out a cigarette from his back pocket and started to light it, then paused as he realised it might not be in the best taste. "Sorry."

He seized a piece of concrete and, after struggling with it for a few moments, managed to push it along the floor with a grunt. He went back to the ruined workshop and leaned inside. His nose twitched. "You know, I think you were right to be suspicious. It stinks of gasoline in here, and not the type you normally use."

Adrian smirked, dodging back as his visor flew off, clattering to the floor a few feet away from him.
"You think this is because of my implants? Heh.....Hahahaha! Then you're sadly mistaken. Think about that one in hell!"

Lily was struging with a piece of concrete herself. "At least it didn't spread to the rest of--"

Suddenly she dropped the concrete, her eyes went blank, and she reeled.

She wasn't in the workshop any more. At least, that wasn't what she was seeing. She was on a doorstep, and after a few seconds she recognized Soren's. Her gloved hands were sliding a thin laser through the door creak, and with a hiss the lock physically melted. Her gloved hands checked a HUD on her gleaming silver watch, where the words "SECURITY SYSTEM DEACTIVATED" were blinking in red. She pushed the door open...

And then she was back in her own body, collapsed on the floor in shock.

"Somebody's here!" She squealed. "Somebody's outside!"

"Are you okay? What are you talking about?" Soren asked. He hauled away an augment that was battered beyond repair.

His HMD suddenly flashed a warning: UNKNOWN BEING HAS BREACHED PERIMETER.

"You two can keep clearing the rubble. I'll see what set off my security system." He headed towards the area where the alert was coming from...the front door of his house!

(Ooc: It's whatever this world's equivalent of a CIA agent is. As for HOW Lily saw that, it is currently a mystery.)

Emilena found herself in a tightly sealed room. Several computers with cryptic messages and locked file cabinets sat in the corner.

The untrained eye would instantly begin searching these for clues, but Emilena was more interested in the ink pad on the desk. It was actually a police-grade thumb scan. She realized it would be unlikely for the secret group to leave anything important in the first room; everything in here was no doubt a decoy.

Returning to the previous room, she dragged the security guard down the stairs and pressed his thumb against the ink pad. There was a click behing a large file cabinet, and she pushed it aside to find a hallway.

Heart beating faster, she marched deeper into the unknown.

Axel watched with alarm as Soren headed back inside his house, then hurried around the rubble piles to Lily's side. "Are you okay?!" He said, helping her to her feet. "What the hell's going on? How do you know someone's outside?!"

Marcus felt a jolt run down his arm as Soren struck it, and his knife fell from his fingers, landing with a thunk point down on the floor. He roared with blind rage and seized Adrian's wrist, yanking him up to eye level with him. "Dodge this you freak," he snarled, as he drew back and slammed his forehead as hard as he could into Adrian's face.

He spun around and threw Adrian across the room, sending him crashing against the bar, smashing through alcohol bottles and dropping out of his sight. Marcus looked at the alcohol dripping down where he'd thrown Adrian. "That suit fireproof?" he called out, as he aimed his revolver and fired at the flammable liquid, igniting it.

Adrian chuckled, kicking out from behind the bar, flames clinging to his coat as he landed.
"Actually, yes. After you 'killed' me last time, I made sure to be as fire-resistant as I can possibly be."
He taunted, rolling a bottle of alcohol at Marcus's legs, then striking his sword on the ground to ignite it.
"And after this, once I get out of here, you and your terrorist friends are going down. Hard."
He taunted...

Soren entered his house to grab his shotgun. Thanks to magnets on his gun and suit, it stuck to his back.

A verbal command to his exoskeleton dialed down the power so he didn't need to worry about accidentally mangling someone.

He scowled as he noticed that someone had melted the lock on his door. The hair on the back of his neck stood up as he ordered the house AI to kill all the lights in his house and switched his HMD to show infrared. Another command switched his two worklights on his helmet to infrared.

Something crashing to the ground in his kitchen got his attention. Charging into his kitchen, Soren saw the intruder. A massive Rhino with a mechanical eye and arms was currently going through all his belongings.

The crook peeled back one of the walls, looking for something.

"Hey ass----! Get out of my house or I shoot!" Soren shouted.

"No need to worry citizen, I am just here toó"

Soren scowled. "Get out. If you're really a cop, go get a warrant and come back."

"Not until I find this person." The Rhino handed Soren a picture of Lily.

Soren's hair curled. "She's not here." It was then he realized that was the wrong thing to say.

The Rhino smiled. "I see. Now I have a few questions to ask you."

"No."

"Perhaps I did not make myself clear. That wasn't a request."

Soren crossed his metal clad arms. "Like I said, come back with a legit warrant and I'll talk."

The Rhino sighed. "Very well." In a lightning fast motion, he picked up Soren and tossed him through the back door and into his yard.His gun, remarkably, was not damaged.

"Axel, hold this please." Soren handed his shotgun to the Rat as he set his exoskeleton to the highest setting.

(OOC: Maybe the Rhino could be the CIA agent, and he was crashing around the house looking for Lily (I'm guessing) and Soren mistook him for a looter? Just an idea to get back to your idea if you were planning something)

Axel gaped at Soren. He looked at the shotgun and took it hesitantly. "Sure, but what-" His eyes widened when he saw the huge wall of muscle charging through after Soren.

"Who the hell is that?!" Axel cried, instinctively firing the shotgun at the rhino, the bullets pinging off the rhino's tough exterior. The gun's kickback was stronger than Axel had anticipated, and it sent him flying back to land on his rump in a daze.

Marcus wrenched his knife from the floor and jumped back from the ball of fire that Adrian had sent at him. "You think I haven't heard that before? We won't stop until every one of you... things is wiped off the planet," he spat, the heat in the room making him breath heavily.

The years of accumulated spills of alcohol and other liquids had taken their toll on the fire safety of the club. The flames easily spread along the wooden floor, climbing up the walls coated with stained fabric and reaching the ceiling.

A wall of flames burst up between them, separating Marcus from Adrian. The smoke made it difficult to breath, and his eyes stung as he glared across at his enemy, ignoring the screams of patrons who'd found themselves trapped by the fire.

Adrian coughed a couple of times, then swore.
"Where's Emilena? Damnit, this isn't good..."
He thought, eyes flicking through the fire until...there! A door that was hanging ajar, probably the one that Emilena had gone through. He reached into his coat, pulling out a flash grenade and arming it as he looked back towards Marcus.
"Keep telling yourself that. You're the ones who will end up gone."
He taunted, throwing the Grenade down and shielding his eyes as it detonated in a blinding flash, then rushing towards the open door, though not before grabbing as many patrons out of the fire as he could...

The Rhino finished rooting through the house and set his sights in the backyard. His night vision goggles showed three figures ó and one was a Human woman.

He ignored Soren and Axel as he approached Lily. "Lily. I recall you escaping our tracking drones a while back. Quite a feat. But I'm here for business. The Agency wishes to speak with you."

"Agency?" Soren asked. "If you think posing as a goverment spook's gonna fool me. You're wrong!" Soren charged forward, throwing a punch at his opponent's face. His metal fist, driven with artificial muscles powerful enough to shatter concrete, actually knocked the Rhino back a few feet.

(OOC: My CIA Agent was going to be a suave MIB who lets his words show his authority...the sort of character you'd expect to be a CIA Agent. I guess I can work with a druggie thug, but he's depressingly one-sided.

Also I thought the workshop and the front room were two different places. Why are Lily and Axel present?)

Lily shrieked and ran as far as she could away from the thug. Finding a charred workbench, she hid underneath it and started shaking uncontrollably.

Her anger having given her focus again, Emilena found herself facing a long empty hallway. A locked door was at the end, but her memory of the strip club layout told her that she'd reached the end of the building. This was no doubt a dead end.

She heard footsteps coming her way, two pair coming down the hallway after her. With no hiding places of note, she decided to collapse and play dead, hiding her sword underneath her.

She heard the pair stop. "Hostile spotted. She appears to have passed out."

A radio cackled. "Tapes show she was hit with a neurocotic thirty minutes ago. Apprehend but use extreme caution."

Emilena waited until the pair was close before twirling her sword and bifurcating the closer one. The other opened fire but Emilena used the deceased as a shield as she unholstered his sidearm and finished off his teammate with a shot through the mouth.

Now armed with a gun and sword, Emilena located a small activator on the guard's person and pressed it. It opened a door further down the hallway.

Closing the door behind herself, she progressed further. She was close to her goal. She could sense it.

The Rhino shook off the powerful blow and retaliated with one to Soren's chest, which his exoskeleton absorbed. "Stop making this harder than it needs to be. Tell me where Lily went, I'll get her and leave!"

"Why should I?" Soren snapped as he dodged another punch.

"Because if you don't, once I find her, I could have you hauled in for assault on a federal agent and for obstruction of official government proceedings. And trust me, you do not want to be convicted of those charges."

"Tell me what should I cooperate after you busted into my house and trashed the place?"

Maybe after we've dealt with the rhino problem? He sounds like an interesting character. And Axel / Lily are still out in the yard, Soren got thrown back outside.)

Axel winced as the two traded blows, then stumbled to his feet, tucking the shotgun under one arm. "Keep him away from her!" he shouted, sprinting across the yard to Lily. He bent down breathlessly. "Come on, he's after you! We need to to hide you somewhere!"

Marcus tried aiming his revolver through the fire, but it was no good - the fire prevented him from getting a clear shot on Adrian. Through the haze, he saw the fleeing figure toss something towards him. At the last second, he recognised it at a flash grenade and threw an arm over his face. Even through the shielding, his vision flashed white.

When he lowered his arm, Adrian had vanished. "Don't run! Get back here!" he roared. A loud groaning drew his attention upwards, and with a crash part of the ceiling collapsed in front of him. Marcus swore loudly.

He had to escape the club, but Adrian hadn't seen the last of him.

Before the rhino could speak, his eyes rolled into his head and he fell over. A smoking hole had appeared on his temples, and blood leaked out of his nose.

"So sorry about that," spoke a newcomer, a tall wolf in a crisp black suit. He put a long thin lethal-looking instrument back in his breast pocket. "Mr. Extasis is what we call a 'loose cannon' at the Bureau. We don't appreciate loose cannons. They don't tend to get results. Luckily, it seems Greg was...shall we say?...one day away from retirement," he smirked.

He bent over and snapped something onto the rhino's collar, and the body was promptly vaporized. "I am very sorry for the distraction. You will be reimbursed in full. Would twelve thousand dollars cover the damages to your apartment?"

The next populated room contained two individuals in grey unisuits, who both leapt to their feet when they saw her. She dispatched with both before they could trip a silent alarm.

Emilena was sure she was in the right place this time. The words on the computers were still encrypted, but it was a cypher she recognized from her research on the latest cryptographical advancements. With her rudimentary understanding of the cypher, she accessed their databases.

Without wasting time, she filled a hard drive with everything she could collect. Then, curiosity got the better of her, and she spent far longer than she should have locating the files on her orphanage. With trembling fingers, she began to read about her past.

"Hey. Turn around slowly, and we may ask you who you are before we kill you."

A lithe androgynous figure in a catsuit had two large-barreled revolvers pointed right at her chest. The emotionless expression and use of the royal 'we' identified it as a Strain, a shadowy race of mercenaries who sacrifice everything for cybernetic upgrades, and have dedicated their lives to killing for pay and spending it on improving their cybernetics.

"I would rather die than submit to an abortion of nature like you!" she hissed, and he replied by blasting both of her hands. She cried out and her weapons went spinning onto the floor.

Without further ado he re-cocked his safeties and prepared to fire again.

Lily wasted no time racing away with Axel, leaving Soren alone with the wolf.

Soren crossed his arms. "Okay first off, I want some answers. Why did this man break into my house and tear apart my kitchen? And who are you people?"

His HMD warned that his exoskeleton's batteries were running low but he ignored it for now.

Sanjay leapt from the rooftop he was on and onto a repulsorcart. He quickly magnetized the gripping soles on his clothing as the vehicle sped through the skies. Once the vehicle landed, he'd head to the "suburbs", hitch a ride and disappear.

Adrian dodged around another another chunk of debris falling from the ceiling, rounding a corner to see the Strain menacing Emilena. In a heartbeat, he darted between them, drawing his sword and facing the mercenary.
"You. You're a Strain... How the hell could you choose to do that to yourself. To sacrifice your humanity for power...you're a monster."
He said coldly, then turned to Emilena.
"Emilena. Listen. This place is coming down around us, and we're gonna have to get our of here."
He said, smiling softly at her.
"Also, that outfit looks good on you."
He chuckled...

"Hey, there's another guy down there!" Axel said, pulling Lily over to the window, his nose pressed up against the glass. "Looks like some kind of spy or something..."

After running from the rhino, he'd helped her back into Soren's house through an open window, then lead her upstairs to hide in the bathroom. When he heard talking outside, Axel had crept forward to look down cautiously.

He craned his neck. "I don't see the big guy anymore, but he was looking for you." He swallowed. "We really need to find out who you are. And fast."

Marcus coughed raggedly, his lungs filling up with smoke. The cave-in from the roof had blocked his route to the door and he darted his head around, looking for another exit. The windows were small, but Marcus thought his large frame should just be able to squeeze through.

He skirted past a flaming table and made his way over. "Help me.. please..." A small voice said behind him. Marcus turned around and saw the drunk he'd been talking to earlier lying on the floor, a chunk torn from his leg. "I can't move, I think I've been shot..."

Marcus sighed and took a step towards him. Grabbing the man by the scruff of the neck, he started dragging him towards the window, ignoring his cries of pain as his leg bumped against overturned furniture. Stooping to pick up a chair, he threw it as hard as he could against the glass, shattering it. He heaved the drunk through, then followed, squeezing himself out.

He landed in a grungy alley, next to the injured drunk who lay amongst the jagged shards of glass. "You should call an ambulance. You're losing blood," he said, looking down at him.

The drunk writhed in pain on the floor, clutching his leg. "I don't have a phone... please..."

Marcus grunted. "Not my problem," he muttered, as he turned around and made his way down the alley.

Marita and roase soon came upon the drunk, whose rose recognized as a regular at the strip club. his leg was missing a chunk and blood was pooling out of it. ' Hold still' Marita said as she pulled out some gauze and a bandage. marita usually carried a small first aid kit with her, fortunately fr the drunk, she had brought it woth her. she wrapped the area of the wound tight with the gauze then pulled out a small vial of rubbing alcohol, which would be used to sterilize the wound. the gauze soon was crimson red as it absorbed the blood, but at least the drunk was no longer bleeding out. ' mr gittsun?' Rose asked the Drunk. " we'rre heare to help you. ' just put your arms around mine and mariotas shoulders and we'll help carry you out of there, until we can call an ambulance.' Not one for small talk, the Strain fired both cylinders, reloaded, and prepared to fire again. He prepared electrically charged bullets so they'd lethally shock if blocked with a sword.

Emilena had a very hard time of it, but managed to get her damaged hands to complete the download, remove the chip, and wipe the database behind her. Dropping to the floor, she used Adrian's distraction to grab her sword.

"This was all a big misunderstanding," the wolf agent assured. "We're on the search for a dangerous fugitive, and Mr. Exstasis got a little carried away. We were only supposed to ask if you knew anything about this individual."

He showed a picture of 'Lily North,' a pristine headshot that looked like it came out of a company personnel bio. "She is a danger to others and herself, and needs psychiatric help. It would be for her own good to come with us. Anyone who helped us locate her would be amply rewarded."

"Of course," smiled the wolf. He made to leave, but noticed the burnt workshop. "Good Heaven! Whatever happened there? That doesn't look like Mr. Extasis was involved."

He stepped forward and examined. "This was almost certainly caused by arson," he noted. "As I'm sure you've figured out as well. Mr. Almaya, the government takes care of their citizens. I can promise you that I will personally divert manpower to finding out who burnt your warehouse and reimbursing you for the damage...as soon as I'm not so preoccupied with finding the missing fugitive..."

He smiled, hoping Soren caught his drift.

Lily nodded. "We should investigate that sticker from my boots first chance we get," she agreed. "Assuming I survive this man's visit..."

Every one of Adrian's strikes rang true, and the Strain found himself a quadruple amputee in seconds.

Staggering forward, Emilena held her sword in both mangled hands and plunged it into the Strain's neck, for a particularly unsatisfying kill.

"Let's...go--" coughed Emilena; the room had filled with smoke. He way back to the strip club was almost certainly unusable. Nobody she'd ever met before would have bothered to try and rescue her from a burning building.

"Don't worry, Soren'll get rid of him," Axel reassured her. He watched as the wolf made to leave and then stopped to gesture at the ruined workshop. "Come on, get out of here!" he muttered.

He flicked his tail impatiently, and accidentally caught a row of bath product bottles, knocking them off the side of the bath with a loud crash.

Gittsun winced as Marita's grip hardened. "That's quite a grip you have there..." He watched as black smoke poured out of the club's cracked windows and flames occasionally flicked outside. "Well, Mr. Almaya?" The wolf waited. "It's not a difficult question. If you know anything about the missing fugitive, there's a 1 million dollar reward for her safe apprehension. We only want to give her the therapy and rehabilitation to live a normal life. And in addition I would be honored to help you discover who burnt your warehouse, and aid in their apprehension."

The wolf's smile widened as he heard the crash, but he didn't take his eyes off Soren and otherwise made no indication that he had heard it. "If you can't help, I'll just have to continue my investigation into these matters alone..."

Emilena slipped the mask on and breathed pure air. Her eyes still stung and her ash-choked fur reeked of smoke, but she could see the outside of the burning club.

"We must be gone before the other police arrive," she said urgently, for she heard all-too-familiar sirens in the distance. "My apartment is too far away, and I no longer have the key. Do you have a dwelling or elsewhere we could hideout in?"

Soren pondered for a moment. The million bucks was awfully tempting and he knew nothing about Lily. At the same time, he realized Axel had decided to help her ó and betraying his friend was pretty much a dick move.

He made up his mind. "Sorry. I have better things to do than help you deal with a potentially dangerous fugitive."

Soren then turned around and headed into his house through the ruined back door. He groaned as he realized that the sun had begun to peek through the smoggy skies.

Sanjay waited until the repulsorcart's engine shut off and then slithered down the vertical side. Luckily, the men driving the vehicle were too busy in charging the vehicle's batteries and getting something to eat to care about the figure that just slithered behind them.

The Cobra scowled as he realized he was in a nasty truck stop. Empty vials littered the ground and armed drones flitted overhead in the smoggy sky. A large electronic billboard advertised the latest model hoverbike. Two women ó one an Augment ó loitered outside. Both of them had the unnaturally blue eyes that came with the use of carboxzyal ó AKA Bliss ó a drug once developed for memory enhancement but withdrawn once it was found to be incredibly addictive. Prostitutes favored it for its alleged ability to enhance sexual prowess.

Feeling the need to relieve himself ó and decidedly not wanting to enter the truck stop, Sanjay ducked behind a scraggly bush next to the building.

Axel was holding his breath, his face frozen in a grimace. When Soren turned back to head inside the house, he let it out with a whoosh. "I think it's alright, that guy must be leaving..." he told Lily. To be sure, he kept peeking over the edge of the window to see what the wolf would do next.

Gittsun nodded along with Marita, sneaking a quick look at the waitress' chest. "Sure you can come, the more the merrier!" he grinned, apparently pleased with the way things had turned out. "Any of you got any booze? Because... uh, my leg is starting to hurt again."

The wolf shook his head sadly. "A shame. Oh well. Not your fault you don't know anything...But we all must make sacrifices in the name of global protection. You have 24 hours to change your mind in case you recall anything you may have forgotten. And I must remind you, every minute we are getting closer to finding her. And we will do whatever it takes for her apprehension."

With one glance, he glanced around and noticed Axel. Giving Axel his largest, toothiest grin, the wolf turned and left the building.

"Well? It's not a particularly difficult shot! Fire!" snapped Emilena, losing her patience. "Would it help if I rubbed your--!?"

She broke off. She was about to sarcastically suggest she do something incredibly inappropriate, supposedly to 'motivate' him. She had never made a lewd remark about her own actions before. Concerned about what was happening to her, she merely remained silent and waited for him to take the shot.

Lily was huddled close to Axel. She wasn't brave enough to look herself, but she shivered as she listened to Axel's interpretation of the situation.

no, i have no booze' marie the waitress said ' All the booze we had went up in that' she motioned back to the fire. ' booze is the last thing you need right now anyway' Marita said ' those bandages are the only thing keeping you from bleeding out. if you bump into anything, the bleeding will start all over again. so its best to be sober.
 - rose paused as they continued down the alley, flickering red and blue lights showing that the police had arrived to investigate the fire.

Adrian looked at it, then blushed slightly as his overlay processed what the drug dealer had stuck Emilena with.
"Uh...Emilena? I think I know what you were stuck with..."
He said softly, then stepped around in front of her.
"We'll look into it when we get to my hideyhole. How about that?"
He said with a grin.

Soren headed back into his ravaged apartment and into the basement where he plugged his exoskeleton into the charger. He found his shotgun in the foyer where it had been discarded by Axel in his haste to get Lily away from the agents. After checking to see it was still intact, he kept it in hand as he headed upstairs.

A yawn escaped his mouth as he willed his muscles to keep moving. After trudging upstairs, he flung open his bathroom where he found Axel and Lily.

A scowl was on his face as he kept his shotgun aimed at the ground. "Okay, I want the full story on this." He thrust the poster that the Wolf agent had given him at the two. "I know that y'all are hiding something from me and it cost me thousands of dollars in damage. Now out with it!"

The open blister pack of moziafil -- a powerful drug that allowed one to function perfectly for over a day with minimal to no sleep -- on the countertop tempted him. But he decided against taking it right now because the act of reaching over and grabbing the pack might give the two a distraction that they could use to disarm him. Moziafil had very few side effects and was non-addictive; unfortunately it was extremely expensive. The six pack he had on the counter cost him nearly a month's pay to buy. All this was due to the long and complicated synthesis, expensive feedstocks as well as the very low yield.

Axel blinked uneasily at the shotgun in Soren's hands. "Soren, wait, we aren't hiding..." He trailed off as he noticed the picture being held out to them. "Hey, that's you!" he exclaimed, looking back at Lily and pointing.

He leaned in to look at the name printed on it. "Lily North. That's a nice name. Ah, I mean it's nice that we finally know what your name is!" He said quickly.

Looking back at Soren, Axel's eyes widened. "What did that guy want? You can't trust him, he's a spook!"

"If you say so," Gittsun groaned. The flashing police lights in the distance made his head hurt, so he looked down at the floor. "Maybe they'll catch the bastards that did this."

Marcus grunted as he hoisted himself onto the rooftop. When he'd heard the police sirens approaching, Marcus had used a dumpster to boost himself up, clambering up the side of the building it faced against.

A sharp pain ran up his right arm, and he glanced down to see a cut running up his coat. Shrugging off the sleeve, he saw a deep laceration running up his arm, the sleeve of his T-Shirt stained red. Blood tricked down his fingers to drip on the gravel floor. One of Adrian's attacks; he hadn't felt it in the heat of the moment. I'll deal with it later he thought, as he watched the alleyways below from the darkness.

"I don't I..." Lily stammered. "I told you already! I don't anything more than I've already told you!"

She scrambled nervously away from the gun. "If you want me to leave, I will! But I don't know if I did any of the crimes listed on that poster!"

Emilena sighed. "Acceptable..." was the only thing she could think to say. The day's event were beginning to take a toll on her stamina. Plus she realized that running naked through back alleys was not the best way to reach a healthy retirement age. She merely kept her eyes peeled for movement as they headed closer and closer to Adrian's hideout.

Adrian glanced back, then took off his long jacket, stopping to wrap Emilena in the coat.
"Here. You looked cold, plus you were giving everyone a free show. Didn't think you wanted that."
He said gently, giving her a small hug before picking her up and holding her bridal-style.

"I honestly have stopped caring..." was the mumbled reply Adrian received. The neurocotic was doing a number on her endocrine and nervous systems, and she was rapidly succumbing to a state of semi-consciousness now that she didn't have to walk.

Adrian gently ran a hand over her face as he ran down another street, stopping at what appeared to be a dilapidated building, where he, never even breaking stride, tapped a hidden panel open with a shoulder.
"Hey. Hey we're here, Emilena. We're safe now. C'mon, stay awake..."
He said worriedly...

Soren rubbed his temples with his hands as he let his shotgun dangle from his sling. "Look, I'm not going to turn y'all into the feds but I really want answers. Both about who Lily is and what the f--- was that guy doing ripping my house up and who the hell burnt down my workshop. I mean, they used gasoline -- something only used by classic car enthusiasts -- to burn down my workshop!"

He took a breath. "Look, sorry about my outburst before. I'm having a rough day. Now if you both could leave me alone for a moment so I can take a shower see if I have clients."

Lily silently nodded, face pallid.

Once Soren had left she hugged Axel. "I want to know all of that too..." she sighed. "I've got to know what I did. We've still got that sticker, how soon can we analyze it? And shuld we leave? I don't think Soren wants us here..."

Emilena groaned and shuddered, her eyes remaining closed. The strangest visions were fluttering across her mind's eye, psychedelic visions of harsh colors and imaginary sensations racking her entire body....and that need was just getting worse and worse...building up inside her with no way of release...

How? she thought desperately, how do I make this feeling go away?

Axel hugged her back, his fingers lightly brushing against her hair. "I don't think we can go anywhere else. Soren's a good guy, he won't throw us out. He just needs time to think."

He looked over her shoulder, down the corridor leading away from the bathroom. "I think he has an office around here somewhere. We can use his computer to go through that sticker." Breaking from the hug gently, he started leading her down the corridor. "Soren!" Axel called over his shoulder, "We need to use your computer for a second. I won't mess around with anything, I promise!"

"The one in the office is not connected to the Internet. That's a record keeping conputer. You can use the one in the living room!" Soren called back.

He quickly popped a pill of moziafil and soon felt his tiredness melt away. Stripping off his clothing, he leapt into the shower and began scrubbing himself down.

Adrian laid Emilena on the bed in the saferoom, placing a hand on hers as he tapped a code frequency into a wall panel. Almost immediately, a screen flashed to life, a balding older male with glasses appearing in the frame.

"Ah, Adrian. What seems to be the trouble? I presume it pertains to the young woman currently on your bed, nein?"
He asked, to which Adrian nodded.
"Yeah. Seems she got stuck with a Neurocotic by some drug dealer, and she doesn't seem to be handling it so well. Talk me through getting her out of it."
He responded, worry evident in his voice. The man in the glasses nodded.
"Ja, ja. I will. Firstly, you need to get that patch off her. Tug it off, und zat should stop the hormones and chemicals. I already synthesized a counter-agent, but you'll need to administer it via mouth-to-mouth contact. It should halt the damage and keep it from spreading any further. Most likely, your fraulein will awaken at that point. However, she will likely need your help to...ah...release some of the tension."
He said, chuckling as a vial of clear liquid slid out from a panel in the wall. Adrian took it, nodding as he removed the patch from Emilena's body before biting the cork holding the vial shut, tipping it into his mouth before leaning in and kissing Emilena, letting the contents of the vial trickle into her mouth...

Lily followed to the computer in the living room. "I'll let you handle this," she said, standing crouched over beside his chair. "If I was a computer person, I'm not any more..."

(OOC: From this angle, he can slightly see down her shirt. If he does so, he'll notice the tattoo has changed; the white O has become a 9.)

Emilena's eyes snapped open and registered Adrian's face. At that moment, everything became crystal clear; she realized what she needed, and it repulsed her. But she couldn't stop herself.

Grabbing him by the collar, she pulled him down and kissed him passionately back. Digging her claws into his back, she tore his shirt off of his back in ribbons and wouldn't let him pull away.

Rolling over so that she was on top, Emilena broke the kiss, panting. "Don't you dare try and stop me!" she hissed as she threw Adrian's overcoat aside and ground her bare body against his. Groaning, she blinked through teary eyes and shuddered as a mix of carnal passion, dominance, and anticipation coursed through her.

Feeling the need to assert her control, she slashed his pectorals with her claws and snapped her jaws a centimeter from his face, but her glare quickly faded as her body spasmed again and her eyes rolled back into her head.

After a long time, Emilena was getting frustrated. Any release was fleeting, the pressure inside her abdomen returning with every pulse of her chafing. A low growl escaped her throat as Adrian's cold belt buckle scraped between her thighs, and she realized he wasn't fully undressed yet.

Unbuckling his pants and flinging them aside disdainfully, she briefly broke her stride and froze blinking when she saw what presented itself underneath. Sure, in her line of work she'd seen nude males before, as well as static images or film, but she'd never even thought about getting this close to one...or even having to......

Not wanting to give her prey the satisfaction of seeing her brief flounder, she brandished her claws threateningly near his new exposed weak point. "I expect perfect cooperation from you!" she threatened, snapping her jaws at it for good measure.

"You better!" she snarled, expecting betrayal at any second. She ached for release, and her life had taught her that if she wanted something bad enough, somebody would find a way to stop her from getting it.

Grasping it without any regard for gentleness, she positioned herself above him, shuddering both with trepidation and anticipation of maybe, finally feeling release. Taking a deep ragged breath, she plunged downward.

Immediately she cried out, and squinted shut teary eyes as a lance of pain shot through her legs and midsection. She reflexively arched to pull out, but when she did so some of her pressure evaporated...just a sliver. Moaning, she gritted her teeth and plunged through the pain again. And again.

For at least fifteen seconds, every muscle in Emilena's body tightened and the pressure in her abdomen crested through her, setting her hair on end.

In time her scream lessened to a long low moan, and her exhausted muscles completely lost the ability to support her. She flopped on top on her partner, tongue lolling to the side and her heart thudding loudly in her chest.

Axel nodded. "I've got this," he said, rolling his shoulders. Pressing a switch, the screen flickered to life and demanded a username and password. He blinked and his eyes changed from blue to red, glowing slightly. The screen changed to a wall of text and numbers and after a second Axel found the information he needed, tapping it into the keyboard and hitting enter.

When the desktop loaded up, Axel connected to the internet and pulled out the bar-code sticker. "Alright... so if we just put this in..." he muttered to himself, typing in the numbers without looking away from the screen. After a short pause the jumble of number and letters returned, and he was able to interpret them: an expensive store called J. Goldsmith's.

Axel whistled. "You got them from J. Goldsmith's? Very fancy..." He loaded up the webpage. "Hmn, says here that the closest store is on Boarding Avenue. That's on the other side of the city, right? Next to the hospital?"

He looked back up at Lily, leaning over him. As he did so, his eyes passed over her chest and lingered for a moment, his breath catching. Then he noticed the tattoo and his eyes widened, changing back to their normal vision in his shock. "What the hell?! Uh... Lily... your tattoo's changed..." Axel spluttered.

As the carnal instinct wore off, Emilena's natural standards started settling back and she realized what she had just done. The nickname Adrian had chosen didn't help. "Don't call me by that name!" she exclaimed, leaping off the bed and instinctually covering her breasts. She glanced around for clothes, then realized she didn't have any.

Lily was having a similar reaction to seeing the tattoo. The white O had changed to a 9. "What does that mean? How did it even do that?" She tried to scratch it off with her hands, but succeeded only in inflaming the surrounding skin.

"Right. Sorry. There are some clothes in the closet over there. Don't have any bras or panties, so you'll have to go without. If I were you, I'd pick a thicker shirt. Oh, and the bathroom's through that door, if you feel like... Cleaning up.
He said softly, pointing to a pair of doors...

Emilena returned from the bathroom looking slightly nauseous. "I can't believe I just..." she trailed off. She couldn't decide whether to hate the man lying in bed before her, or to admit that she would be immeasurably more unhappy had he not been available. Plus, she was going to need his help again in the future...

She sighed. "I am sorry..." she said for the first time in her life. "Lena was the name of my mother. And I burned an orphanage down so that I'd have no ties to my parents of any kind. I don't...like remembering what I know about them."

He said softly, smiling gently...

Emilena sighed. "The nicest thing they ever did for me was put me in that orphanage so I didn't have to grow up with them..."

She lay back down on the bed. "I didn't know anything about my parentage until after I became a police officer, when I had the authority to demand the orphanage's files. My parents were Augmented soldiers. They freelanced as mercenaries, and in 2030 got rid of me to continue their hedonistic, libido-filled lifestyle..."

She trailed off, wondering whether to omit the worst part. Finally, she added, "...they were brother and sister..."

He said softly.

"Be grateful," she replied bitterly. "I would love to never think about my parents again...idly participating in a violation of nature like that..."

She trailed off. "We need to reconnect with that hacker so we can read the files obtained from the Electric Sheep. Though I used to know that code. I suppose I could do it myself..." She yawned. "...tomorrow morning."

As much as she didn't want to touch him, the bed was small even for one so she had no choice. After all, she reflected, pressing against the side of his body, That feeling is already coming back...I better get used to this...

"Yeah...Sleep well, Emilena. I'll talk to you in the morning."
He whispered softly. As he lay there, he finally allowed himself to think back.
"Heh...it's a funny thing. All these times we've worked together...and I never realized it before, but...I fell a little in love with her each time...And now..."
He sighed softly, shutting his eyes and drifting off slowly to sleep...

Sanjay zipped up his uniform when he was done. He noticed two huge men standing behind him.

"Can't you give a guy some privacy when he's taking a piss!" the Cobra snapped.

In response the two approached him. "The Purifiers would like to have a word with you."

"Yeah, here's my reply, f--- off." He then turned to slither away when he felt a sharp sting and he suddenly started to feel drowsy. Reaching behind him, he removed a dart.

One of the men bent over to pick up the incapacitated snake but Sanjay used the last of his strength to belt the man across the temple with his stolen bottle of vodka. The man grunted and then fell, unmoving, to the ground.

The last thing Sanjay heard was his bottle shattering as his grip loosened thanks to the drugs working on his body.

"Hey, stop that!" Axel said, firmly but gently grabbing Lily's wrists to stop her scratching. "You're just going to hurt yourself. Look, we made a good start here. We know what your name is, even though the rest of the stuff on that poster was crap. And we know where you were a couple of days ago."

He gave her what he hoped was an encouraging smile and held her hand. "I know I haven't known you long, but I can tell how brave you are. Don't let something like this-", he indicated her tattoo, "-scare you. We'll get to the bottom of it. I swear."

Axel stopped. "You look exhausted, maybe you should get some sleep. Tomorrow, we'll head across the city and get some answers."

Marcus ran, panting. The wailing of the police sirens was still there, but much fainter. He was getting away, but it was getting much harder to move; his arm had gone numb, and his legs had started aching. Blood continued to drip from his fingers, spattering on the floor and forming a gruesome trail for the cops to follow. Goddamn him, it won't stop bleeding...

He turned left into a narrow passageway and knocked into a pair of dustbins, sending them crashing to the floor and almost falling over.

Gittsun looked at Marita curiously as they walked. "You know, you look awful familiar. Have I seen you before? Maybe on...ow... Maybe on TV?"

Lily didn't resist. "You're right...just, can you promise me we can trust Soren?" Her exhaustion was returning quickly as the adrenaline rush died down. Regardless of Axel's answer, she allowed herself to be led to the guest bedroom and lay down. In a few moments, she would be asleep.

Adrian lay awake still, having barely been able to sleep at all. Somehow, something about being close to Emilena like he was had been stirring memories. Vague flashes of a past that had been taken from him.

"Why do I keep seeing these things? It's like...being around Emilena is bringing something back...are these my memories? I see...a family? Is that my family? Did I have a sister? No...not a chance. I was told that I was abandoned at that orphanage alone. But...what if they lied?"
He wondered to himself, staring at the ceiling in the dark...

"I promise. I won't let anything happen to you." Axel sat next to Lily, watching her breath slow as she drifted into sleep.

He looked at the alarm clock on the bedside table. 4:00AM. Axel knew it would be more polite to stay up and thank Soren again, but he felt completely wiped out. Just a few hours... He lightly brushed aside a lock of Lily's hair from her face, then settled down, between her and the door. Closing his eyes, he fell asleep almost immediately.

Soren got out of the shower and dressed.

He headed to the kitchen to cook himself a meal of catfish sausage and hash browns. As he slowly savored his meal, he recalled that bent cop who tried to beat him up for no reason at all.

Sighing, he got up and adjusted the shotgun slung across his back. The faint chemical smell of the air wafted through the door. A quick adjustment and a scrap of metal shoved into the hinges kept the door from falling inwards. The now exposed pipes and wiring in his kitchen could be fixed later.

Sitting back down, he finished his meal and placed the plates in his dishwasher.

Seeing as he was wide awake and he wasn't open for another three hours, he headed to his office and decided to check his records.

As Soren looked over the spreadsheet, he scowled. In the weeks before his workshop was destroyed, there was a spate of people coming in with severely damaged augments but totally incongrous backgrounds. Like an office worker who had somehow had all five fingers on his light class 1 arm completely ripped off. Or a waitress who somehow managed to get every servo-wire in her class 1 hand torn out.

Usually, he saw damage like that to laborers sporting class 2 augments and who had a bad encounter with heavy machinery. Furthermore, now that he examined the pictures, the damage looked almost deliberate.

He scratched his head and continued looking through his records to find any other discrepencies.

As Marita and Rose finished changing Gittsun's bandages, the sound of a heavy boot step alerted them to the figure that came striding around the corner a moment later. The tall, muscular Hokkaido wolf glanced at them, hand resting uneasily on the hilt of his sword for a moment before relaxing.
"Well...what do we have here?"

Gittsun stared at the wolf's sword as he lead them down the dark passages. It looked sharp enough to slice through steel.

"So... who are you?" He asked uneasily, holding Marita and Rose a little ahead of him.

Marcus reached the end of the alley he'd been following and leaned out cautiously. He looked out into a main street, but at this early time of morning it was deserted. Movement across the street caught his eye. Through a convenience store window, he could see a young human stacking shelves, preparing for the day ahead.

Perfect. He couldn't risk going to a hospital, but it looked like he'd be able to fix himself up DIY-style. He crossed the street, making sure nobody was looking, and pushed open the door while slowly pulling out his revolver.

The man inside heard him and looked over his shoulder. "Oh, sorry sir. I'm not open to customers yet."

Marcus closed the door and flipped the bolt lock shut. "I'm not a customer."

The wolf paused for a moment, then looked back over his shoulder.
"My name is Kojuuro, and I'm offering to help you. That's all you need to know at the moment."
He said softly, turning back around, making his way down the street towards the hospital...

Soon enough, the huge neon sign announcing the city hospital loomed over the group. It wasn't too soon; the new bandage Marita had wrapped around Gittsun's wound was already beginning to soak through.

"I'm not... ow... gonna complain about the morphine, that's for sure," he announced to the others, wincing.

Marie followed Maritas and Rose inside, as they helped Gittsun into the hospital. ' we ned a doctor' Rose said to the clerk ' Hes missing a chenk out of his leg. he'll need a skin graft to repair it i think..
- a couple of doctor, one of which was an anthro eagle and the other a large saint Bernard, came up to them ' wheel him in into Room 107 for surgery' the Saint Bernard sad as he easily picked up Gittsun and laid him on a stretcher..

Just then, a repulsor-ambulance landed and some EMTs wheeled in a Shetland Pony. The pony in question was an Augment mare ó on her forehead, just below her mane, was a spiraling metal horn. Just like that of the mythical unicorn.

IV tubes ran into her arms and an oxygen mask was placed on her snout. She gave no movement or sound as they hustled the mare into the detox unit.

One of the nurses, a lean Fruit Bat sighed as he adjusted his HMD. "Anne again?"

An Augment orderly shrugged his metallic arms. "Judging from that 'radio horn' implant and her tan coat...yeah."

"What'd she do this time?"

"Looks like she OD but we don't know what."

The nurse sighed. "The doc'll order a full tox screen."

Gittsun stared at the strange pony as she was wheeled past, then groaned as the Saint Bernard knocked his leg. "Watch it will you?! Thanks girls, if it wasn't for you I probably would've died back there."

"And thanks to you too, uh... Kojuuro. Will you guys be hanging around? Maybe I could treat you all to a drink when I'm fixed up?"

"Bourbon? A girl after my own heart," Gittsun chortled. "How about you, furball? You've got 3 hours to spare, don't you?" he called out to Kojuuro as the doctors started to wheel him away.

Kojuuro chuckled a little.
"Hm. I suppose I can spare the time. After all, I highly doubt that the person I'm looking for will go anywhere in that time."
He said, grinning...

Gittsun snorted. "You sure do love being mysterious. Guess I'll see you all after they slap a band-aid on this, then." The orderlies wheeled him away, pushing the gurney through a set of double doors. Gittsun banged the back of his head. "Watch it I said! I'm not airline luggage," he complained, his voice growing fainter as he was taken away.

Soren rubbed his forehead as he shut down his computer. A sip of his now cold tea and the headache from the pill he took melted away.

Heading up to his guest room, he knocked on the door. "Lily, Axel! Do you want breakfast?"

Doctor Gibson injected carbizal, a general purpose antidote to most synthetic depressants into Anne's IV line.

The Human at the store gulped as he laid eyes on Marcus.

"What do you want? The cash? The cigarettes? The drugs? Just take them!" he blubbered out.

All night Lily had one neverending dream; she was floating in green gel. She could vaguely see dark figures walk past her occasionally, in pristine white rooms outside the gel. She reached out and touched smooth glass...and with a jolt realized her hands were grey and clammy, with six long slender fingers on each hand.

When Siren called in, she awoke in a cold sweat, hyperventilating. Anxious not to let Axel see her like this, she took several deep breaths before she woke him up. "Hey," she smiled at him. "Siren wants us for breakfast. How did you sleep?"

(OOC: Last night, both of her eyes had been normal brown. Today one of them has a red iris. Your call if Axel feels like bringing this up.)

Emilena woke up in a similar state; the pressure in her lower body was giving her a stomachache. After attempting meditation for a few minutes, she gave up and mounted Adrian instead; she can't possibly function today in this state. Besides, she thought, panting, he might not even wake up...

The moment Emilena mounted him, Adrian cracked one eye open, blushing.
"Mmmph...G'morning to you, too, Emilena."
He chuckled softly...

Axel stirred, yawning and stretching an arm out. "Hmn. Breakfast? Wha-" He realised where he was and sat up, blinking. "Oh! Yeah, I slept great. How about you? Are you feeling okay?"

He smiled shyly at Lily - but his smile faltered slightly when he saw her iris. I can't tell her now... she won't be able to deal with it... But jesus, what the hell's happening to her?!

Marcus stepped forwards and leveled his revolver at the human's head. "Not them. I need a stitching kit and alcohol. Move. Call for help and I'll break your neck."

"Shut up..." groaned Emilena, not interested in explaining herself.

Thirty minutes later she shuddered, gave a large sigh of relief, and rolled off him when she felt he had also finished. Getting off the bed, she walked to his personal computer and, without bothering to sit down, plugged in the flash drive she had stolen.

The computer blithely informed her the file was corrupted. She cursed. She'd removed the flash drive before it was done converting. With the destruction of the Electric Sheep, all of that data was gone forever.

She walked back to Adrian. "We lost all the data. All we've got is what I can remember...and I remember thinking at the time how odd it was that there were so many references to the city hospital."

Lily smiled. "I'm feeling a lot better! I think the sleep really helped, I was running on steam near the end there!"

She hugged him. "I know I've said it already, but thank you so much for your help. I think you're the main reason I'm still going at this point. I actually feel like I have a friend right now...and that feeling is so nice!"

She got to her feet and opened the door, smiling at Soren. "Sorry to keep you waiting! We'll come down soon for breakfast!"

Adrian nodded, still in the process of pulling on a new shirt. Once it was over his head, he looked over towards Emilena, then, without warning, wrapped his arms around her in a warm hug.
"Alright. Well, it looks like that'll be our next destination, won't it?"
He said softly...

As he watched Lily cross the room, Axel felt a surge of affection run through him. I have to do whatever it takes to protect her.

When she opened the door to Soren, Axel nodded at him. "Hey. Yeah, breakfast sounds great."

Title: Into the Black

Before today, Emilena would have stabbed a man who hugged her the way Adrian just did. But as Emilena prepared to suppress her murderous urge, instead she found that it never came. Adrian had more than earned her trust...actually, it was rather alarming how many opportunities he'd had to kill her while she completely defenseless. Somehow, it had become second-nature for her to trust him, which almost felt like something of a nice break from standard operating procedure.

Still, she broke the hug. They had a job to do. "The easiest way to get in would be to pose as patients. Your left arm is injured, as are both of my hands. We'd have to pretend to be interested in getting the wounded areas cybernetically replaced," Hell, he might legitimately be interested in doing just that, she realized, "but I will simply refuse the surgery at the last moment. It still gets us through the door and into the back rooms, where we can investigate."

At breakfast, Lily ate ravenously. With her strength back, she quickly put it to good use replenishing the energy she'd lost on her 3 days on the lam.

"So," she said, in between biting into her fifth grapefruit, "We need to get into Mantreads Shoe Suppliers, but I can't be seen in public. I was thinking we disguise ourselves as Sapaar."

The Sapaar were a religious group that had fully integrated into modern society. The men behaved and dressed pretty much like anybody else, but the women dressed head-to-toe in a silver reflective tunic that covered even the head, representing their subservience to the modern world. "I figure we don't have silver cloth floating around, but the poorer ones use white. We could cut up a sheet or something!"

She seemed remarkably chipper, especially considering her subdued behavior the night previous. She was still riding the high from a good night's sleep, and from the reminder that not everyone in the world was indifferent to her plight or wanted her dead.

Soren passed a plate containing scrambled eggs, catfish sausage and hash browns to Axel. Some fresh fruit was in a communal dish.

"I may have some heat resistant silver cloth left over from a project of mine," Soren added. "Let me go look."

Anne quickly regained consciousness as the drugs in her system were neutralized "Hey, what the hell's up this time?"

"You're in Stephenson Memorial Hospital," an orderly said as he got a wheelchair ready.

"I know that! What I wanna know is how the f--- I got here!"

The orderly passed her the doctors report. She scanned over it and scowled. "That does it, I'm finding the prick who sold me that bad batch and dumping him off an elevated walkway."

She threw the blankets off the bed and got to her feet, only to suffer a sudden attack of dizziness that forced her to sit down.

A nurse ran into the room as Anne's act of getting up had tripped an alarm. "Ms. Phoe, the drugs have not been fully neutralized yet." He looked at the patient care directions. "Speaking of which, it's time for your carbazil injection."

The Human quickly fetched the alcohol and the sewing kit. "Look just take it and leave me alone! Please!"

(OOC - Sapaar? Darwin's Soldiers reference?)

Axel gratefully accepted the plate Soren offered him, and sat down at the table to eat it. He was hungrier than he thought, wolfing the food down in moments. As he swallowed the last bite he looked at the two uneasily.

"It's not just the cops we have to look out for - what about that wolf? I think he knows something's up here."

Marcus indicated the counter with the point of his gun. "Put them there." As the human did so, he noticed a tiny supply closet behind him. Holstering the pistol, he grasped the man by the front of his uniform and effortlessly lifted him up into the air with his good arm.

Marching forwards, he tossed the human into the closet and slammed the door shut after him, jamming a box under the door handle. "Stay in there and shut the f--k up." Marcus turned around to face the sewing kit, shrugging off his coat.

He said softly, smiling at Emilena...

Soren returned with a small 2 inch by 2 inch patch of silver cloth. "Sorry, that's all the silver cloth I could find. It's aluminized carbon nanotube fiber. I had some left over when I repaired a foundryman's arm."

He then sipped his tea. "Anyways, I noticed something funny with my client records."

(OOC: Haha, someone actually read one of my stories? I figured nobody would catch that. I like the word because it has two a's in a row.)

"Thanks, but we need enough cloth to cover my entire body," Lily told Soren. "We can make do with white cloth."

Lily nodded at Axel's caution. "To be honest, that's why I want to get out of here as soon as possible. No offense to you Soren, but I suspect that wolf knew I was here. He's going to be back, and I don't want to be here when he does..."

"Yeah, you violate your body once with machinery, might as well do it again," she responded flippantly. She then softened when she thought those words over. "I'm sorry, I shouldn't talk like that," she said, returning his hug in a form of apology. "It's not your fault you had to become an Augment. And at least it'll keep you useful."

She left to take a shower. "I'll just have to take of myself while you're under. The hospital requires general anasthesia for all cybernetic surgeries."

"I uh...hope you don't mind...we can save a little time this way..."

He said, blushing more...

Emilena smiled. "I like efficiency."

It was not a two-person shower, but considering she'd used a sanitizing towel her entire life she considered it practically luxurious.

She looked with confusion at the soap, shampoo, and body wash dispensers. "Speaking of efficiency, could you show me how these work? I admit I'm not very experienced with this method of hygiene."

He said, tapping the shampoo dispenser.

"And this one is for...well, for your privates and your feet and stuff."
He said, indicating the soap...

Soren finished his meal. "I don't really trust him either." He used a cloth to clean off some grease from his HMD's lens.

He heard the doorbell ring. "Must be a client," he muttered.

He pushed his chair in, donned the work clothes he had hanging from a rack and headed to the door.

Soren patched his HMD into the house's cameras and the hastily patched door became transparent. He scowled; he didn't recognize this client. But nevertheless, he needed money. He disengaged the locks and opened the door a bit. "Hello, you've reached Almaya's Augmentation Repair and Mod Shop. How may I help you?"

(OOC - The person he meets isn't a client. It's a Purifier. Your call on what the Purifier does, but no kidnapping or killing Soren.)

Axel heard the slight shift in Soren's tone as he opened the front door. Tensing up, he gripped his fork a little tighter and shared a puzzled glance with Lily.

Staring back at Soren was a small man dressed in a denim jacket and jeans. Greasy blonde hair hung matted over sleep deprived eyes, and as Soren cracked open the door the stink of sweat and alcohol wafted through the gap.

"What the hell is wrong with you, huh? You know how easily we could kill you? What, you can't take a f----n' message?!" As he spoke, his voice scratchy and hard on the ears, he leaned on the door. His weight started to force the door inwards.

Still slightly puzzled, Emilena leaned over awkwardly, trying to get her head underneath the shampoo dispenser. "Watch out!" she snapped, since he was entirely in her way. A few seconds later she lost her footing and sent both of them spilling onto the shower floor with a crash.

Lily froze with fear, halfway through eating a toasted bagel. This proved to be a bad decision when she choked on it and began coughing uncontrollably.

He said, chuckling softly...

Soren leaned hard on the door, trying to keep the man outside. "Axel! Lily! Get my gun!" he barked. For someone so small, the man was surprisingly strong.

He turned to the intruder. "What's my problem!?" he thundered. "What the f---'s your problem!? Busting into hard working folks' homes to destroy livelihoods for another rush of drugs? Now GTFO!"

Axel leaped up and started to run to Soren's aid, but stopped when he heard Lily spluttering and turned back to see her choking. Torn between the two, he paused. Then he dashed back to Lily's side. "Crap! Hang on, Soren!"

Hooking his arms around her stomach from behind, he started heaving, tightening his grip and releasing repeatedly. He had no idea what he was doing, but he'd seen it done in the movies so he was praying it would work.

"Drugs? You're even more stupid than I thought Almaya." He laughed, a harsh barking noise, and released his hold on the door. "You don't need your bitches to help you - this was just a... friendly warning. We're watching you." The man spat at Soren's feet.

He stepped aside, letting Soren see the symbol he'd sprayed on the path leading to the house; a red, cracked gear. "What happened before was just the start. Keep it up and you'll really know who you're f----n' with."

Lily swallowed a painful gulp of water. "Forget about me!" she spluttered. "Go help Soren!"

Emilena groaned. "I'm not cut out for showers," she decided, and crawled out onto the bathroom floor. "Don't take too long," she said, drying off. "Earliest surgeries are bookable thirty minutes from now, and using public transportation that's about how long it'll take to get there. I want to be looking through hospital files as soon as we can."

He said with a small smile...

Soren's HMD scanned the cracked gear emblem. Several news reports and a Wikipedia article on The Purifiers appeared.

"It can't be," he whispered, his jaw dropping in shock. "The Purifiers."

He scowled. The shock was soon replaced by burning rage. "You intolerant f---s are the ones who destroyed my workshop!? Get out before I call the cops or my friend returns with my gun!"

Post by: bushwacked on October 19, 2013, 02:40:48 AM

When he saw Lily could breath again, Axel backed out of the room. Soren's shotgun was propped up against the wall, and he snatched it up as he dashed out.

He reached the entrance and joined Soren's side, aiming the barrel down at the man. His nose wrinkled as he caught a smell of him. "I'm here. Who the hell's this?"

The purifier raised his eyebrows when he saw Axel appear, unimpressed. "I'm someone you and everyone like you should be afraid of, ---hole."

He looked back at Soren, his lips curling up into a grin. He raised his arms mockingly and started backing away. "Remember what I said. We have eyes everywhere." His grin vanished as his eyes flicked back to Axel. "I'll make sure they kill you slowly."

Shoving his hands into his jacket pocket, he turned around and sauntered down the path, around the corner and out of sight.

Marcus grunted as the needle poked back out of his flesh. He pulled it and the thread trailing behind tightened, sealing the deep cut. He bit the needle free and tied a small knot in the thread, then looked down at his handiwork. He was no surgeon, the stitching running crudely up the length of his arm, but it would do. He poured the bottle of alcohol over the wound with a hiss of pain and stood up.

The right side of his T-Shirt had completely soaked through with blood, so he'd stuffed it in the waste disposal. Stalking over to a small stand with cheap white shirts, he selected one which was around his size and buttoned it on, trying to decide his next move.

Soren scowled. "It's one of those Purifier nutcases. Apparently, they're the ones who burnt down my workshop."

He then sighed as he rubbed his forehead, being careful to avoid knocking his HMD off. "He's serious about the threat too."

"F---, I'm gonna have to basically go nomadic or into hiding."

"A Purifier?" Axel lowered the gun once the man had walked away. "I guess that explains why he didn't take a shine to me..." He laughed nervously, but his stomach was turning itself in knots. He knew enough about them to know they weren't a joke.

He put his hand on Soren's shoulder, trying to make him feel better. "That guy was probably full of it, Soren. It'll be okay." He looked around anxiously. "But maybe we should close the door, just to be careful."

"I'm not interested in finding out. And I don't want him going after my clients," Soren said. He shut the door and with several heavy clicks, the locks engaged.

"Speaking of which, I have something weird to show you about my client records."

He then headed back to his office.

Aaron fumed as his coworker, an Augment with a laser cutter arm attachment was busy cutting some rebar to size.

Despite his neutral expression, his flattened ears conveyed his displeasure as he carried an armload of rebar to the worker.

"Anything else, gleamer?" he spat.

The Augment scowled but said nothing as he continued working.

"Aaron! Cut that s--- out!" a Fruit Bat shouted from five stories up where she was riveting some girders in place. Seeing as she had no more rivets, she leapt from the high perch and spread her arms, letting her membranous wings catch the wind as she glided down.

Aaron said nothing as he went to get more rebar. A crane nearby lifted a group of Avian ironworkers to the top of the building. Avians and Bats were prized as ironworkers owing to their utter fearlessness about heights and their wings. While their wings were not strong enough to let them fly, they were more than capable of gliding.

Emilena looked with disdain at the clothing selection available to her. "The other thing we're doing is going to the clothing store next door. I am most certainly not adopting your fashion preferences."

Lily darted into the kitchen and grabbed the largest butcher knife she could find. Swallowing her fear, she burst into the main room to see Axel and Soren staring at an empty walkway. "Who-who was he? What did he want?"

He ran a hand through his white hair. "You feeling better? Soren was going to show something weird he'd noticed in his records. Want to come see?" Axel nodded his head in the direction of Soren's office.

He booted up his spreadsheet and scrolled to the area where he found the most discrepencies

He scowled as laid eyes on the letters and numbers on the screen. Soren was now newrly certain that the Purifiers were mutilating his clients' augments to send him a warning.

Soren pointed to the screen. "Axel, Lily, notice how the previous weeks before my workshop was burnt have had a spike of people coming in with augment damage? And I mean real serious damage. But here's the thing, they're office workers or other low impact jobs. I'm seeing them with damage that I'd usually see in laborers who gotten involved in industrial accidents. Finallyó" Soren bought up a picture of a class 1 augment with all of its fingers removed, probably by a laser cutter. The caption below indicated that it belonged to a lab tech from Pelvanida Cybernetics "ósome of the damage appears deliberate."

He templed his fingers. "I suspect the Purifiers are attacking them and deliberately mutilating their augments to send a message."

"I don't mind the practicality," Emilena wrinkled her nose. "It's that they all have the faint smell of motor oil."

Nevertheless she squeezed into a khaki long-sleeved shirt and trousers, and clipped her retracted katana into a utility belt. "Let's get out of here."

"I was actually going to go sew that Sapaar suit out of our bedsheet," Lily glanced down the street hoping to get a glimpse of who had intruded shortly before. "But please be careful! I don't want you getting hurt by these thugs..." She hugged him for reassurance. "You're like the one thing I have."

Lily held her tongue when she observed the reports. "Is there any way I can help, Soren? You've helped me so much already."

"You're right, something does seem off," Axel said, nodding. "There must be something we can do. Hmn..." He focused on the lab tech who's fingers had been removed.

"Well, we know where this guy works; 'Pelvanida Cybernetics'. I guess the simplest start would be to ask him? Maybe once we've investigated the clothes store for Lily, we could check that place out?"

Emilena cocked a single eyebrow at the keys, but followed Adrian nonetheless.

Lily lay a hand on Soren's shoulder. "You're right. Something's up. I'm not in a position to be giving you suggestions, but I don't think it's safe for you here anymore. Would you like to come with us to the clothing store for a quick look into my purchasing records, and then we can go into hiding together?" she smiled. "I won't lie, it's not an easy life...but it's easier when you're not alone."

Soren templed his fingers. "I won't bow to those Purifier freaks," he growled. "I'll keep my business running, no matter the cost."

He was interruped by the doorbell ringing.

Bringing up the view from an external camera, he saw who was at the front door. He sighed. "Her again!?"

He scowled and went up to the door, throwing on his work uniform/armor. The bolts unlatched and he opened the door, revealing a rather beautiful Shetland Pony mare with a metallic horn sticking out of her forehead.

"Hey, Soren, I got something for you," she said.

"What is it this time?"

Anne pulled out a neurotester, a device intended to make sure the augments were working correctly and the nerves were properly hooked up to the augment. "How much for this?"

Soren looked it over. It was clearly a well made ó and expensive piece of equipment. And he needed to replace the stuff that he lost in his workshop fire. "Fine. I'll give youó" He noticed a riveted tag that read "Property of Stephenson Memorial Hospital". "Hey! I ain't payin' you s--- for stolen goods!"

Anne scowled. "What the hell!? You were perfectly willing to buy augments from me, even though you damn well knew where I got them from!"

"Stealing medical equipment from a hospital is heavily investigated by the cops. Stealing augs...not so much."

"You know what? Take it then!" Anne left the neurotester at the door and walked away to steal more stuff to hock.

He sighed. "Well, Lily, I'll have to come with you now to go and return some stolen goods." He picked up the neurotester and carefully put it in an unmarked cardboard box.

Axel opened a corner of the cardboard box, and gasped when he looked inside. "Hey, an N18! This is one of the best neurotesters out there! Couldn't we just keep it for a bit..." He trailed off when he saw Soren's face. "Alright, I guess not." He closed the box with a wistful sigh.

"Well, we should probably leave as soon as soon as we can. Let's find some cloth for Lily and get out of here before more weirdos show up." He didn't mention how he and Lily probably counted among the weirdos.

The hospital was a flurry of activity; doctors and orderlies passed patients who were wired into holo-networks, passing the time virtually until their turn came. As this was the section for cybernetic upgrades, there weren't as many wounded as elsewhere in the hospital.

The genders here were separated due to the sensitivity of the surgery's nature. With a single "Take care of yourself," Emilena left Adrian's company and headed back.

"You're just in time for your appointment," smiled a skunk receptionist. Emilena wondered what augments she had; it wasn't visually apparent. "If you could please fill these out and return them, we'll wheel you back!" the receptionist finished, handing over a stack of papers.

Fifteen minutes later Emilena was led to a surgical room, where she was asked to remove her clothing and put on a drafty gown. The nurse also wiped her wrists down, checked her vitals, and said, "The doctor will be here in ten minutes. Make sure you are lying down and ready!"

Emilena had no intention of following through with the surgery; this was her opportunity to sneak into the private recesses of the hospital. Once the nurse had left, Emilena began picking the lock to the surgical room.

Minutes later she was asleep. Had she carefully read the papers before signing them, she'd had noted that this hospital applies the anesthetic through wrist wipes.

Markus received a call on a private channel, a channel reserved for a certain very powerful individual.

Adrian sat in the waiting room, glancing at the wall before another nurse, this one a male feline, walked in.
"Mr...Kibagami, correct? There was a package delivered for you earlier. With instructions to install it promptly."
He said, motioning for Adrian to follow him. Adrian looked suspiciously at the feline for a moment, then nodded, following him into the surgical suite where, much like Emilena, he signed the requisite forms and was led to the room where the surgery would take place...

Soren carried the box to his garage and placed it in his repulsorcar. He disconnected the charging cable and took his position in the driver's seat.

"Lily, Axel, get in!"

Anne whistled as she rooted through the electronics waste bin at a local computer repair shop. Most of what was in her bag were circuit boards that were wortheless ó save the precious metals in them.

She smiled; those masters degrees she had in genetic engineering and industrial design were being put to good use...just not in a way her parents would like.

Rattling was heard as another bum rooted through a trash can.

Axel held the car door open for the now covered Lily, and hopped in after her. "C'mon, let's get going."

When Marcus heard the beeping coming from his pocket, he reached in and pulled out his phone, snapping it open. UNKNOWN flashed on the screen. The corners of Marcus' mouth tightened. It was him. He tapped answer. "Zeroth."

"Yes." Never using the same number for any extended period of time, the distorted voice on the other end was responsible for the majority of orders issued to members of the Purifiers. Nobody knew his real name, and only a very select few, including Marcus, had ever seen his face. The alias he went by for the time being was 'Zeroth'.

"I found Kibagami, at the 'Electric Sheep' of all places. Engaged him, but he managed to escape."

"We know. There are 15 patrons dead. 15 non-augmented patrons. It's... inconvenient."

"I'm sorry," Marcus said, the words bitter in his mouth.

"It doesn't matter. In fact, it seems you might have another chance. Kibagami's booked himself into the city hospital to have repairs carried out on his arm. We don't know if he knows about our operations there or not, and there's a chance he's working with someone outside. If this was anyone else, one of our insiders would be sufficient but as this is Kibagami... Go to the hospital, and rendezvous with one of our contacts, he'll be waiting for you. And on no accounts can you kill Kibagami. Not yet." The line went dead as Zeroth hung up.

Marcus replaced the phone in his pocket and snatched his jacket up off the counter. To the left of the cash register was a set of car keys belonging to the human locked in the cupboard. He picked them up and let himself out of the shop.

(OOC: I figured the person who gives Marcus orders would be all illusive with code names and whatnot, but if someone wants to give him a real name go ahead)

The engines started as the garage door opened and the repulsorcwr lifted into the midafternoon sun. Luckily, Soren lived on the outskirts so air pollution wasn't too bad.

He merged into one of the skyways and set the autopilot. The man adjusted his loose fitting dark blue pants and a grey long sleeved shirt. Despite their plain appearance, the clothing was impregnated with shear-thickening fluid as well as shock dampening fibers, allowing him to absorb blows that would otherwise cripple or kill him.

"So Lily, Axel, know how to get that neurotester back without them thinking I stole it?" Soren asked. His HMD was providing real time data about the environment around him. The repulsorcar lurched slightly as Soren dropped in altitude to avoid something thrown by two passing hoverbikers.

"Anyways,

Adrian stirred, the anesthetics steadily wearing off as he brought his new arm up to take a look at it. The sleekly-molded black metal was nearly indistinguishable from his own fur. Flexing the fingers of it experimentally, he grinned as the indicators flashed into his overlaid systems, projected into his mind like images in a manual. Noting the new integrated weapon systems, he froze when he noticed the installation of a tracking device that was keyed to an unknown frequency. Glancing around the room, he quickly undid all the external armor plates, reaching into his arm and tugging the device out, wincing in pain as he did so. He looked at it, chuckling a little.

"Heh. Purifiers.   Always selling us Augs short, seems like."
He said to himself as he crushed the device in his hand. Noticing that he wasn't hooked up to any vital monitors or anything of the sort, he immediately rolled out of the bed, standing up and preparing to go find Emilena and his gear, the panels on his arm sliding shut as he did so...

Emilena stirred as well. Her mind immediately went into hyperdrive. I wasn't supposed to get knocked out? What the hell? Oh god, they didn't...

Her eyes fluttered open and she moved her hand to her face. She could feel it. Cybernetics merged seamlessly with her fingers, and her palm felt hollow and tinny. She became aware that she was wearing a hospital gown and laying on the surgery table, with some familiar blood stains dotting the sheets.

She tried to get up and saw a rabbit orderly leap away in fright. "Who the hell are you?" She snapped in fright, trying to leap to her feet, but her left leg was cuffed to a railing.

The bunny drew a long syringe and stabbed at her knee, but thanks to her double joints she bent out of the way, then took that opportunity to kick him square in the head with her right foot. As he hit the floor, she spotted her personals on a footstool out of reach. She tried to shake her foot free, but of course that didn't work.

The bunny leapt to his feet, this time with a dart gun. She recognized the make; it contained powerful horse tranquilizers. She slapped him with her intravenous fluid bag and caused his first shot to wildly miss.

As he reloaded, Emilena grasped the foot cuff in her fingers and tug. To her amazement, her new Augmented hands tore through the thin metal, easily freeing her foot from the warped cuff. She hardly had time to reflect on this, as the bunny had reloaded. Leaping forward, she delivered a hard right hook to his chest, sending him staggering but stable. He was tougher than she thought.

Diving through the curtain, she found herself in the inner recesses of the hospital. Her pursuer giving chase, she raced down the hallway, attempting to locate Adrian or an exit, whichever came first.

Lily shook her head cluelessly. "You could tell them the truth," she suggested. "That someone left it on your doorstep. They may figure no thief just returns stolen goods. You could even gain a reward. Just, make sure I'm not there when you talk to them. Last thing I need is to have the theft pinned on me..."

Post by: bushwacked on October 26, 2013, 08:08:06 AM

Axel nodded. "That makes sense. You don't look like a thief - and that reward could come in handy if they actually give one."

Marcus watched Adrian through the CCTV in the security room. His contact, a jackal sat on a chair in front of the monitors, zoomed in on the image as Adrian pulled the tracker free. "He found it," the jackal complained.

Marcus swore under his breath. "I told you it wouldn't be enough. We've tracked him before, he knows what one feels like." He balled his fists, his claws digging into his palm. He couldn't let this opportunity go...

"What the hell..." The jackal muttered as he noticed something in one of the smaller screens. He changed the image on the main screen. It changed to a female fox struggling with one of the orderlies. Her face turned briefly towards the camera, and Marcus frowned. She seemed familiar...

His eyes widened as he recalled that she'd been the dancer at the Electric Sheep, who'd turned up right at the same moment Adrian did. She didn't seem to be much of a dancer... and now they both just happened to turn up at the hospital together? It was too much of a coincidence.

Marcus snatched the tracker up from the table next to the contact and loaded another chip into it. Though a tracking chip would give the best signal if inserted into an augmentation, a chip shot under the skin would still be useful. He slipped out the door, hiding the tracker under his jacket.

Adrian grinned, quickly hacking into one of the hospital's terminals to gain access to the patient records so that he could figure out where his articles had been stored, as well as where Emilena had been taken. Quickly bypassing the locks on the code, he rapidly located Emilena's room, then the patient storage where his articles had been taken. He cracked his neck, then turned to one of the cameras, flipping it the bird as he turned and ran off...

A cybernetic surgeon, apparently halfway through an operation, walked out of a room in front of Emilena. He gasped in surprise when a tranq whizzed past the approaching fox's ear and embedded in his neck.

Emilena took the opportunity to dart into the open door. An anaesthetized bear appeared to be halfway through receiving cybernetic arms; the left one was still sitting on the preparation tray. Emilena snatched it up and beaned her assailant in the face when he entered the room. Wailing on him for a good ten minutes, she finally stopped when he looked less intact than the bear behind her.

Fishing the tranq gun out of the bed, she froze when a security guard walked idly past the door, then froze and looked wide-eyed at the scene within.

"Uh, I can explain?" started Emilena, but he quickly drew a pistol and she was forced to shoot him. His shots went wide as she continued her exodus, but he still radioed in as he passed out. "Emergency...rogue patient armed with a gun and dangerous...two, maybe three people dead...send backup to the Upper Extremities wing..."

Adrian looked back at the unconscious guard behind him, hearing the announcement pertaining to an armed patient escaping, chuckling a little to himself.

"Couldn't wait to get out of here, huh, Emilena?"

He muttered to himself, then rolled his eyes as another guard rounded the corner, gathering an electrical charge in the palm of his new arm before lunging the guard, slamming the crackling palm into the guard's sternum, the electricity coursing through the unfortunate guard and dropping him to the ground as Adrian made his way through the halls to the Upper Extremities Wing...

In the meantime, Soren parked his car on the street. He shut off the engine and opened the door to the passenger compartment.

"I'll be back in a bit," he said as he picked up the box.

"Hey man, you got some cash?" an intoxicated bum went up to Soren. His right arm, once a top of the line augment was tattered and patched up with wire, scrap metal and who knows what else scavanged from the streets and garbage cans of Lanthae.

"Sorry. I'm busy now."

Anne Foe emerged from an alleyway with a messenger bag full of assorted electronics scrap that she could process and sell for a few creds.

"Okay. Be careful, Soren." Axel watched through the windscreen as Soren walked away, then turned to Lily. "So, you want to check out that clothing store? There's no way they'll be able to recognise you."

Marcus' shoes clumped against the hard, polished floor as he made his way briskly down the corridor. He turned left, right and left again, following the signs to the Upper Extremities ward, where the camera had shown the fox making her last stand.

As he neared the ward, he slowed his pace. Things were made more complicated by the fact that he wasn't able to kill either Adrian or his companion - but he had to make sure a tracker stayed on them. When he neared the double doors leading to the ward proper, a group of four security guards rushed past him. Marcus leaned against the wall, looking nondescript. After they pushed through the doors, he waited a few seconds then followed behind them, making sure he wasn't seen.

Soren made his way to Stephenson Memorial Hospital. When he got there, he noticed it was cordoned off by the hospital's surprisingly well armed and armored security guards.

"Hospital's closed sir," a guard said. Judging from the shape of the guard's helmet, all that could be said was that the guard was canine.

Soren raised an eyebrow. "What happened?"

"There's been a shooting inside. One of the new Augments apparently took violent exception to what she was given."

Soren straighted himself up. "Well, anyways, someone dropped this off at my house." He pulled out the neurotester and showed the label to the guard, who scanned it with a wristed mounted reader.

"Thank you." The guard handed him a credit chit worth 35,000 credits ó a little over a quarter of the neurotester's value.

Soren sighed and tucked the credit chit into his pocket. As his booted feet splashed in the dirty water that pooled on the sidewalks, he passed by a street vendor selling some noodles.

He shrugged and bought three take out boxes of vegetarian stir fried noodles and three herbal sodas. All in all, the meal came out to 220 creds.

Soren trudged back to his car. Using his pocketknife, he dislodged a drug vial that had gotten stuck in the tread of his boots.

"Lily, Axel, we can't go to the hospital. Some Augment apparently didn't like what they got...so they're taking it out on the staff." He placed the bag containing the three plastic takeout containers and drinks in the backseat. "Anyways, I got a reward for turning the thing in and some lunch."

(OOC - FYI, credits are the currency in this 'verse. They're equivalent to about $0.10. Why yes, I did base the exchange rate on the HK dollar.)

Lily put her hand to her mouth. "Are they calling for backup? Is everything about to be swarming with police officers? Let' s do this quick, Axel!"

She practically dragged him to the clothing store.

The clerk smiled when he saw them. "Can I help you with anything?"

Lily grew silent and held Axel's arm. Sapaar women were supposed to be seen and not heard.

Emilena traded shots with a pair of guards, who decided to retreat. These guys weren't prepared for combat at all, she thought smugly, as she rolled under a gurney and the pursuing guards raced past her. I can keep this up all day...

"Analena, get the hell out from under that!"

One of her fellow police officers was down the hall, gun drawn. The bandage on his thumb suggested he happened to be a patient in this wing. "Throw your gun out first!"

Emilena tried to shoot him but he blasted it out of her hand.

"What are you going to do?" She spat, holding her arms up in a martial arts pose.
The officer narrowed his eyes. "What the hell is wrong with you, Analena? Brownstreet is here, and he's gonna tear your ass off for this."

"Brownstreet is an idiot!" Emilena shot back. "I've stumbled across something bigger than you could ever understand. What that old mule wants doesn't matter. Now if you're gonna shoot, better do it now."

She turned away and dashed down the hall. The officer sighed and watched her go. Then he grabbed his radio and called Brownstreet at his office downtown.

Axel smiled at the clerk uncomfortably and smoothed down his ruffled T-Shirt. He always felt self-conscious when he talked to people he didn't know.

"Ah, yes. I wondering if you could tell me anything about this purchase..." He handed over the now slightly worn bar code sticker. "It's from a pair of boots that were bought here maybe about a week ago." He paused. "Well, I was actually hoping you could tell me if you remember anything... unusual about the person who bought them," he said, hoping the clerk hadn't seen the news lately.

As Marcus moved down the evacuated corridor, he heard the fast, slightly lighter footsteps of a female somewhere ahead of him, around the corner. They were coming towards him.

Looking around, he quickly ducked into an empty operating room and pressed himself against the wall as the fox ran past. Marcus waited for a couple of seconds until she sounded sufficiently far way, then lightly opened the door and leaned out, clicking back the tracking gun.

He could see her nearing the end of the corridor, about to turn the corner. He took aim and fired, the tracking gun making a tiny clack as it fired the tiny tracking chip. It sank painlessly into the back of her leg. Now I just need to get out without being recognised by the police.

Soren stuffed the food into the backseat of his repulsorcar and sprinted after Axel and Lily.

He sighed and sat down on a bench. He looked at the wares. Most of the shoes were simple sneakers or boots reminiscent of combat boots worn by the assorted soldiers and security guards.

Anne unlocked the door to her apartment and entered with her satchel of old electronics. Her "apartment" was filthy, but not with organic detritus. Instead, there were scraps of metal and other electronics waste scattered everywhere underfoot and the entire apartment stank of solvents, grease and heated metal.

Turning on some loud industrial rock to drown out the noise of the shredder, she fed the unusable circuit boards into the device until that that was left were a pile of fingernail sized chips.

The Shetland Pony transferred the material into a large fermentation vat. This vat contained a mix of genetically engineered bacteria (stolen of course) that would break down the bioplastics used in the circuit boards and concentrate the precious metals into large nodules. For safety reasons, the bacteria were engineered to require a purely synthetic amino acid to live and reproduce. She pumped in the nutrient solution and headed back to her couch where she could maybe light up a joint and relax.

Two marijuana plants sat in the corner of the room under some grow lights. Anne smiled as she laid eyes on the plants. Sometimes, it was good to go back to the basics.

"Well, let's see." The clerk entered his database. "Ummm...they were purchased by a Lily North on Monday at 11:38 am. Would that be you?" He asked the wife pleasently.

Lily shook her head frantically.

"Then I'm afraid that is all I may do for you," the clerk stated, when Lily said in desperation, "It's my daughter! Our Lily has been missing for a week, and this is the last place we knew she was! Please!"

The clerk paused. "Oh dear, I am so sorry..." He continued clicking. "All right. She did not pick them up in the store. She had them custom fit and delivered to an address. Do you live on 125 Tingham Lane?"

"Er, yes. that's where we live..." Lily muttered.

"All right. I wasn't on duty the day, but let me check our security footage," the clerk brought up security feeds and rewound. "Please don't mention to my manager I'm doing this...ah, here we are."

On screen, Lily walked into the store, wearing her gray dress and a hiking belt, rugged backpack, and carrying a walking stick. She was chatting happily on a cell phone, and looked perfectly content.

She spent several hours trying on hiking boots, selected her favorite style, and then checked them out. Then she left, heading to the ice cream parlor next door.

"She's so...normal..." breathed Lily, amazed.

"I'm sorry this wasn't much help..." the clerk sadly shut the feed down. "I truly hope you find your daughter. Please let me know if there is anything I can do."

Emilena sent a scalpel spinning into an overhead light, drenching a guard-filled hallway with backness. She used the distraction to kick her way through.

Unfortunately, someone with a taser got a lucky swipe, and she fell to the floor, incapacitated for only a few seconds. But it was long enough for half of the guards to dog pile her.

Unbeknownst to her, she was close to the main hallway, and had almost reached Adrian...

Adrian rounded the corner to the main hallway, and, the instant the lights went out, moved in. As the security forces began to go at Emilena, he darted into the melee, grabbing two guards and tossing them aside, both hitting a wall with a dull thud, blacking out immediately. The remaining guards turned towards him, but he grinned, activating the embedded neural augments he had. In a flash of red fur and movement, he darted into the middle of the group, then lashed his right leg out, smashing a guard across the face with a vicious kick and sending him flat to the floor. The next guard met a swift backhand, another two falling to a rapid spinning kick. Without any hesitation, Adrian grabbed Emilena and slung her across his shoulders, kicking away another guard who got cocky enough to rush him, then took off down the hallway, dodging bullets in the process, before finally spotting a window and leaping through it...

Not too far away, Kojuuro sat on a rooftop, and, hearing the commotion from the hospital, looked over the side of the roof just in time to see Adrian break through the glass of the window and take off running...

Staggering out of her apartment, Anne headed out into the street to get lunch.

Her head swam from the enhanced marijuana she grew but she felt euphoric.

The mare went up to a street vendor selling some burgers. The Wolf in front of her walked away with his catfish burger. Her upper lip curled in the characteristic flehmen response of equines when she smelled the food.

"One tempeh burger," she said, leaning over the counter.

The Human shrugged and quickly handed a wrapped package to her. She swiped her credit chit and went on her way, not caring that she had planted her steel shod hoof on a discarded soda can.

(OOC - Anne's going to be a constant pain in the ass for Soren, Lily and Axel. She'll eventually redeem herself.)

Soren had been looking over Lily's shoulder. "Hmm, judging from the external feed it looks like she went to the ice cream parlor next door."

He turned to the clerk. "Can you tell us anything else about her? Any records?"

(OOC - not sure how they can check the stuff at the back of the store. Maybe a distraction so Lily can sneak in?)

Soren nodded.

Axel nodded along with Soren. "Yeah, there must be something else..." He frowned. "Was there anything special about the shoes she bought? She spent a while picking them out." He put a comforting arm around Lily and put on his best 'concerned' face. "We're very worried about our little Lily-Flower."

As Marcus looked around for an exit, he heard gunfire coming from the corridor the fox had run down. Cursing, he turned back and sprinted towards it. I can't let anything happen to her... not while she still has the tracker... As he neared the corner and peered around, he caught a glimpse of a dark shape kicking aside a guard and leaping through a window, clutching the fox he'd tracked. Kibagami...

The guard Adrian had kicked stumbled to his feet and to the window, aiming his pistol. Marcus charged up behind him, seizing his head and twisting. The guard's neck snapped before he could fire a shot. Marcus let his limp body fall to the floor and looked out to see Adrian sprinting away. The corner of his mouth turned down slightly. He never thought he'd be stopping anyone from killing Adrian.

One of the guards had a high powered rifle with a scope slung across his back. Marcus bent and yanked it off his body then ran for the stairway, heading up. He'd have an easier time covering their escape from the roof.

(OOC: Never mind about the shoe thing, got an even better way to show it)

"Nothing you don't already know," said the clerk. "5-year Premium member of our VIP Club, which qualified her for some of our finest footwear. The pair she picked was a designer brand, built for comfort over endurance. Nothing unusual for her age and social status."

Lily opened her mouth to speak again when someone unknown said her name.

"Lily, my dear. Please come home..."

On the store television was a pasty-faced human, civilian clothes, very normal. He was tear-stricken. The broadcast appeared to be part of the citywide television network.

"Lily, if you can hear me, this is Danny. Please come home, I'm worried about you. Our kids are worried about you...There are doctors here, they want to help you, you're not well. You can get better...you can be with your family again. If you love us...please come back..." The man broke off, overcome by emotion.

The clerk suddenly looked incredibly suspicious.

Emilena groaned and her eyes fluttered open. "I can walk...let me down..."

The guards had hit her rather hard, and she was moderately disoriented.

Several police cars roared into focus. They hit the brakes hard, forming a roadblock, and filed behind the crusiers' protection, pistols drawn. "Freeze! Drop the patient and put your hands up!"

Soren's hair stood on end. "Thanks for your help," he said to the clerk.

Heart racing, he quickly looked around for cops or anyone else who might pose a threat. Luckily, only pedestrians seemed to be outside. The area around Stephenson Memorial Hospital was one of the few areas to be at actual ground level. Once one headed deeper into Lanthae, elevated walkways and stores built on them became more common.

"Lily, Axel, how about we have lunch in my car and we go pay one of my customers a visit?" he asked.

Post by: bushwacked on October 29, 2013, 02:15:15 AM

Axel's ears drooped, and his mouth opened and closed as he searched for something to say. When Soren thanked the clerk, he cleared his throat. "Yes, your help was very... helpful." He turned and walked stiffly out of the shop behind Soren, his arm still around Lily's shoulders.

"Yeah, I think lunch would be good," he said as they reached the pavement. Axel looked down at the white shape next to him. "You have kids and a husband?! Holy crap!" he whispered.

(OOC: Is Soren parked just by the shop? If he is then Soren could recognise Emilena as she goes into the shop while they're eating)

One of the police stood behind the roadblock clutching a megaphone. "There's no way out of here for you, so put her down now! Nice and sl-" The back of his head exploded as a shot rang out. One of the cops steadying his aim on the car glanced back and let out a cry. "Oh ----, we have a shooter-" There was another shot, and his head jerked sideways, his pistol skidding across the car bonnet as his body tumbled to the floor.

The rest of the police threw themselves behind their cars with shouts of "Take cover!" and "Sniper!" Far above, on the rooftop, Marcus watched through the scope of his rifle. He knew he could only take so many shots before they figured out where he was. When he saw the cops dive behind cover, he moved the scope briefly over Adrian and the female, resisting the strong urge to pull the trigger. "Come on. Get out of here."

Lily left wordlessly, already aware the clerk was rapidly retreating into the recesses of the store to do god knows what. She didn't say a word until they'd reached Soren's car.

"I don't get it..." she muttered, dazed. "A week ago, I lived a perfectly normal life. What the hell happened...?"

She tried to picture Danny, any memories of him or their kids. She came up completely blank.

"I don't remember that man at all...could he really be telling the truth? What if there are doctors who could help me...?" She turned to her two friends. "Could it be true?"

Emilena kicked the door to the clothing store open and dragged her incapacitated comrade through, eyes darting both ways nervously. Other than three civilians in a nearby car, nobody seemed to be around.

Adrian had been hit with a lucky EMP pulse, which shut down his cybernetic parts, which meant instant and complete loss of function when cybernetics were as ingrained into the central nervous system as his were. Emilena, luckily, was almost completely organic and managed to drag him almost as far as he'd carried her, to the other side of the hotel. They'd only succeeded because something was preventing the police from leaving the safety of their cars; Emilena didn't have time to pursue the issue.

She stored Adrian behind the counter. "You're all right, it'll wear off in a few minutes...probably..." she comforted him. "But while we have the chance, I'm getting some regular clothes."

As Axel climbed into the back of Soren's car, he heard a few cracks from somewhere close by, and the cry of raised voices. He assumed someone was letting off some firecrackers, and slid aside to make room for Lily.

"Look, it might be true... but I think we should take some time to plan our next move." He reached into the plastic bag and took out the three boxes of noodles, handing one each to Soren and Lily and opening his own. "They really want to find you, and until we find out why I think we should be careful. I just... want to make sure you're safe."

As he spoke, the dim image of someone dashing around the clothes shop caught his eye through the window, but he dismissed it, still deep in though about what to do next. "Who was this customer you mentioned, Soren?"

Soren swallowed his mouthful of lukewarm noodles. "Guy's name was Jacob Alytn. From what he filled out on his form, guy worked as a lab tech. Right now, I think paying him a little visit might yield some info on the Purifiers."

Anne staggered up to the car and leaned into the open driver's side window. "So Soren, are youó"

"Go away." Soren pushed her away and rolled up the window. He rubbed his forehead. "Anyways, got any plans on how to speak to Mr. Altyn?"

Emilena crept cautiously into the back of the clothing store, looking for signs of an employee. It struck her as odd the store was unattended.

Her keen hearing picked up movement in the Staff room. Putting her ear to the door, she heard a moment of dial tone, following by the person dialing a three-digit number, where the last two numbers were the same.

Her heart leapt into her throat. She could guess what number that probably was. Without further ado she kicked the door down and stunned the clerk with a judo chop to the windpipe before the call had finished connecting.

"9-11 emergency, how may I help you?" The phone asked.

Emilena disguised her voice as well as she could. "I heard something going on at the hospital, I think police officers should investigate."

"We are well aware of the situation, but thanks for letting us know! Can I help you with anything else?"

Emilena hung up and crept deeper into the inner recesses of the clothing shop. Grabbing the highest quality hiking clothes they offered, she checked them out using the clerk's master card.

"All right," she said to the still-unconscious figure. "Now we have to escape the city. They'll have most methods completely blocked."

She glanced outside and the car with three occupants caught her eye. Firstly, it had a small gray bumper sticker which allows it access to government cybernetic facilities; the owner but be either a worker or a contracter for one. Secondly, it had a huge trunk.

She smiled. "I think I've found our exit plan."

Title: Into the Black

"Uh..." Axel watched the mare stumble away then turned back to Soren. "Alytn. Oh, that's the guy who had his hand all messed up?" He flexed his fingers uncomfortably. "He worked at Palvanida Cybernetics, didn't he? That's a pretty big place, I don't think they'd just let us walk in to meet him. Maybe we could scout the place out, see if there's a back way in or something?"

Axel frowned and continued, "But, jesus, if we get caught breaking into a place like that... Especially you, Lily."

Marcus saw one of the officers pulling a radio out, probably to try and call for more backup. He put a bullet through it, scattering shards of plastic through the air, and snapped his cross-hair onto the officer, pulling the trigger. There was a heavy CLUNK and nothing else.

Marcus moved the scope away from his eye and looked down at the gun to inspect it. It had jammed. Cheap s--t. No wonder the police are losing their war on crime. He used the scope to quickly scan the streets, and couldn't see either Adrian or the woman.

With no more bullets raining down on them, the cops had started to cautiously emerge from their cover, pointing at his general direction. More of them would soon be here. I've done all I can, now it's up to them. And then we'll see who they work with... Marcus dropped the gun and ran across the roof, leaping onto the escape ladder and sliding down.

Lily was lost in thought. " Let's do it," she said. "Soren's been nothing but helpful to me; it would be unfair not to return the favor. If I can help solve his problem with the Purifiers, I can."

Emilena slinked up to the trunk, approaching from the far end of the parking lot. She recognized the make and model of the car; she remembered from her early days as a 911 phone operator that there was a rash of calls about breakins with this model because the windows weren't laden with translucent wires, meaning that a broken window doesn't trigger the car's break-in alarm system.

She grasped a tool purchased from the construction store across the street; a superheating conductor plate, no larger than a button, designed to boil large bodies of liquid quickly by rapidly exciting the molecules. It had a similar effect on glass, which had many of the properties of liquids.

She pressed the tiny button and the window completely liquefied, splashing down into the trunk. Unless they were paying attention to the rearview mirror, the occupants shouldn't have noticed.

Finally, she hurled a jagged rock over the top of the car, waited for it to hit the clothing store window, and flipped her and Adrian into the trunk while the occupants were hopefully observing the distraction.

"What was that?" Yelped Lily as the rock smashed through the window of the clothing store. She didn't even notice she'd wrapped her arms around Soren in fright and was almost strangling him.

Soren carefully disentangled himself from Lily and collected all the trash.

A minute later, he returned. He stuck the key in the ignition and was about to turn it when he recalled the Purifier's words to him earlier. Decidedly, not wanting to be a bombing statistic, he got out of the car. "Lily, Axel, I'm going to go give my car a once over to make sure the Purifiers didn't stick a bomb or tracker on it."

He got out of his car and popped the hood. Most of the space was taken up by the repulsorlift and thrusters. So far, he didn't see anything.

In his shock from the window smashing, Axel had accidentally dumped his box of noodles over his lap. Picking them off, he glanced around the car nervously. "A bomb? Soren's eye twitched as he recognized Emelina as the dirty cop who tired beating him up. He bodily dragged her out from the trunk of his car and roughly dumped her on the filthy street.

"I want to know what the f--- you are doing in my car!" he snapped.

Above him, an electronic billboard played a message from another anti-Augment group. This one warned about them stealing jobs. While it was true that Augments had pretty much replaced Baselines in manual labor, a lot of new jobs relating to augmentation repairs and maintenance cropped up ó and skills mattered more than implants.

Anne cheerfully whistled as she carefully cut off an Augment's arm, taking care not to cut into his flesh and bone ó not that it would have mattered since he was dead.

"Hey! Put your hands up! Augment theft is a crime!"

Anne slowly dropped her angle grinder and turned around. A cop had his gun pointed at her. She smirked. "Okay you caught me,"

"Hands behind your back!"

Anne did so and retrieved a credit chit from her back pocket. As soon as the cop saw the card, he smiled. "Actually, since this is your first offense, I'll let you off with a warning and a fine." The cop took the credit chit and left the alleyway.

Anne shrugged and continued cutting away at the augment. The cash she just surrendered to the cop was 750,000 credits ó nearly half of what she made last week. It sure beat the hell out of going to jail.

"Shut your damn mouth Mr. Almaya, I could have arrested you but I needed a lift out of town," she snapped. "This doesn't concern you."

She rounded on the newcomer, who continued to not be shooting her. "Every cop in the goddamn city is looking for us, what the hell is so important for your short-circuiting self to tell us now instead of once we're safely out of the city?! I expect an incredibly good answer or else I'll do everything in my power to find a sharp object and murder you with it!" To show her incredible frustration she spat on him.

Axel stared at the angry fox Soren had pulled out of the car, his mouth hanging open in confusion. "Who the hell are you?! Were you always back there?!" At least the wolf who she'd spat on didn't seem to be pointing his pistol at them anymore.

Around them, pedestrians on the sidewalk had started to stop and stare at them. From somewhere in the distance police sirens were wailing. This isn't good... He nudged Soren on the shoulder lightly. "I don't know what you've got going on with her... or why she was hiding from the cops in your trunk... but we're getting a lot of attention here. Attention's bad for us right now."

When he felt Axel's nudge, he scowled and pushed Emelina into the filthy ground. He got into his car and sighed. "She's the cop who tried beating me up when I first called to report my workshop was on fire."

He started the engine and lifted off. "Let's go pay Mr. Altyn a visit."

"Emilena...What happened? I blacked out..."

He chuckled...

"Well, we knew that already, actually..." Emilena muttered through gritted teeth, practically seething, "as a matter of fact, we'd solved that problem before your butted your stupid--"

"You're on the run from the police too?" Asked Lily, who hadn't gotten in the car.

Emilena flashed her eyes at her. "I thought Sapaar preferred to be seen and not heard," she shot back.

Lily's gaze softened. In Emilena, she saw a lot of the emotions she'd felt yesterday; panic, fear, uncertainty, and a complete lack of help to turn to.

"Come with us," Lily offered. "We'll give you passage out of the city."

"You'll what--?" gasped Emilena.

Lily gave her friendliest smile. "I know what it's like to be on the run. I know how scary it is. Let's trade stories; maybe we can help each other."

Movement in the corner of his eye caught Axel's attention, and he turned his head to see Adrian sitting up in the boot. He jumped slightly as he recognised him from his rooftop a few nights ago. "Oh, you're here too." Today had turned out to be such an odd day that he wasn't exactly surprised.

"Listen, Emi. Right now we don't have any other choice but to take what we can for help and find out who or what is behind all this. So for now, can you please put your grudge aside? Otherwise, this is gonna get messy, and not in a good way."
He said, then, finally noticing his phone ringing, fished it out of the pocket of his pants, flipping it open.
"Adrian here. What is it?"
He asked calmly...

"I'll put my grudge aside when he starts being helpful," Emilena folded her arms defiantly. "All he's done so far is point a gun at me and ruin what had been a perfectly executed stowaway. The Sapaar woman has been more helpful than anything he's done."

"Oh, I'm not Sapaar," blushed Lily. She took her hood off for a brief moment. "I'm in disguise. You see, I'm also on the run, though I don't know what crime I committed. My name is Lily."

She extended a hand, but Emilena drew back and began whispering with her accomplice. So Lily took the opportunity to have her own whispered side conversation with Axel. "No doubt I seemed crazy when you saved me in that alley. I practically was at that point, the lam will do things to do. I think this woman deserves the same chance you gave me."

Emilena, on the other hand, could barely restrain her excitement as she whispered with Adrian. "A fugitive...Mr. Almaya is working with a fugitive! This might be an excellent opportunity to gain the evidence needed to put him behind bars..."

Adrian shook his head.
"Emi...I don't think the cops are going to listen to you after tonight. Pretty sure we're both wanted just as much, if not more than Lily. So, until proven otherwise, we should probably assume the cops aren't on our side..."
He whispered back, as Kojuuro looked over his shoulder, then tensed a little.
"As much as I hate to disrupt this little strategy meeting, I think I'm noticing Police vehicles coming. I'd suggest we get moving, and quickly."
He said, reaching into his jacket for something...

Soren scowled. "After what she--" he thrust a gloved finger at Emilina "--did to me after I called the cops, I have half a mind to leave her here and let the cops deal with her!"

The sound of sirens grew closer, making him glance over his shoulder. He had enough bad experiences with the cops. He sighed. "Fine, I'll take you to the city limits. But no further!"

He opened the passenger side door for Axel.

Aaron swirled a glass of water as he sat at the local dive bar. Compared to the slightly classier -- and overtly erotic -- setting of Electric Sheep, this bar -- Club De Kard -- had a decor that was best described as industrial. Benches and bar tops made from piles of girders welded together, chairs made from rebar and scrap metal sculptures made of concrete scrap and the like.

The German Shepherd sipped the water and sighed. He had overheard the supervisor considering firing him and hiring an Augment instead.

"We need all the help we can get," Lily said, climbing into the car.

Soren looked around. His hands sweated as he looked around. "Axel and the other guy, we might wanna hurry."

He silently prayed that the Purifiers weren't waiting for him when he got home. He had heard about their tactics: destroying Augments' property, harassment, home protests and outright violence.

(OOC - should we wait for Starfall and bushwacked?)

"You don't have to tell me twice," Axel said, hopping up into the car. The police sirens, cutting the air with their piercing screeches, sounded just around the corner. He left the door open behind him for Kojuuro.

A small man sat at the bar of the Club De Kard, rocking a shot glass of vodka and watching a TV resting in the corner, in which a recently appointed politician was speaking into the camera. An augmented politician. The man ran a hand through his greasy hair and cracked his jaw. "World's gone f----n' mad..." he muttered under his breath as he down the vodka and raised his hand for another.

He felt a presence in the room, and when he turned he saw a German Shepard slouching into his seat across the room. The man smiled slightly. He was always good at being able to read others, and this guy...

He got up and strode across the room, holding his shot glass, and stopped on the other side of the bench from the German Shepard. "Mind if I take a seat here?"

Kojuuro nodded, hopping into the car and dropping a few small spheres down as he did.
"Alright, let's go. I'd rather not have to deal with police tonight."
He said, grinning slightly. In the back, Adrian smiled and wrapped his arm around Emilena.
"Hey, listen... Thanks for before. You saved my life..."
He said softly...

Soren shut the door and sped off into the skyways.

He sighed as he watched the other flyers flit by him. "This day has gone to s---," he said. "What else can go wrong?"

He instantly regretted his words as the words "WARNING! Perimeter breach!" and "WARNING! Fire detected in house!" flashed red in his HMD momentarily.

Swearing under his breath, he immediately banked into a hard left, narrowly missing a passing hoverbiker. Opening the vehicle's throttle to the maximum, he was soon at 190 miles per hour ó nearly double the skyway's speed limit.

"There's a little detour I have to take. Namely my house because it's currently on fire and being looted!"

The Human silently cursed himself for not having a "trunk gun" in his repulsor car.

Axel cried out as Soren swerved sharply, accidentally knocking into Kokjuuro. "Sorry..." He leaned forward over Soren's shoulder. "Wait, how do you know? Maybe you should slow down a little..." Ever since his accident a few years ago, being in speeding cars made him a nervous.

Almost to take his mind off of it, he looked back at the three new passengers. "I'm Axel, by the way," he said, extending his hand.

Soren slowed down slightly to avoid crashing into a repulsorcart carrying what looked like crates of electronics. He tapped the HMD that was over his left eye. "This HMD I'm wearing. It's linked to the security system and cameras in my house. And it just triggered an alert."

As he looked through the windshield, he gulped, there was a column of smoke -- coming from where he knew his house to be located!

He took a breath. "All right, everyone, s---'s about to hit the fan so get ready!"

Marcus reached the end of the block and slowed his stride, nearing the car he'd appropriated from the shop owner. There were no police chasing him. That was good, though now it was up to Kibagami to ensure he and his companion escaped. Knowing that slippery bastard, it won't be a problem.

Pulling out his cell phone and flipping it open, he dialed the last number to call him and eased himself into the driver's seat. It only rang once. "Is it done?" Zeroth's masked voice gave away no indication of worry.

"There were some complications... Kibagami removed the tracker, but I was able to place a new one on a companion he's traveling with. They're also being pursued by our city's finest," Marcus said, sarcasm sharpening his voice. "But things should still go to plan."

"I see. I'll get our specialists on their trail now." There was an abrupt dial tone as Zeroth hung up.

Marcus grunted and snapped his phone shut. He shifted the car into gear and pulled out, hoping that when the time came he'd be able to put a bullet into all of them personally.

Axel could see the smoke in the distance now. It looked bad. "Soren, maybe we should be careful about this," he said nervously, holding Lily for support as he remembered what the Purifier had threatened earlier that day. A hoverbike zoomed past within an inch of the windscreen, and Axel flinched.

Aaron grunted as he drank his fourth glass of beer. "Have a seat."

His cellphone rang. He scowled as he read that his boss was calling.

"Boss," he said, over the breakbeat that boomed from the speakers. "I'm still on break."

"Aaron, you can stay there."

The man's heart sank and his ears splayed back as he involuntarily bared his teeth. "What happened?"

"I'm sorry but, we're going to lay you off."

"What the f--- do you mean!?" His outburst attracted several stares from the patrons.

"It's just that we have someone who can do your job better. Name's Gustave Nyobe. Demands a high wage but the guy's astoundingly strong ó metal reinforced skeleton and class 2 limbs."

"You hired a f---ing gleamer to take my job!?" Several hostile stares ó from both the Augments and Baselines were shot Aaron's way at his casual use of the slur.

"Aaron, if you'll take a few courses in augment maintenence ó at your own expense, though we'll reimburse some of the cost ó we'll hire you as an external augment repair tech."

The German Shepherd's mouth was open in a snarl and his ears were pinned fully against his head. "F--- you! I'm not working with them!" he growled. "I quit!" He snapped the phone shut.

He ordered another beer and turned to the man. "Dumbass decided to fire me and replace me with an Augment. The nerve of that bastard!"

Taking Axel's words into consideration, Soren parked in a side street of his development and shut the engine off.

He opened the trunk. "Okay, get out. I have some...business to attend to with those Purifier freaks!"

At the same time, he looked around for something he could use as a weapon. A discarded pill vial was by his foot. Scowling, he kicked it into the sewer. There wasn't much he could use, maybe a few discarded bottles, lumps of concrete or rusted rebar.

The Man sat down slowly opposite Aaron, fixing his eyes on him as he answered his cell phone. He saw Aaron's ears splay back, and even over the pounding music he could hear his tone shift belligerently. Then the Man heard Aaron mention gleamers. Perfect.

He sighed sympathetically when the German Shepard hung up. "I'm sorry, buddy. I wish I could tell you I was surprised, but..." The Man shrugged. "They think they're so much better. Like all their hard-wiring makes them some kind of god. Sad thing is, it seems most everyone agrees with 'em. In a couple of years, all we're gonna be good for is sitting behind the bars of a zoo, being laughed at."

He clenched his fist, popping the knuckles, then met Aaron's eyes. "Wanna know the sad thing? Few years ago, I was exactly where you are now. Tossed aside like s--t to make more room for them."

Aaron ordered another beer. "Why are they doing this to us?"

He then scowled as he heard the possible future. "I refuse to be an exhibit!" he snarled. "For the sake of all Baselines, we need to stop this!"

Soren took the pistol. "Thanks."

He took a breath to steady his pounding heart as he stepped forward towards his burning house. The pungent scent of the chemicals he used in his small basement workshop hung in the air.

He saw a Doberman female standing guard by the driveway.

Creeping until he got in range, he leveled the pistol at her and spoke. "Don't move! Call off your thugs and I won't put some rounds in your chest."

"Ah, so pleased to see you, Soren," the woman said as she bared her teeth.

Soren scowled. "Shove it! Get off my property!" His finger tightened around the trigger of his pistol.

The woman snapped her fingers and the bushes flanking his driveway rustled. He spun around and fired a shot into one of the bushes. Before he could take another shot, two huge men tackled him and roughly snatched the pistol from his grasp.

The shock absorbing clothing took most of the blow and Soren slammed his knee into the nearest thug's groin, causing him to recoil back and allowing him to crawl away.

The second thug blindsided the augment repair tech and pinned him to the ground. "Hey boss! Shall we kill him?" the thug asked.

"Not yet. Tie him up while we loot his house and destroy all his goods. Then we can kill him."

The two thugs roughly grabbed Soren and hustled him to the remains of his workshop.

Lily shifted nervously, still back at the car. "Do you think he's..."

Suddenly she wasn't in her body.

She looked around the flaming second floor. Nothing her fireproof suit couldn't handle.

She quickly set up her high-powered sniper rifle and scanned the surrounding area. She noticed a parked vehicle.

"Hey boss, I got Almaya's vehicle in my crosshairs," she radioed.

"High-explosive rounds, aim for the battery pack," a female voice responded.

She grinned. She loved explosions. Settling down, she scanned the vehicle for a gas tank latch...

"Everyone out of the vehicle!" shrieked Lily, practically flattening Axel as she pulled the door open and tumbled onto the ground.

Emilena heard Lily, and wasted no time in obeying her. Using her memory of standard vehicular safety features, she located the incandescent trunk latch and popped it from the inside. Then she pulled Adrian and herself out of the car.

(OOC - Soren doesn't have an antique car <in this 'verse, only antique cars use internal combustion engines>. His repulsorcar is electrically powered. But severely damaging the battery pack, with say an explosive bullet, could cause a fire or explosion by exposing the electrolytes to the air.)

Soren was dumped to the ground and roughly tied to a piece of steel rebar with some heavy cable ties.

The two thuggish heavies watched over him to make sure he couldn't cut himself free or grab a weapon.

Soren sighed. Maybe this was a bad idea, he thought.

He looked at the contents of his house, scattered all across his backyard. He grimaced as a Purifier was using a plasma torch to try and get into the safe where he stored his creds.

"Oof!" Axel said as he tumbled from the car and landed in a heap on the pavement. He scrambled to his feet and hurried away from the car with lily. "What? What's going on? I think Soren's in trouble, did you hear that gunshot..."

Something THUNKED against the side of the car. Who's throwing stones, Axel thought for a split second, before he noticed the sparks spitting out from a ragged hole where the battery unit was located. A blue flame caught. Oh crap. "Watch out!" Axel had time to yell before the car exploded, thrown up off the ground and scattering shards of glass through the air.

The man nodded. "That is exactly the kind of attitude I respect, my friend. Don't take it lyin' down, fight back with everything you've got." He paused. "Let me ask you something. How far would you take it? How far would you be willing to go, to fight for our future?"

"What the hell?" swore Emilena, staggering to her feet.

"They've got him!" Lily exclaimed. "They captured Mr. Almaya! And they know we're here! What do we do?"

Emilena's heart skipped a beat. If these unknown assailants killed Mr. Almaya, she could never bring him in for arrest and get her job back.

She grabbed a heated pipe out of the wreckage. "We rescue him of course," she grinned, brandishing it like a club. "Who's going and who's hanging back here to be sniper bait?"

"Here. Thought you might want this back. I had enough time to get it modified as well.

He looked at Emilena. "Yeah, I'm with you. We need to help Soren." He bent down and picked up a small chunk of concrete. It wouldn't make his weedy frame any more imposing, but at least it was something.

"Hey! Uh... you, wait!" He ran after Adrian and grabbed his shoulder, stopping him from rounding the corner. "They have a sniper covering the street. How're we going to get past them?"

Aaron templed his fingers and frowned. He had a clean criminal record and wasn't interested in tarnishing it with a bunch of felonies.

He looked at the TV advertising the latest augmentation. He scowled, if this man was right, he and the other Baselines would be relegated to the status of the dolphins and bluefin tuna currently residing in the marine park at the city borders. A criminal record wouldn't matter if they'd all end up as zoo exhibits in a few years.

The German Shepherd nodded. He made his choice. "Whatever it takes," he said in a low growl.

(Lanthae Outskirts)

Soren struggled to break the cable ties binding him but they were simply too strong. He sighed as he resigned himself to the fact that his possessions were all but gone.

Hell, he'd be lucky to get away from this alive.

(Lanthae Commercial District)

Anne exited her apartment with her messenger bag. The Night Market in the Silica District wasn't open yet and she figured now would be a good time to go salvage more augments.

Passing by a street vendor selling some questionable looking circuit boards, she made her way to a boarded up shop. After making sure no one was looking, she used a set of bolt cutters to cut the lock and enter.

She sniffed the air and her upper lip curled back in the distinctly equine Flehmen response as the odor of solvent and grease hit her nostrils. She smiled as she saw a neurotester on the countertop. The device was an older model, but it would still fetch a a few thousand creds.

"Modified?" Emilena drew the sword, then gasped as it vibrated at a nearly-unnoticeable frequency. Pressing it to the heated pipe, it slid through as if the pipe were made of soft butter. "You've added a high-frequency vibrator component!" she gasped.

Lily squinted. "What does it--?"

"It can now cut through basically anything short of another HF sword or heavy armor like a tank." Emilena carved up some more pieces of Soren's old car. "These are incredibly illegal outside of heavily regulated construction services due to their lethality."

She grinned. "I think I can get us an alternate way into Soren's house. Everyone follow me."

"Indeed I did. After all these years, that sword of yours is complete again. Make sure to use it well. It's owner would have wanted you to."
He said softly, as Adrian blocked a round from the sniper before ducking back around the corner.
"Oh...right, HF swords. Forgot about that. Then again, mine's been on the fritz, so..."
He chuckled a little, as Kojuuro raised a hand.
"Is that so? Probably because you're using a cheap, new-production sword. And not even how you're used to. Here. These are yours. An old friend of mine would have wanted you to have them."
He said, producing another pair of katana swords from within his coat and handing them to Adrian. Adrian stared at them for a moment, then grinned, slinging his larger sword across his back and placing the two new blades at his hips.
"Right, thanks Kojuuro. Now then, shall we go rescue Soren?"
He said, not even noticing the similarities between his swords and Emilenas...

The Man downed the rest of his drink and didn't say anything for a moment. He followed Aaron's gaze and watched the augmentation advert play out. One aug-ad was much the same as another, and they all made him just as sick. Finally, when it ended, he set his glass back down on the table with a small clink. "Yeah. I believe you," he said, dropping a few credits down to pay for the drink. "I can see it in your eyes. You're like us."

Standing abruptly, the Man pulled his denim jacket tighter and buttoned it closed. "It was good meeting you... Aaron Geasbrecht," he said, reading the name off of Aaron's work suit. "You'll be hearing from us real soon. But," he continued with a smirk as he stepped around the table and walked past him, "You might want to lose the name tag. Just a bit of friendly advice."

Shoving his hands in his pockets, the Man walked across the bar and out the door without looking back.

Axel gave Adrian a small smile. "I'm Axel. Son of a bitch!" he yelped, falling back as Adrian blocked a round from the sniper.

He joined Emilena and looked at the sword she was now wielding. It made the small rock he was clutching feel fairly useless. At least it looked like she knew what she was doing."Alright, I'm behind you. We can't let them hurt him." He felt a vibration run through the floor as the sniper fired again at their cover. His stomach churned.

Axel turned to Lily. "Maybe you should stay back here, it'll be safer..."

He peeked his head through cautiously. The rear hallway was completely trashed, and the thick smell of smoke hung in the air, accompanying the crackling of something burning. But the back of the house seemed clear.

Breathing a sigh of relief, he ducked back out. "We have to be careful. If they know we're trying to help Soren, they might kill him even faster." Axel shook his head. "There's no way that sniper didn't see us coming."

Aaron swiped his credit chit on the bartop mounted reader. The breakbeat had switched to smooth chillout trance.

Axel watched Adrian and Kojuuro move into the house. He almost expected them to be cut down by gunfire from an unexpected ambush - but there was nothing. It couldn't be this easy, could it?

He waited for Emilena to move ahead of him, his heart hammering in his chest as he desperately tried to think of a way that he could fashion a weapon from the scrap electronics strewn about. If he could just find a small-sized power core, with some way to direct its energy... Axel was also painfully aware of the dangerous situation Lily was getting herself into. I'll die before I let anything happen to her.

Emilena cautiously glanced into the attic and saw the remains of the sniper. "No need to worry about somebody who can take care of themselves," she grinned. "Now we need a protective perimeter. This floor is ours. Keep the useless ones in the center."

Lily didn't even take it as an insult. She was walking to the middle when suddenly...

She was shaking as she observed the intruders standing around the room. In the corner, the remains of her husband lay splattered against the wall.

Fumbling, she grasped and loaded her emergency pistol. The chrome of a nearby toilet gleamed in the moonlight of an otherwise unlit bathroom.

"Oh god...oh god, oh god..." she whispered to herself. "I don't wanna die..."

She stared at the door. A thin trickle of blood ran under it. Blood from the man that used to keep her warm at night...

Once her gun was ready, she gritted her teeth and prepared to kick the door down. "This is for Saul you bastards..." she muttered, masking her fear.

Lily grabbed Emilena. "There's someone up here!" she whispered frantically. "With a gun! In a bathroom!"

Emilena whirled her eyes about. "Dammit, anyone know where the bathroom is?"'

Then a door masked in shadow flew open, and a woman popped out, blasting dual rounds at everyone. The first shots flew at Kojurro and Axel.

When he opened them, Axel saw Adrian crouched in front of him, sword poised and a bullet hole smoking in a beam above them.

He let his breath out. "Thanks Adrian," he said shakily, moving to the middle like Emilena had instructed. "What do we do with her?" Axel asked, looking at the disarmed assailant, still not quite over the shock of his close death.

Emilena stepped forward, sword drawn. "Where is Mr. Almaya?" she demanded.

"I don't know--," started the woman, when Emilena slashed her across the thigh.

"Like hell you don't know!" Emilena snapped. "You're part of a small and organized attack group, they don't keep secrets from each other!"

"I've been stuck up here! How would I know what's happened since?" stammered the woman, clutching her thigh. Then she cried out as Emilena slashed her horizontally across the breasts.

"If you have nothing useful to say, then I'm just going to kill you!" Emilena glared, pressing the bloodied katana an inch into the woman's chest.

The woman glared back, still clutching her new wounds. "...Fine, kill me! At least I'll be able to see Saul again!"

Emilena glanced at the bloodied body in the corner. "Really? You'd die just in memory of a man? Pathetic. You're not even worth killing," she spat, smacking her upside the head with the blunt of the blade.

As the body slumped to the floor, Lily stammered, "Wh-was all that really necessary?..."

Emilena glanced at the doors, not bothering to answer. "The others will have heard the gunfire. People with weapons, pick an entrance; I'd prefer to keep the defensive advantage. People without weapons, find somewhere to hide. Psychic woman, you make sure to tell me about any other surprise visitors who feel like showing up."

Lily moved to hide in the bathroom, then hesitated. The possibly dead woman was in her way, and Lily couldn't even bear to look at her...

Kojuuro stood near the body, looking at it intently before looking up.
"Everyone, get down! There's a second shooter out there!"
He uttered, moving to get Emilena out of the way of the window as Adrian pushed Axel and Lily out of the way, just in time as a massive crack split the air, a massive chunk of the floor shredding out from the force of the shot fired at them...

Axel hit the floor with a grunt, skidding along on his chest and coming to rest by the unconscious woman. She'd dropped her pistol nearby, and Axel snatched it up hastily, hoping it was ready to fire. Raising himself into a crouch, he moved closer to Lily, raising the pistol up to the window where the shot had burst through. As he did so, he could make out raised voices coming from somewhere outside. The workshop?

"I think I know where they've got Soren," he whispered to the group. "Maybe we should split into two groups; one to keep their attention here, and the other to help him? If we don't hurry, they might decide he's not worth it..." As he finished speaking, a second bullet smashed through the window and tore a chunk out of the wall.

"Hey give that back!" Soren shouted as one of the thugs swiped the keys from his pocket. He was rewarded with a crowbar to the chest from the other thug. Even through the protective clothing he wore, the blow was still enough to wind him -- but luckily, not break his ribs.

"Shut up, we hold all the cards here!" the other thug said, kicking him in the groin -- hard with his steel-toed boot.

Soren screamed multiple profanities -- even with the protective clothing, a groin kick of that power from a steel-toe boot was incredibly painful.

Two gunmen had approached the door, but weren't showing themselves. One peeked his head around and got bifurcated by Emilena's katana.

"We've got this under control!" she said to the group. "They can't enter without--"

Suddenly a gunshot punched through the floor inches away from Lily, who shrieked.

Emilena hadn't calculated for that. "Change of plans, we take the fight to them,"she corrected grimly. "Kujurro, if you've got a grenade, make Mr. Almaya a new entrance to his first floor..."

Kojuuro smirked, drawing his broadsword from his back.
"Unfortunately, I don't have any grenades. Pretty sure this will suffice, though."
He chuckled, stabbing his blade into the floor beneath himself, spinning quickly to cut a holed around himself, dropping through to neatly bifurcate the gunman who had fired on them.
Adrian was directly behind him, dropping through to cut down another two assailants.
"First floor clear. You can join us now."
He joked...

Axel knelt down and poked his head cautiously through the hole in the floor when he heard Kojuuro speak. When he saw it really was clear, he dropped down after them, his trainers skidding in the blood pooling around the bodies. Axel shuddered and gripped the pistol tighter, then forced himself to look around at the room. They were standing in the kitchen, which meant that just down the corridor was the door that to the outside... to the workshop and, hopefully, Soren.

"Come on, let's keep moving!" he urged, stepping gingerly back to make room for Lily and Emilena to drop through.

Emilena dropped down silently, katana drawn. Lily tried to emulate her but fudged the landing and went tumbling into a wardrobe with a crash.

"Wonderful..." Emilena sighed. "Now, we've got to find Mr. Almaya before they kill him. We can do this stealthily, or quickly. I'm open to suggestions. Has anyone ever even been in this house before?"

Adrian shook his head, looking around the room.
"Never been in here. But I think we need to be stealthy. We make too much noise, and Soren is as good as done for."

He said gently, tail touching Emilena's. Kojuuro chuckled, flicking the blood off of his blade...

"Yeah, we were both here this morning," Axel said as he gently helped Lily up to her feet. "I think they're keeping him in the workshop, and that's just outside, around the back. We have to cross the courtyard to get there, though."

He swallowed. "I think we need to go at them quiet but fast. If they see us crossing the yard, they'll kill him."

Soren watched as the sun sank beneath the smoggy horizon amd the automated streetlights began to come on.

The pain from the groin kick ó and the distressingly happy expression on the faces of the two thugs ó reminded him that if Emilena and the others didn't get to him soon, he was dead.

Emilena nodded. "Right. Then let's make this tactical. Kojurro, I want you on sniper duty. Sneaker boy and Nostradamus, get that unconscious woman from upstairs, then bring her after us. Adrian, you and me are going ahead. We're doing this like in the Electric Sheep, only this time we can kill people from the beginning."

Sheathing her katana, she began slinking across the courtyard. She was never one to waste too much time.

"Who made her leader?" muttered Lily to Axel, making sure Emilena couldn't hear her.

Adrian smiled back at the pair, ears twitching.
"She's the most experienced at team tactics. Kojuuro and I have a little knowledge of small units, but we're both used to working with full combat squads. So we'll play this her way, since she should be the best at this."
He chuckled, sheathing his blades and running off after Emilena. Kojuuro nodded, unslinging a large rifle from his back and checking the ammunition.
"That's correct. Were you two military or contractors, then perhaps I could be more valuable tactically, but as it stands, she will be the best suited to running this. Plus, she's doing you two a favor, making sure that you guys aren't in combat. Her and her brother, they can handle themselves. Let's go."
He said softly, moving towards the stairs with a terse, focused expression...

Axel blinked as Kojuuro moved past him, then turned to Lily with a shrug. "I guess that's why. Come on, we don't want to keep Grandpa Rambo waiting," he said with a small smile, starting to make his own way to the stairs.

Once they reached upstairs, Axel tucked the pistol into the back of his jeans and stared down nervously at the crumpled figure in the doorway. "Holy crap, Emilena really messed her up." He glanced at Lily and Kojuuro. "Do we... tie her up?"

Lily tried not to look at the body too much. "I don't know if she could put up much of a fight even if she were awake..." she muttered. Regardless she searched around and found some rope. "Lets not keep them waiting...brother and sister, you said?"

A lone thug guarded the back entrance to the workshop. Emilena slinked as close as she could, then dove forward in a combat. In less than a second she leapt to her feet and swung the blade at the man's neck.

All of a sudden she felt powerful volts of electricity course through her body, some sort of defensive mechanism in his skin. She grunted and began involuntarily spasming. Luckily her cybernetic hands weren't so easily incapacitated, and the blade drove into the man's neck, decapitating him.

She hit the ground with a wince. "Dammit, they're gonna have heard that, dammit dammit dammit..." she tried to stagger to her feet but her body was still shaking.

The thuds guarding both other entrances to the workshop came rushing, wielding high-powered rifles. In seconds, they'd see her, and their orders were to shoot intruders on sight.

As one of the guards rounded the corner, a sharp report sounded as Kojuuro fired off a single round into the first guard's throat, silencing him as Adrian stepped in front of Emilena, wrapping an arm around her waist and pulling her to her feet as he grabbed a throwing knife from his coat and throwing it at the other guard.
"C'mon, Emilena. Let's get you up. We can't just lay around here all day. As much as I'd love to lay around with you."
He chuckled, kissing Emilena's cheek lightly...

Emilena took a few deep breaths to calm herself. "Thanks..." she muttered, not something she said often.

Creeping into the house, she peered through a crack in the door and saw that the two thugs holding Almaya were already aware of their presence.

"Not another move," one growled, holding a knife up to Almaya's throat. "Or he dies."

"I'll offer you the same deal," Emilena replied coolly. "We've killed the rest of your team, bar one. A female, we're bringing her here now. I propose a simple hostage exchange. We can all get out of this alive."

As they reached the bottom of the stairway, he looked curiously at Lily. "So how long have you been able to do that... super power thing?" Grinning, he added, "I'm not complaining, you did basically save my life twice today because of it."

Emilena glanced sideways at Adrian for a split-second, then decided good cop/bad cop was as good a strategy as any. She wasn't used to being the good cop though.

"However, we may be able to help you with that. We have an excellent witness protection program." She flashed her police badge. "If you hand Mr. Almaya over alive, your worst verifiable crime is breaking-and-entering...with my help."

"I've never been able to do that," Lily shook her head. "I don't understand it. I don't know why it happens..."

She stumbled as they dragged the body across the courtyard, and the body's hand got hooked on her shirt. For a second, her tattoo was revealed to Axel...and it was now a seven.

Adrian smirked.
"You see, if you drop the knife and walk away, then you'll live. Otherwise, you'll end up getting betrayed by your own so-called allies, left to take the fall for this. They'll have one of their snipers drop you before they leave. They get away scot-free, and you'll end up dead."
He said calmly, tensing up on his sword. Kojuuro had moved to a spot with a clear view of the area, steadying his rifle with a calm smirk...

"Well, "Axel grunted as they pulled the limp body along, his ears creasing as he pciked up the raised voices from the workshop. "I'm glad it happened when it did." As Lily suddenly stumbled, he quickly tightened his grip so the woman didn't crash to the floor. "Hey, are you alright..." His breath hitched in his chest when her shirt caught and the tattoo was exposed.

Axel stopped in his tracks. "Lily, it's... it changed again." His eyes widened as he tried to understand what was going on.

The thug looked at Emelina and Adrian and then at Soren. He scowled.

"Fine, take him." He threw Soren at Emelina and Adrian. "Just so you know, we're not through with you, Almaya."

Soren grunted as he landed roughly on a piece of rubble.

The other thug spoke up as he glared at Adrian. "This isn't the last of us, Cyhead. We're coming for you and your Gleamer buddies!"

One of the thugs none too gently grabbes the injured woman and with his companion in tow, quickly ran off into the rapidly darkening streets.

Lily, who was silently freaking out about the tattoo thing, swallowed deeply and focused on Soren. "Are you all right?" She asked, kneeling over him.

"All things considered, that went comparatively well," muttered Emilena. She glanced at Adrian. "Good thinking on the routine. I think that was what got them. Hopefully they haven't bugged Mr. Almaya. With your permission Soren, I'm trained in full body cavity searches..."

Axel was still shaken by Lily's changing tattoo, but nonetheless grinned when he saw that Soren appeared unharmed. "I'm glad you're okay Soren," he said, making his way over. He winced when he heard Emilena's offer. "Well? Are you tempted?" he said as he extended a helping hand down to him.

Soren's eye twitched as he heard Emilena mention "cavity search".

"No," he said. "All those two did to me was simply beat me up ó or try to. Luckilyó" he gave an experimental punch to his shirt, causing a short wave to ripple across its surface as it hardened "ómy clothing stopped them."

He then turned to Axel and Lily. "I'm fine but everything's gone." He sighed. "Well, I'm gonna see if there's anything those punks haven't taken."

He got up and headed towards the ruins of his house.

Kojuuro lowered his rifle, sighing a little and relaxing.
"Heh. That was some smooth talking, you two. Good job."
He sighed, then slung his rifle across his back, making his way towards the others. In the courtyard, Adrian smirked a little, standing next to Emilena.
"Wasn't a routine, actually. I...know how operations like this work. Any time there's someone hired to dispose of one of them, there's no intention of letting any of them leave."
He said, smiling at her and blushing.

Lily pulled her shirt down and examined her tattoo. "It's counting down," she whispered. "...Counting down to what?"

Axel looked at Lily. How the hell does a tattoo change like that? He put an arm around her. "It's alright. Whatever it is, we'll deal with it. You'll be fine."

The sound of raised voices carried over the now still evening air, causing his ears to prick up. "Sounds like Soren's neighbors heard the gunfire," he said, glancing around at the others. "Maybe we shouldn't hang around too long. If they decide to call the police..."

A ringing stirred Marcus, and he sat up. He'd been lying in the back seat of his car, trying to catch up on some sleep while he had the chance. There was another ring, and he realised it was his cell phone. Reaching into his coat, he pulled it out and snapped it open. "Yes."

Zeroth's voice came through. "We've successfully activated the live tracker. It seems she managed to successfully escape the police - given the amount of police activity in the area, she and Kibagami must have had help. But it's where they are now that has us interested. Soren Almaya's residence."

Marcus frowned. "Soren... he's another of our targets."

"For intimidation, not elimination. But if they're working together the situation may have to change. In any case, we're still in the dark as to what they're working towards - we need to retrieve the female and... ask her what she knows."

"It'd be my pleasure," Marcus grunted.

"Good to hear. But you won't be alone - we don't want to risk failure. You'll be part of a small team. Here are the details..."

The phone in Aaron's apartment began to ring.

"Do they...?" Emilena muttered. After a few seconds her eyes lit up. "Don't remove it! This could be turned into an opportunity."

Lily glanced at her. She was beginning to think the fox was slightly crazy.

"Anyone who's interested can follow me to a remote location," Emilena continued. "Somewhere they'll think I'm alone. They'll try to capture me, but they won't be expecting my team of allies. We can ambush them, hopefully capture one for information." Her eyes flashed with excitement.

"I don't know if I like this plan..." muttered Lily.

He picked up his cellphone.

"Aaron speaking, what do you want?"

Soren exited the house with his shotgun and battered exoskeleton with its charger.

"F---ers stole everything except my gun and my exoskeleton."

He then suited up in the exoskeleton, setting its power to low to conserve battery life.

Soren then looked around. "So what's the plan?"

He then heard the distant sound of sirens. "On second thought, let's scram!"

"Hello, Aaron Geasbrecht. It's good to talk to you." Zeroth's garbled voice issued from Aaron's cellphone, calm as always. "My contact told me you seemed promising, and after doing some digging of my own, I have to agree. I think you could be quite valuable to our cause."

"I'm sure that by now you know what I represent," he continued, "So you'll understand if I don't stay for long on a line I don't trust. You'll have a chance to prove yourself to us tonight.

Call it an initiation. I have a small number of my agents working to retrieve a female that we believe could be a threat to us. You have the opportunity to accompany them - it should go smoothly, but she's proven herself to be dangerous and it can't hurt to be sure. My agents will be waiting for you on Richardson street in four hours - they already know what you look like. I'll be very disappointed if you don't show up, Mr. Geasbrecht."

"And I don't need to tell you what happens if you go to the police, do I?" There was a short pause, then a dialing tone as Zeroth hung up.

Axel nodded at Soren. "Yeah, that sounds like a good idea. But where are we going to go? And even if we go along with Emilena's plan, which doesn't sound too smart to me," he said glancing at her, "We still need a car or something."

Axel paused. "If we find an electric car, I could hotwire it pretty easily. I doubt the cops'll care too much if I add grand theft auto to my list of activities today."

"Good idea," nodded Emilena, sheathing her sword. "And until we find an unattended car, we're legging it. I have just the place, I used to use it for stings. Old abandoned robotics factory off the bluffs."

She walked away from the others glancing at Adrian. "Fan of public displays of affection, are we?" she muttered. "Keep it in your pants, will you? You'll get everything you want tonight; I'm going to need your help again..."

Lily's heart panged at the mention of the abandoned factory; she remembered that place...it was near the forest. She'd seen it when on the run from the police, but bypassed it due to the plethora of dead ends.

"We might not need a car," she said quietly. "It's less than...a day's run from here..."

"Well...sorry...It's just...y'know...I really like you and all..."
He said shyly, quiet enough that the others couldn't hear. At hearing Lily's suggestion, Kojuuro nodded, tapping his chin.
"You're right. Plus, there's a chance that any vehicle would contain a GPS locator. That could lead to more trouble than any of us want to deal with."
He said, smiling at Lily...

Aaron smiled as he finished his meal. Now was the chance to prove himself. Yet at the same time, he had nagging feeling that he wasn't being told everything.

He quickly shook it off as he washed his dishes and put them away. If his hunch was wrong and he didn't show up, then the Augments could take over.

"Well, time to see what's going on." He quickly punched in a code to a hidden safe under the counter. A gentle click and a drawer containing his pistol and two fully loaded magazines ó and some additional ammo ó popped out.

He pocketed one of the magazines and loaded his pistol. He smiled as he heard the click of a round being chambered. The German Shepherd donned a shoulder holster and placed his pistol in it.

"Well, let's do this!" He grabbed his jacket from the hook on the door and threw it over the pistol. After checking to see if he had everything, he exited his apartment. And nearly tripped over a bum.

Getting into the elevator ó which always stank of urine for some reason ó he looked at his watch. He'd have plenty of time to make it to Richardson Street.

Soren shook his armored head. "I'd love to go with Emilena and Kojuuro but I have some information I'd like to get from a certain Mr. Altyn and he works in the heart of Lanthae."

He then turned to Axel. "Axel, Lily are you coming with me or Emilena?"

"I'll go with you, Soren," Axel said, shrugging apologetically to Emilena. "I'd probably just get in your way if there's a fight." He considered for a moment, then pulled out the pistol he'd snatched from the woman they'd knocked out and threw it to Adrian. "Here. You can't have too many guns, right?"

He walked over to Soren's side, then turned and looked at Lily. "Come on, you've gotta come with us - it'll be dangerous where they're going..."

Gittsun wandered around Marie's kitchen, pulling open her cupboards at random, looking for whiskey, vodka, something hard. So far he'd found nothing. "Hey, Marie, you got any of the good stuff? It's not everyday you're in the middle of an attack on the hospital and live to tell about it!" He didn't think it was necessary to mention that's his ward had actually been nowhere near where the action was.

Emilena blinked. "What? You--" she broke off, turning away from Adrian. "You are interested informing a romantic partnership? When the hell did this happen?"

I mean, we're having sex...but that was strictly to curb biological urges...right? She realized wistfully that it should have been rather obvious.

"I...shouldn't have lashed out," she recovered lamely, turning back to Adrian. "I...shall need time to think about this."

Lily meanwhile had been grappling with her own mental dilemma, and at that point gulped and made up her mind.

"I'm going with Emilena and the others," she told Axel.

Emilena cast a glance behind her. "You're what?"

"I need to talk with you," Lily replied. "Sooner rather than later." She looked at Axel. "I'm sorry. We can meet back up afterwards."

"And it's okay for you to take as much time as you need to think about it."
He added quietly, walking over to Lily and handing her the pistol.

"Here. You'll need this more than I will. I don't do so well with guns."

Axel blinked at Lily. "You..." He sighed when he saw that she'd made her mind up. "Just be careful, okay?" He turned his head towards Emilena, Adrian and Kojuuro. "Make sure she doesn't get hurt. Please."

He joined Soren's side. "The cops are still on their way - if we're going to split up, we need to do it fast." He glanced back at the others, his eyes lingering on Lily. "Good luck guys. Stay safe. Come on Soren, the faster we find a car the better." Axel started to head down towards the sidewalk.

Gittsun turned and opened the shelf behind him. Reaching in, he grasped the bottle and pulled it out. "Ah, thanks Marie. You're a life-saver..." He poured himself a generous helping and gulped it down. He sighed. "That's better. So, what's the plan for you girls now?"

"I'm sorry Axel...but I have to talk to her." Lily smiled sadly. "I'll be safe. I promise."

"No promises from over here," Emilena set off at a brisk pace. "Keep up. We're not taking water breaks."

With one last look at Axel, Lily ran after Emilena.

Emilena sighed. "Try to keep the civilian out of the line of fire," she muttered to Kojurro.

"I promise, Axel. Lily, I want you to act as my spotter. I need you to cover me."
He said gently, grinning.

As Emilena's group approached the looming factory, Lily crept up to their leader cautiously. "So...ma'am..." she said timidly.

Emilena spared her a glance. "Ah, yes, you wanted to talk to me about something."

"You're a police officer...right?" Lily asked. "I saw the badge."

"Let's go with 'yes,' I'm a police officer. Why does it matter?" Emilena narrowed her eyes, expecting further probing questions.

Lily played with her hands nervously, staring at her feet. "Well...I don't know what I'm on the run for. I'm not honestly sure what I did. Until a few days ago, I lived a perfectly normal life. I was wondering, if you're able to...that you could use your police powers to figure out why I'm a criminal."

Emilena thought. "Hmm. If the chance presents itself, I can help you with that. But you'll have to do something for me in return."

"Of course!" Lily brightened up. "Anything! Thank you so much!"

This female came with Mr. Almaya... thought Emilena. I'll have to gauge her loyalty to him before revealing any of my true intentions. "I'll tell you how you can repay me at a later date. For now, just stay close. None of these deals matter if you die in the coming Purifier ambush."

Lily nodded hastily. "Don't worry. You and your brother are the only friends I have that can hold their own in a fight. I won't get in your way at all."

"Brother?" Emilena wrinkled her nose in confusion. "You are mistaken. We are lovers who happen to share similar physical characteristics. Don't make assumptions in the future."

"But--I--o-okay..." Lily decided to end the conversation there and just stop bothering the police officer.

They'd reached the abandoned robotics factory. Rusted walls and windows whose glass had long since melted away loomed over the shadowy clearing flanked by groves of dark trees. The lapping of water from the cliffs on the other side of the bluff left a scent of salt in the air.

The car sat motionless adjacent to the curb, the shadows drenching it in darkness. It faced along Richardson street - street lights further up gave the occupants of the vehicle a good view of anyone who might be hanging around. The clouds gathering in the darkening sky had broken, and a light rain tapped against the roof of the car.

Marcus shifted in his seat and looked at the clock on the dashboard. It was almost time. "Geasbrecht should be here soon," he muttered to his accomplice sitting in the passenger seat next to him.

Anthony "Tony" Stracci sat slumped down in Marcus's passenger seat, one of his footpaws placed irreverently on the car's dashboard. The ferret was picking his claws with a knife in a bored fashion, and nodded at Marcus's words. "Got it." he susurrated, his voice not rising at all.

Tony was the son of Anthony Stracci Sr., head of one of the biggest mob families in the world, along with his brother (Tony's uncle), Mario. They ran a "legitimate" shipping and hauling company whose trucks were also overweight and tore up the roads they traveled on one shipment at a time. Stracci also owned a large construction company which was contracted to repair these damaged roads every so many months, so business was rather lucrative for the family, though Tony had taken a different path from his father.

About a year ago, Tony had up and vanished from the family business, having grown impatient with his father's insistence he only drive delivery trucks until he had "matured" enough to assume more important posts in the family. Growing increasingly alarmed and horrified at all the technological implants going around these days, Tony had enlisted in the Purifiers shortly after vanishing, and had so far kept his head down and had avoided his father's attempts at locating him.

So here the young ferret sat, waiting to trap one of these disgusting cyborgs or whatever they were. The knife dug out some dirt from one of his claws, and he grinned to himself, ready for some action.

Emilena observed the decrepit buildings. "Perfect..." she smiled. It was just as she remembered it. "I know every nook of this place. Follow me."

She led her team into the middle courtyard, where rusted benches and dead grass soaked in afternoon dew. "From here, we can see anyone approach from any angle. Don't enter any building; they are all extensively booby-trapped."

"Are you sure the booby-traps still work?" asked Lily.

"Yes. Don't let the appearance of this place fool you; it's been renovated with state-of-the-art surveillance technology." Emilena crept up to a statue of a robot shaking hands with a scientist. Pressing several scratches on the side of the plaque, she heard a ding and a thin screen revealed itself behind the plaque. All the traps, surveillance equipment, and defense systems throghout the complex were at her command.

"None of you can be within eyeshot of me," she said quickly. "Or else we risk blowing our cover. Kujurro, the staircase in that building over there leads to a shielded surveillance catwalk; do not touch any of the walls on your way up there, and turn doorknobs counter-clockwise slowly and firmly. Adrian, underneath that row of ferns you'll find a network of underground tunnels that allow passage throughout the complex. When the Purifiers show their face, your job is to get behind them for the flank. Lily, stay with Kojurro. I'll be communicating through the intercom system which connects to both of your locations." She grinned. "Let's catch us a Purifier."

Adrian nodded, smiling a little as he leaned in and kissed Emilena on the cheek.
"Right. That was for luck."
He said teasingly, as Kojuuro grabbed his rifle and nodded, assessing the area for clear lines of sight before making his way up the stairs, as Adrian placed a hand on Emilena's.
"Hey...promise me you'll come back alive from this one, okay?"
He whispered to her...

"I should be telling you that," Emilena grumbled. "I have to stand here and be bait while you get to go engage the enemy. I hate being bait; it's like I'm a cadet again..."

Then she realized that he was giving her a sincere gesture, and attempted to return it with a kiss on his cheek. "I'll be safe," she assured him. "Keep an eye out for yourself while you're down there."

Lily had followed Kojurro towards the catwalk, being voerly careful not to touch the walls or anything. When they reached the top of the stairs, there was no sniper perch or lookout of any sort; just a long dark hallway extending in both directions.

"Err, where do we go?" she asked.

Adrian smile a little and murred.
"You know I will. After all. I have something to come back to."

"Looks like this way. And Lily...thanks."
He said softly...

Aaron arrived at Richardson Street. The street was in a fairly grungy part of town. Storefronts with heavy steel shutters lined the street and strung out bums loitered around.

The German Shepard tried to ignore the medley of vile scents that wafted through the air.

"Hey man, creds?" a voice rasped out.

Aaron looked down and saw an emaciated Human holding out his hand. The man wore a scraggly looking set of clothes that appeared to have once been a construction worker's uniform.

"Sure, anything toó" Aaron then noticed a metal port on the man's chest. His muzzle was soon adorned with a bitter scowl.

"No."

"What, please!" The bum grabbed hold of his left leg and refused to let go. A crack was heard as the German Shepherd swung his right foot, clad in a steel toed boot into the man's face. The bum groaned slightly and slid onto the filthy sidewalk.

Aaron looked at the bloodstained puddle forming under his head. Faint breathing could be heard from the unconscious man. He looked at his booted feet and briefly debated whether he should finish off the unconscious bum with a quick stomp to the head. In the end , he simply shrugged and made his way to the single functioning lamppost in the area where he was told his contacts would pick him up.

Soren finally located a delivery repulsortruck parked in front of someone's house. The engine was still idling but the doors were locked. Undeterred, Soren put his metal clad fist through the side window and unlocked the door.

"Axel, you drive. I'll be in the back." The Human then climbed into the back of the truck and took a seat amidst the crates and packages. He figured that keeping his armored exoskeleton on for now was a better idea than taking it off and risk having it stolen or worse, being recognized.

"Thanks for what...?" asked Lily, puzzled. She continued staying out of his way, slinking nervously down the hallway behind Kojurro.

Emilena kept an eye on the time. They'd been waiting for a little under an hour. She calculated that she'd start feeling the chill of night in two more hours.

Her teammates were still in position, and the enemy had not showed their head...yet.

Adrian made his way through the tunnels, finding a vantage point from which he could see Emilena, and had easy access to a way out for when he was needed. As he stood, watching for the coming purifiers, he found his thoughts drifting to Emilena.
"Did Lily say that I was her brother? That can't be...right? I was alone all my life, according to...Ugh! My head...why's it hurt all of a sudden..."

Kojuuro smiled back at Lily for a moment.
"For being my spotter. I know it may not seem like a lot, but it can be the difference between life and death."
He said softly...

Marcus looked at Tony picking his claws with some distaste when movement further up the street drew his attention. He turned the key and the engine rumbled to life. "He's here." Marcus pulled the car slowly forward until the German Shepard was next to his window, and rolled the glass down. His eyes passed over the beaten body crumpled on the ground, unconcerned, and came to rest on the figure looking at the car.

"Aaron Geasbrecht. You came. Good." He inclined his head towards the back seat. "Get in, we have work to do."

Axel winced as Soren punched out the window, then ran forward to the now open door. He climbed in, brushing aside the glass that covered the seat. He glanced around nervously as Soren climbed into the back.

"Hey! Stop!" A shout from the house startled Axel, and he turned to see the delivery boy charging down the driveway towards them.

"Crap!" Axel quickly shifted the repulsortruck into drive, and the vehicle took off. "Sorry!" he called out the window towards the human who was rapidly disappearing behind them. He turned to look in the review mirror at Soren in the back. "So how far away are we? And how're we going to get in?"

"Oh, um, you're welcome..." Lily looked everywhere, trying to figure out what she could spot. She suspected he was just trying to make her feel useful.

Emilena wasn't feeling particularly useful either. Two hours had passed, and right on cue she was starting to feel the drafty chill through her fur. She began to worry nobody would show.

Adrian sat quietly in his hidden vantage point, his thoughts straying time and time again to Emilena. How he loved everything about her, from her fiery personality to her unflinching determination, to her beautiful body...to...everything.
Up above, Kojuuro smiled back at Lily, scanning the area below with his rifle every now and again.
"So...you lost your memory, huh?"
He finally said...

Aaron got into the backseat of the car.

"All right, so what's on the agenda?"

Soren called up his HMD which was integrated into his glasses. "It's in the Silica district ó the corporate center of Lanthae. If I can remember correctly, Mr. Altyn should be getting off work now. Or so he says when he went in for the repair. I distinctly remember him saying he just got off work when he arrived at my house at this time. He drives an antique ó 2008 Tesla Roadster if I recall correctly."

Soren leaned back against the vehicle's hull.

Post by: bushwacked on December 18, 2013, 03:33:48 AM

"Our agenda is information," Marcus said as he pulled the car away. "Emilena Echo. A police officer. She's been seen in the company of Adrian Kibagami, someone who's been particularly problematic to our group. Earlier this morning, Echo visited the city hospital along with Kibagami for an operation to be augmented." Marcus spat the word out as if it were poison. "When she woke up, she attacked several members of staff, including some of our members, then escaped. She then made her way to Soren Almaya's residence, another one of our priority targets. It seems that Echo knows something of a certain... operation we have going on at the hospital and is working to expose it. But what doesn't make sense is that the police force also seemed to be attacking her..." He grunted. "Well, I guess we'll find our answers tonight."

As they joined the main flow of traffic, Marcus pulled out his phone, pressed a button and tossed it in the back to Aaron. It showed a section of a map, with a red dot glowing in a secluded area far from the main roads. "We were able to place a tracker on her. Two hours ago, she made her way to an abandoned factory and hasn't moved ever since. This could be some form of hideout, or she's leading us into an ambush. Either way, we'll be prepared." Reaching into the back seat, he pulled aside a grey blanket next to Aaron to reveal three assault rifles, a large number of ammo clips and 5 flash-bang grenades. "I don't care what happens to anyone she has with her. If you can, kill them. But we need her alive."

"Since you're on our team, you might as well know who you're working with. I'm Marcus. This is Tony," Marcus introduced, indicating towards the Ferret sitting next to him.

Axel nodded. "Silica district is about ten minutes away. Gonna have to gun it if we want to catch him. Hold on!" He pulled into the fast lane and slammed his foot down. The weak engine of the delivery truck puttered unhealthily, and they moved only a little faster. Axel groaned. "Come on!"

Fifteen minutes later, Axel swung the repulsortruck into the parking lot of Pelvanida. He scanned the cars as he drove along. "Roadster... I don't see a Roadster. Crap, I think we missed... Hey, there! Is that him?" A Tesla Roadster was parked a little ahead of them, and a figure was making his way around the vehicle, preparing to get in.

Post by: Pterano on December 18, 2013, 08:59:07 AM

Tony shook his head as Marcus described their target. Another scum who felt the need to augment herself, apparently. Who were these people? Why did they feel compelled to do such things to their bodies? And she had attacked members of the hospital staff after having the procedure completed? This just further convinced the ferret that what he was doing was right. More than anything he'd ever felt working for his pops, he felt like he was truly doing good in the world; that he was stemming back some furious tide that threatened to swamp them all.

He continued picking his claws with his knife, and flicked a finger up to knock the fedora on his head back a tad as way of greeting the newcomer, Aaron. He also gave a slight wave of his paw (more like a sudden jerk really), but didn't fully turn around. "Pleased to meetcha!" he exclaimed. As Marcus hadn't offered any last names (save for Aaron's), Tony didn't offer his either.

One thing he was grateful for was the weapons' cache in the backseat. He had only brought a sidearm (in addition to the knife), but it was nice to know they were packing substantial heat as well. Would make taking this... freak easier. They needed her alive, which was fine. So long as he got a chance to take out some of her friends, he wouldn't complain.

While he had initial reservations upon hearing she was a cop, he threw them all out the window at the news that the police seemed to be hunting her as well. Good... made things considerably easier in terms of questionable legality, and put his mind at ease.

Lily nodded. "Though Axel and Soren have helped pin the pieces together...it looks like I was just a regular housewife who liked to go hiking. Three days ago, something happened to me in the forest while on a hike...and hopefully Emilena will be able to help me find out what."

The air was incredibly cold, but she didn't seem to notice. As a matter of fact, her skin seemed slightly greyer than usual. "I'm so grateful for all the help everyone has been giving me...hopefully I'll get the opportunity to pay you all back someday."

_--------------------

Three hours now...Emilena hit the intercom, ready to give up and return to Soren. Apparently the Purifiers weren't as efficient as she'd been led to believe.

But then, a faint red light blinked on the edge of the radar. A vehicle had pulled up to the perimeter of the factory. She narrowed her eyes.

"Possible visitors on the southeastern perimeter," she warned her allies. "Hold position for now. Let's see what they do..."

Kojuuro smirked, folding his sniper rifle's bipod out and smirking a little.
"Understood. Setting up for the shot."
He chuckled into the radio. In his hiding spot, Adrian nodded, holding his sword and tensing.
"Alright. I'm ready, Emi."
He said softly...

Title: Into the Black

Aaron nodded and shook hands with Tony. "You probably already know my name."

He then smiled as he laid eyes on the weapons cache. "Nice."

He took a deep breath, grabbed a rifle, slapped in a magazine and chambered a round. "All right, ready to rock and roll?" he said with a grin.

Soren leapt from the back of the moving vehicle, letting his exoskeleton and shock absorbing clothing take the impact. The pavement wasn't so lucky, small cracks showed where his fists and feet landed. He sprinted over to the Tesla Roadster and blocked off the driver's side entrance.

"W...what do you want?" Mr. Altyn said, gazing at the armored Human.

Soren took off his helmet. "Mr. Altyn, I would like a word with you."

Mr. Altyn gasped. "Soren?" He looked around nervously. "Look, I already paid for the repairs!"

Soren sighed. "It's not about the repairs. I want to know what you did to your hand."

Mr. Altyn revealed his right hand, a black carbon fiber prosthesis. The pointer finger had a visible hinge ó indicating that a small compressed air duster was part of the prosthesis. In addition, all the fingers were very narrow and fine, like tweezers, allowing the technician to easily handle small parts. "Uh, nothing."

Soren shook his head. "I'm not interested in playing games. Tell me what happened to your hand."

"What's with this? Maybe I don't want to tell you! Is it that hard to understand!?" He made a move to reach past Soren.

The cyberneticist reacted, blocking the movement. "Don't bother, I'm much stronger than you are in this suit." That was partially true. At the lowest setting, he could easily qualify for the Olympics ó the Baseline Games, at least. At the highest setting, he could lift nearly two and a half tons.

Soren then scowled. "This relates to something that cost me my house and records of my business. If I have to flip your car over or hold you down to get info, I will do it."

Mr. Altyn looked around the parking lot, lit up by streetlights. "Well, I said that I had an accident because I was filling in for a guy at the manufacturing plant." He took a breath. "Well, that's not true. I had an encounter with some thugs ó think they called themselves the 'Purifiers' or something. Anyways, they beat me up, stole all my stuff and one guy cut off all the fingers on my artificial hand with an angle grinder or something."

Soren nodded and waved down Axel.

Marcus looked at Aaron in the mirror. "At least there's nothing wrong with your enthusiasm," he said finally, turning his attention back to the road. Soon, they came to a small turn-off, and after a while the road became increasingly bumpy. The tires kicked up small clouds of dust on either side of the car. "Pass me the phone," Marcus demanded, taking it back from Aaron. He looked at it quickly, then grunted with satisfaction. "Good. She's still in the same position, and we're almost there."

20 minutes later, a dark shape loomed out of the darkness. Marcus quickly dimmed the headlights, and slowed the car to a crawl. He stopped just outside the main entrance and killed the engine. Reaching back, he took the remaining rifles and handed one to Tony, then distributed the rest of the ammo.

"Remember the plan," Marcus said as he loaded a magazine, and clipped a flash-bang to his belt. "The female fox has to be taken alive. Tony, you've seen a plan of this factory. There's a rear entrance on the other side of the building. Go there and flank them. Aaron, you're going in the front with me. It's the most direct route, so expect resistance." He looked at the them and nodded his head. "Alright, let's move." Letting himself out of the car, he started making his way stealthily towards the entrance.

Axel saw Soren signal to him, and he brought the repulsortruck to a stop next to the pair. "Hey," he said, leaning out of the window. He saw Altyn's hands and gasped. "Woah, nice augments! I always wished I could afford something a little more specialised, these are so clumsy..." he said, flexing his fingers which had been designed to resemble normal digits. Axel realised he was rambling. "Anyway... are we good?"

Tony nodded at his instructions, and gratefully exited the car, lifting his arms high over his head and standing on tip claw as he splayed his tail out behind him in order to get in a good stretch before moving to the back of the car and retrieving one of the assault rifles.

Smiling as he cradled it, he almost lovingly pulled the slide back, loading a bullet into the chamber. "All right... let's do this. I'll go in the back then, and see you on the other side." The ferret gave a wave, and jogged for the back of the factory now, having committed the general layout to memory on the way over.

Jogging through the night, Tony arrived at the rear entrance, tensing himself now and getting ready for what was to come. Pushing open the door slowly, he made his way inside, creeping forward, weapon at the ready as he began making his way cautiously through the factory. Little did he know, this night would not go as planned...

Emilena flicked her hands and zoomed in on the area with the newcomers. "They're in two groups," she reported. "A lone one by the rear entrance, and a pair...a bit off of that position, coming in. Adrian, you deal with the one at the rear entrance. Kojurro, keep your eyes peeled. The duo are coming this way." She squinted. "They've got something jamming their signal, it's hard to tell where they are..."

Adrian nodded a little, making his way through a tunnel towards where Tony would breach the factory. From his vantage point, Kojuuro adjusted his aim, covering the door the two others would be breaching from, pulling the bolt of his rifle to chamber a round.
"I have eyes on the two, Emilena. Be careful. They're packing serious firepower, and one of them is a high-ranking purifier named Marcus. Real piece of work. I'll try to take care of him, you get the other one."
He said coldly...

"I can't move yet," Emilena said tersely. "They'll realize something is up. But hold your fire for now; if they keep walking in the same direction, they'll set off a static field that short-curcuits any neuro or electrical shields. Your sniping will be far more effective after that. Adrian, get yours out of the picture quickly!"

Suddenly, Lily jumped beside Kojurro. "I--I thought I saw something!" she stammered, staring nervously at the blackness of the room. "It was...but now I can't...I'm sure..."

Tony emerged from the first building and into one of the inner yards of the plant. His assault rifle was at the ready though slightly lowered, the butt resting against his shoulder as he scanned the open area. He couldn't see anything just yet... but he wasn't at the center of the factory either, if he recalled correctly.

Darting out from the doorway, he made his way over to one of the walls to keep his back to it and move along it to the next building. He kept his eyes on the open ground to his left though, his adrenaline coursing through him as he slid along the wall.

As Tony stepped into the inner yard, Adrian opened the door behind him, stepping out with a small grin.
"Sorry, but I'm going to have to stop you here, whoever you are."
He said coldly...

Tony froze, his eyes widened. Dammit! How could he have been so careless? He didn't turn around however, as he hadn't been ordered to, nor did he drop his weapon. He remained stiff, swallowing hard as he tried to think of what he could do. The voice sounded close but he couldn't tell exactly how close. Should he try and whip around and hit this guy in the face with his rifle? But he had to assume he was being covered with a gun, and one false move could result in his death.

"Take it easy." he said now, raising his arms slowly, the rifle in one of them. "I don't... know if you're involved with these... these... freaks but... I don't want... you to think I'm some cold-blooded killer." he said now. "I'm just trying to keep the world level... to stop it from moving too fast... this wasn't anything personal." he said, hoping his pleas would prevent him from getting shot. He closed his eyes, and resigned himself to whatever fate awaited him. Adrian could see the ferret visibly start to tremble now, as if he feared his next breath would be his last.

When it boiled down to it, Tony was just a kid... he wasn't used to the rough life the rest of the Purifiers lived, and it showed in the way he shook. He wasn't a hardened combatant... not really.

Adrian stepped in, quickly relieving Tony of his rifle and tossing it aside after removing the magazine and emptying the chamber.
"Look, I have no intention of killing you, but I can't allow you to help those two you were with. Y'see, the one that they're after is someone very important to me, so you're gonna have to stay here for a while."
He said, procuring a set of light polymer handcuffs and cuffing Tony's hands behind is back...

Post by: Pterano on December 19, 2013, 11:10:56 AM

Tony offered no resistance to the rifle being taken from his paws, almost breaking out in tears as Adrian said he wasn't going to kill him. This guy was a professional, unlike Tony, as the gun's chamber was emptied, the clip was tossed, and the rifle was placed aside. Tony's arms were soon cuffed behind his back, and he continued to shake, though felt relief he wasn't going to be shot.

A sob actually escaped his throat, his previous "tough-guy" veneer having melted like snow under the sun. "Oh god..." he said, jaw shaking. Why had he ever run away from home? What had he gotten himself into? Was this what it was like? Was the dirty side of his father's business like this? Was this what his father had meant when he said he wasn't "mature" enough? He had so far never killed anyone in his life, but cuffed as he was, he realized this was no longer a game.

He tried to stop the tears, but his reality had completely caved in now. He wasn't in some game... what had he been thinking!? Confused thoughts whirled around his head. He started almost babbling nonsense. "Look... if you just let me go... I'll turn around and never look back. I promise I won't tell the others." he said now, his voice cracking. "I just wanna go home..." he said softly, his shoulders slumping. "I just wanna go home..."

Adrian sighed, placing a hand on the kid's shoulder.
"Look, if you run now...there will be a world of trouble. Purifiers aren't exactly known for letting associates of theirs off the hook. Especially not that dog Marcus. What were you thinking, joining up with those guys in the first place?"
He finally asked, shaking his head a little.
"Look, we'll stay here until the other two are taken care of, and then we'll see what happens from there, okay?"

Tony almost jumped out of his pelt when he felt Adrian's hand on his shoulder. He settled back down, trying to get his nervous tremors under control. Come on Tony... stop acting like a kid who's never done this before! he inwardly pleaded with himself. Your pops would want you to be strong... stiff-lipped. You can't cry like this.

He opened his eyes, unable to wipe the tears from his cheek fur, but he'd stopped sobbing at least. Blinking his eyes to clear those salty droplets out, he sniffed. "I... just... I just was so tired... tired of my father saying I wasn't ready for 'serious work.' That I wasn't ready to be an adult yet. I'm 24, you know. I'm not a kid anymore..." he said, though he didn't sound too convincing. "I just... I don't like what's happening to this world. All this technology they CLAIM is enhancing our lives but... is it really? Is it REALLY doing us any good?" he asked, leaning his right side against the wall now. "I feel like we're going too fast... like we're changing ourselves in ways that can't ever be undone. I was nervous... I wanted to stop it... I don't even know what I'm doing." he said now, trailing off in a soft tone and adding a heavy sigh at the very end.

The sound of footsteps reverberated as Marcus and Aaron made their way cautiously down the corridor that snaked around to the main courtyard of the factory. The air smelled of damp, and moonlight leaking through broken sections of ceiling revealed weeds pushing their way through the cracked floor. Marcus held his rifle up at the ready, flicking the sight between patches of shadow where someone could be hiding.

"Keep your eyes peeled for Kibagami," he told Aaron, keeping his voice low. "The fox with the sword. It's easy to underestimate him when you have a gun, but he's quick. If you manage to hit him, keep shooting until you're sure he isn't getting back up." The corridor split to the left and right ahead of them. A sign hanging loosely down read Courtyard <-. They had almost arrived.

Emilena searched the zoomed-in area for the figures. "They, uh, I guess they didn't hit the field..." she muttered. "Where are they?"

More importantly, why isn't Kojurro standing on the right side of the room? Unless he's sniping through the far window, he's not even facing the right way...

Something is off... she realized. She zoomed out to view the full factory and saw a completely different pair of dots moving in on her position. Whoever the two were somewhere near Kojurro, it was a separate group.

Suddenly Lily saw a flicker again. "There's something is the room with us! I saw it again!" she cried.

At that moment a silenced tranquilizer dart shot out of the inky blackness, aimed right for Kojurro.

Adrian nodded a little, sighing.
"I know what you mean. Right now, people are still trying to adapt to the changes that have come about. But progress is being made. It won't be easy, but I know that there are politicians working on laws that will integrate augments and non-augments into forces equally. Look at it this way. If a building went down, then having a group of augs able to lift and clear the rubble away would be a lifesaver. Same for police, or emergency responders. In a way, what Augmentation is is just a new tool. And just like any tool through history, it will take some time to be accepted and put to the right use."
He said reassuringly, smiling softly.

In a heartbeat, Kojuuro dodged to the side, the dart embedding itself in the wall where he had just recently been.
"Damnit, we're being flanked. Adrian! Report in! We've got more company! If you can, you need to go cover Emilena!"
He yelled into the comlink...

Something invisible and heavy smashed into Lily, who hit the wall with a strangled cry. Both she and her assailant screamed as lethal electrical shocks coursed through their body; Emilena had warned not to touch the walls for a reason.

The shocks disrupted the invisibility field, revealing the Rhino agent that had attacked Soren's house yesterday. Stumbling backwards, he tore haywire electrical devices off his body.

"Exstasis..." sighed the second figure, who remained invisible. "I thought we said this was going to be a quiet extraction..."

A smoke grenade rolled out of the shadows and exploded, removing all remaining light from the room. The rhino ran into a wall and was electrocuted again. Lily, meanwhile, was coughing up what tasted like blood and shaking uncontrollably.

"I don't know who you are," the smooth-voiced agent said to Kojurro, "but I've no quarrel with you. Give us Ms. North and we'll cause you and your fox friends no further trouble."

Emilena drew her sword. The other pair had bypassed all their traps since Emilena wasn't watching them and didn't set any off. Her only hope now was the element of surprise.

Sprinting silently at the door they were soon to come through, she sprung forward, timing her strike so it would occur as they walked in. If possible, she'd kill the one that wasn't Marcus in a single swing, and make this a proper 1-on-1.

Tony looked down to the side, at the wall he was leaning against. "I KNOW it has its uses but... what about jobs that could vanish because of it? What if we live in a world where everything is automated? Nobody would have to work anymore... and people like my dad would be out of business." he muttered. He didn't mention that his father actually had started using some augs in his business as of late, but the ferret figured it was best left unsaid for now.

He heard Adrian's comlink hum, and he looked up now. "Trouble?" he asked, swiveling his head in Adrian's direction for the first time now.

A girl's scream echoed down towards Marcus and Aaron, followed by the faint sounds of a scuffle. Marcus inclined his head. "Sounds like they've got problems of their own. Hurry up." He moved forward faster now, not caring about masking his footsteps - whatever was going on in the courtyard should drown out the worst of it. Rounding the corner, he saw a set of wooden doors, rotten, hanging off their hinges. Beyond, open air. The sound of shouting was louder now, clearer.

As they passed the doorway, something shone in the corner of Marcus' vision. He spun sideways even as he continued running forwards, not registering that the glint was moonlight shining off Emilena's sword, not even registering that it was Emilena herself who was wielding it. Acting purely on reflexes, he dodged the razor-sharp metal's path and twisted, slamming the butt of his rifle against the side of the assailant's head. Feeling the impact run up his arm, he hit the floor with a grunt and rolled, turning to face her.

Adrian thought for a moment, then shook his head.
"If they do it right, then there won't be any need to lose jobs. Right now, the big issue is people's greed and desire for the easy way out."
He said, freezing as he heard Kojuuro over his comlink.
"How many people were with you in the car?"
He asked, turning back towards Tony...

Upstairs, Kojuuro smirked, reaching behind himself and drawing his sword with a small chuckle.
"I'm afraid I can't let you do that, whoever you are. You see, I made someone a promise that I would protect her. And seeing as that oaf that's with you just hurt her...Well, I'm afraid I'm going to have to take you both out."
He said coldly, eyes gleaming in the low light...

Aaron's ears pricked up as he heard the sound of fighting coming from one of the rooms. His heart pounded furiously. Sure, he had been in a few scraps before ó his construction company tended to work in some really bad areas but a full-out gun fight? That was new.

Taking a deep breath of the musty air, he got his rifle ready.

He was confronted by a door. He was about to open when a chill ran up his spine. He could smell something behind the door ó and it wasn't friendly.

Raising his rifle, he sent a quick six round burst through the door and gave it a hard kick.

Soren nodded as Mr. Altyn hopped into his car and drove off. "Yeah, the Purifiers got to him. Cut off his fingers."

He opened the back of the repulsortruck and spotted a Shetland Pony "unicorn" digging through the boxes. He facepalmed. "Anne! What the f--- are you doing this time!?"

Anne turned to Soren, her arms clutching several new pieces of electronics she pilfered from the truck's cargo. "Uh, this your truck?"

"No. But we need it!"

Soren shook his head and sighed. "Ugh, just...stay out of the way." He poked his head through the divider into the driver's seat. "Hey, Axel, do you think we should see what Lily and the others are up to now?"

The rhino roared and searched the room through bloodshot eyes. "Where is he???" he demanded angrily.

"If you hadn't destroyed all of your gadgets, you could turn on your infrared sights..." muttered the as-yet-unseen agent. "But there, I've tagged him for you."

An invisible laser point was now trained on Kojurro. A chip in the Rhino's head told him where it was, and the Rhino charged Kojurro, snarling.

As Marcus raised his eyes, he saw the attacker was none other than his target. Snarling, he yelled to Aaron as he burst through the door. "Get the sword!" At the same time, he unclipped the flash-bang on his belt and pulled the pin. Leaping to his feet, he took aim and tossed it directly at her, even as she lay stunned on the floor. Better safe than sorry.

Emilena tried to focus on what he rolled to her. She had just succeeded in identifying the flash grenade when it went off and sparks erupted in her vision. "Auuugh!" she cried, clutching her hands to her eyes.

The sword, meanwhile, had carved a hold through the dirt before the vibro-function deactivated itself. The sword fell through the sword-shaped hole and clattered into the underground passageways.

"Two..." Tony said now without hesitation, his eyes wide. "Only two." he said, unsure why it had come out of his mouth so quickly. He was certainly not short on selling his comrades out, but he didn't see the point in protecting them now. Whatever was happening was happening... and he wasn't a part of it anymore.

Adrian swore under his breath.
"Damnit. Alright, I'm giving you two choices here. Either you stay here, and I ensure that you do that, or you come with me. Your friends are going after someone dearly important to me, and I have no intention of letting them hurt her. What'll it be?"
He asked, immediately shifting to a calm, cool focus as he drew one of the two swords on his hip...

Kojuuro smirked, stepping nimbly around the Rhino's blind charge and sweeping his legs out from under him in one flowing movement, sending him sprawling into the wall yet again.
"Now, now. I suppose there's no way we can be reasonable about this, is there?"
He chuckled coldly...

Tony stared at the drawn sword with saucer shaped eyes, bulging at its deadly and sleek look. He gulped, trying to think on the options. "Would I have to help you against the Purifiers?" he asked, shaking a little. He then pushed through the muck of his brain and got his thoughts in order. "If I come with you, you'll have to do something for me." he said quickly, gaze shooting to look Adrian directly in his eyes now. He wasn't sure if betraying the Purifiers was a good idea... and the only way out... the ONLY way out... was to seek his father's protection. Even the Purifiers wouldn't mess with Don Anthony Stracci, and Tony knew that. But perhaps... he could just tag along... not openly help his captors either; avoid becoming a marked ferret for as long as he could.

Emilena tried to get to her feet. Like hell they were getting her without a fight.

She shook her head and squinted, but her vision was still completely filled with supernova. Hearing Aaron's voice was close, she charged him and attempted to grapple, maybe even remove some flesh with her teeth.

The rhino screamed as he hit the electric wall for the third time.

"We can be civilized, but unfortunately my employer does not permit compromise. I'm sure you understand," the voice replied. "Exstasis, the backup plan."

"No, I can do this--!" the rhino's bloodshot eyes went wide, and there was a tinge of fear in his voice. "Don't make me--please--"

Another tranquilizer dart flew out of the smoke, only this time it hit a trigger on the Rhino's suit. Immediately the Rhino vaporized with a scream, sending out a shockwave and stun wave in a large sphere, enveloping the whole room.

Adrian nodded.
"Fine. I have an idea. There's a stairway not too far from here. I need you to get that gun of yours, go up there, and back up a wolf named Kojuuro. If what you said is true, then whoever's up there isn't with the Purifiers, and we can get out of this intact. However, just to be sure..."
He took his blade, nicking a small cut into Tony's arm before placing a small tracker.
"That will make sure you don't run off, and give us a cover story for you."
He said, then turned and ran off into the underground tunnels...

As the stun wave hit him, Kojuuro staggered, but remained upright, chuckling a little as he bared his teeth.
"Fine then. I suppose that means that the girl and I will be the only ones leaving this room alive then."
He growled, lunging the voice, smoke barely affecting his perception at all...

Marcus shook his head. "Forget the sword. As long as she can't use it." Striding to Emilena, who was attempting to rise, he seized her by the back of her clothing and hauled her up one-handed, slamming her heavily against the wall. He threw her across to Aaron. "Get her back to the car! I'll cover you!" He turned around and aimed his rifle across the courtyard. From the sounds carrying across, it sounded like the rest of the target's group was preoccupied. Is that Tony? Thoughts of attempting to rescue his teammate crossed his mind for a second, before he dismissed them. The mission came first.

Axel nodded at Soren's suggestion. "Yeah, I think that would be good. I'm sure everything's fine but... I'd feel better if I was back with her. Uh, them! I mean, the group. You know." Red-faced, he started up the engine, heading back.

The voice has moved since it last spoke. While Kojurro was in the smoke, Lily felt gloved hands grab her. "Come along now..." it whispered soothingly, which was somehow even more frightening.

Lily was wide-eyed and still shaking uncontrollably. Unclipping the pistol Kojuro had given her, she fired an entire clip at the area where the hands were. She heard a series of grunts as the shots hit their mark and the hands released her. "Kojurro!" she screamed, dropping the empty gun; she had no idea how to reload.

Aaron slung his rifle over his shoulder and drew his pistol. With his free hand, he grabbed Emilena in a chokehold. He pressed the pistol against her back.

"Move," he growled as he half dragged, half walked Emilena down the decrepit stairs.

Soren smiled at Axel's slip up. Axel didn't know that Anne was in the truck but the Human figured out that he'd eventually find out.

He turned to Anne. "Now, don't go doing stupid s--- when we arrive."

Anne nodded.

"Mmph!" Tony grunted as his arm was sliced for the positioning of a tracker. Great... now he had a machine inside him... but his cuffs were off as well, and Adrian was rapidly vanishing. Looking about him, the ferret shakily ran to his rifle, picking it up, and grabbing the clip as well. Trembling paws clumsily shoved the clip into place, slapping it in as he looked around. Staircase... staircase... the Purifiers WEREN'T here then? Well they were but... someone else was here? That made it... easier... somewhat.

Seeing the staircase, Tony charged towards it now, wondering to what extent "backing up" would go. Did that mean... he'd have to shoot someone? Well... he'd come here to kill people initially so... no time like the present, right?

Bounding up the stairs, he suddenly slowed towards the top, listening for sounds of conflict, and sure enough, he could hear gunshots ring out from inside. Pulling the slide back to chamber the first round, Tony once again gulped, and began inching his way towards the room, wondering if he could get the drop on the fight... and hope he'd shoot the right people.

"You're gonna have to kill me you son of a bitch!" Emilena wrestled with all her might, which at the moment wasn't much, considering she was blind, concussed, and disoriented.

The smoke finally cleared, to reveal blood-stained pawprints to Kojurro and Lily; the wounded agent had retreated out the door.

The bloodied pawprints led right to the door Tony was now entering...

Kojuuro swore, making his way to Lily's side, picking her up easily after sheathing his sword.
"C'mon. We gotta move. That agent could still be around here..."
He said calmly, as he looked her over for major injury...

Adrian had reached the tunnel underneath Emilena's location, and, having grabbed her sword, braced himself as he crouched low and jumped, propelling himself upward enough to shear through the dirt above and burst out of the ground, landing right in front of Aaron. Aiming his sword at him, the augment over his right eye flared an eerie red, as he bared his teeth.
"Alright, let go of her, whoever the hell you are..."
He growled...

Tony froze the second he saw bloody paw prints appearing in the doorway he was approaching. Wait... that wasn't Purifiers! Purifiers wouldn't use such tech! Steeling himself, he raised his rifle, trying to calm his mind as time seemed to slow down... he remembered the firing range... remembered seeing his father's men shoot... just relax...

Before he could think any further, he had squeezed the trigger, the firing pin striking the first bullet and then whack, whack, whack as the pin struck multiple bullets in rapid succession, propelling them out of the chamber and right into the retreating agent. Tony's body was completely tensed, and as if entranced, he kept firing, not letting up as he suddenly cried out. "Aaggggggggh!" he shouted, hammering the target with slugs again and again...

Marcus felt the ground shake beneath, and heard the floor break apart. Behind?! Whirling, he brought his assault rifle up and registered it was Adrian - who hadn't noticed him. "Aaron, keep moving!" he yelled as he opened fire.

Axel frowned. "Hey! Why would I do something stupid?" He turned to Soren, and jumped when he saw there was an extra passenger in the back. "Gah!" he cried, jerking the steering wheel in his shock and almost swerving into a signpost. He straightened the truck to get in line behind the rest of the traffic. "Uh... who's she?" he questioned Soren, trying to get over his scare.

Adrian ducked, moments before Marcus's shots tore through the air where he had been, two of them clipping his ear and tearing large, bloody chunks out of it. He swore as he turned, flinging a set of knives to pin Aaron down before firing a blind stun charge where he had seen Aaron, hoping to get him to drop Emilena.
Damnit damnit damnit...Marcus, again? Okay, whatever is up there. I get it. It's him...or me.
He thought to himself as he stood up, drawing his second sword...

Soren sighed. "It's Anne Phoe. She's that woman who tried selling me that stolen neurotester."

"Hey! I didn't know it was stolen!" Anne countered.

"Liar."

Anne sighed. "Look, wherever you're going, I'll try to help."

Soren facepalmed. "Axel, can you pull over?"

Aaron laughed. "Of course I'm a 'son of a bitch'! And so's my father and my grandfather. 'Course, that's expected when your parents are canines. But enough talk!" He shoved Emilena into a nearby steel girder as hard as possible.

As soon as she left his grasp, a hiss of pain followed as one of the knives sliced his ear. That's what I get for not pinning them in a fight, he thought.

Two other knives lodged in his clothing but since he was still wearing the protective gear from his job, they couldn't penetrate.

A flash of heat made him flinch as a stun bolt narrowly missed him. His heart raced as he got his pistol ready.

Since she couldn't see the girder, Emilena had no way to prepare herself, and so she hit it at full force and slipped into unconsciousness.

The bullets tore through the invisible agent, sending him falling to the ground. The invisible field finally lifted, to reveal...a dummy.

The real agent suddenly pressed his knife against Tony's throat. "Not another twitch from any of you," he warned his hostage, Kojurro, and Lily who were at the top of the stairs, "Or your friend dies."

Adrian saw Emilena hit the girder, and, as she fell unconscious, something inside him seemed to...snap. He growled, plates along his augmented arm sliding apart, revealing a glowing energy core inside it, as his eyecover flared entirely blood-crimson. In a heartbeat, he had closed the distance between himself and Aaron, grabbing him and flinging him towards Marcus with a demonic-sounding roaring growl...

Marcus jammed in another clip, then squeezed the trigger, emptying it at Adrian. He just had to keep him occupied long enough for Aaron to get to the car... He swore as he saw Adrian catch up to Aaron and throw him back towards him. He swerved out of the way, throwing out an arm to catch the German Shepard. While Aaron hit the ground with a thump next to him, he squeezed the trigger again, and the gun clicked. Swearing, Marcus threw the rifle aside and sprinted at Adrian.

Just as they were going to collide, he dropped to the ground and slid along, jerking out a leg to deal a savage kick. He'd been aiming for Adrian's knee, aiming to break it and disable the fox, but Adrian moved at the last second and he caught his shin instead, bringing him down on top of him.

"Uh... sure." Axel pulled the truck over to the side of the road. "What's going on? Is she coming with us?"

Tony remained tensed, even as the knife slid under his throat. He was no longer trembling though, and even his paws remained steady as he stared up at the top of the stairs. It was a damned dummy! But certainly not Purifier!

"Right..." Tony said in a hoarse voice. "But you kill me... you kill the son of one of the most powerful dons in the world. You really want to risk his wrath?" he asked, looking to either side of him. "Believe me... he will hunt you down... he won't stop... he won't care who you are... I'll play along... but think twice before you drag that blade across my throat." he said in a gravelly whisper.

"I'll make you a deal," the wolf agent whispered back. "You come with me to the perimeter of this factory, and I won't hurt you. Hell, that'll give you a chance to run too," he added, glancing at his Purifier outift. "I'm mainly trying to escape myself, and I'm a man of my word."

He began inching backwards, trusting that Tony would follow along.

Tony only considered this for a second, and reminded himself not to nod. "Fine!" he said. "But not a scratch on me... and he won't hear about any of this." he responded. Maybe he could use this to get away as well... maybe rejoin the Purifiers... he wasn't sure. He felt like running straight home... throwing himself at his father's mercy and protection. Either way, his threat had worked. It was all he had, but it had worked. Being son to a powerful don did have its benefits, even though this was one of the first times Tony had actually used them.

Aaron grunted. Even with the construction worker's uniform ó designed to absorb and disperse high impact, it still hurt.

He saw the look on Marcus's face and nodded. He scooped up his quarry and continued running down the stairwell.

Luckily, there was some light filtering in from the busted roof, so he could still see. What he didn't count on was a rusted out step giving way, causing him to lose his footing.

He swore profusely as his body pinballed around the metal stairwell. Emilena wasn't faring any better ó not that he cared. Even with his arms protecting his head, he was still going to be in a lot of pain later on.

"She's nothing but trouble," Soren replied. He turned to Anne and pointed down the neon soaked streets. A street vendor selling catfish burgers was near them.

"Get out," he said to Anne.

Anne's ears splayed to the side. "No, wait! I can help you!"

Soren scowled. "How so?"

The mare smiled. "Any of you need something broken into, I'm your mare."

The moment the stair under Aaron gave way, Adrian was in action, vaulting over a railing and landing on the next flight down, where Aaron and Emilena were rolling towards...

Marcus jerked to his feet and tore down the stairs after the others, the rusted metal screeching in protest. With anger, he saw Adrian was catching up again. Without registering that Aaron had started falling down the staircase, he launched himself down and grabbed a hold of Adrian. The pair careered sideways, hitting the weak railing and tearing through. As they fell through the air, Marcus reached out a hand and snatched the edge of the stairs, twisting his arm but preventing himself from falling.

Adrian, on the other hand, had nothing to hold onto. He fell down into the darkness of the factory's basement. Unfortunately, his body armour would prevent any damage from the fall, but at least he was off their back... for now.

Marcus hauled himself up and reached Aaron. Helping him up, he pointed at the limp body of Emilena. "Get her up, and let's get out of here..."

Axel glanced down the gloomy street that Soren was pointing down. "Is she going to be safe on her own here? And if she really can be useful to us..." As grubby as Anne looked, he still felt guilty about leaving a female on her own in this part of the city late at night.

Aaron groaned as his body protested at the exertion and abuse it went through today. He hauled Emilena into a firefighter's carry and followed Marcus.

Soren pondered. The way things were going, they were going to need to break into a building eventually. Better to have someone who can do that with them now and not later.

"All right, Anne. You're coming with us. Just don't make me regret letting you aboard."

He gestured for Axel to take off and head into the sky.

Once he and Tony reached the perimeter, the wolf honored his word and removed the knife. "You were a good sport," the wolf smiled, handing Tony a business card. "And the government likes to reward people who are cooperative. If you're ever in a bind, ask for Agent Lupis." Without another word the agent scurried into the darkness.

His business card appeared to be completely blank.

Soon, Marcus felt fresh air blowing against his fur. "We're almost out." Turning the corner, the exit opened up in front of them, pale moonlight illuminating the overgrown path that lead to their car. Marcus lead the way, pushing aside the shrubs that obstructed them to provide a clear path for Aaron. Crickets chirped as he opened the trunk and turned to the German Shepard, taking hold of Emilena and lowering her into it. "You did well," he grunted as he tied Emilena's hands behind her back with plastic strapping. "Especially for a first job. With more members like you, the augmented won't last long."

Marcus slammed the trunk shut, and walked across the the driver's door. "We don't have time to find Tony - we have to get away. But if he's hurt, or he's been captured, we'll find him. The Purifiers don't leave their own."

Axel nodded, and rejoined the traffic. "Uh... good to meet you. I'm Axel," he called back to Anne as the truck picked up speed, following the signs to the old factory Lily had mentioned.

Adrian fell, attempting to grab onto a railing as he passed. His hand made contact, but he found no safety from it. Instead, there was a sickening crack as his organic arm tore loose of it's sockets, each joint dislocating from the attempt. All that he had accomplished by doing so was to put his fall at an angle, causing him to land on the already-mangled arm, then roll onto his back. When he had landed, he had impacted not only the ground, but a set of rusted, broken barrels, which had, in turn, nearly severed his one remaining arm. Looking up, he saw the broken railings from his fall, ends towards him.
There was a sickening crunch, and then blackness...

Tony glanced down at the business card. It was blank... but maybe there was a trick to it. Absent mindedly pocketing it, he looked around. OK... what next? He still had his assault rifle (he hadn't dropped it even with the knife to his throat), and he quickly moved that under his overcoat. He had to get this damn tracker out of him!

But... did he really want to leave? He stopped to think and catch his breath. Probably... but where would he go? Back to his father's? Probably again. But first things first. He needed to find a hospital and get this tracker removed.

He started walking the perimeter, looking from left to right and hoping a car would pass by, so he could flag it down and have it take him to the nearest hospital. But cars didn't really seem to drive out to this place... the streets were black and deserted, and while the neon lights of the city burned as a backdrop, the ferret realized he was alone for the moment.

Lily stumbled out into the courtyard. "Where are the others?" she asked Kojurro.

The air was silent, though signs of a violent skirmish were everywhere. Lily put her hands to her mouth in horror. "We've got to search...got to find them..."

She staggered, then dropped to her knees. She realized she hadn't fully recovered from her assault in the sniper room.

She didn't like to admit it to herself, but she had to be honest. She couldn't afford to lie to herself.

The battered and bruised body of Emilena Echo lay crumpled in the trunk of Marcus' car. She was still out cold.

Tony sighed as he noted the specific lack of traffic on the streets surrounding the factory. He certainly didn't want to go walking around this neighborhood, even with his assault rifle. He wondered how the others were fairing inside... it seemed really quiet now...

Plus... he HAD made a bargain with his captor, and planned to hold him to it. He just hoped ONE of these guys had a cell phone on them. He doubted any phones in the factory would be working.

Heading back inside, he began searching for the others, wondering if anyone was still alive... he knew the two he'd found in that room with Agent Lupis were still alive. But as for his captor, he had no idea on. Walking about, he began making his way back to that room, hoping he'd run into someone somewhere along the way.

Marcus only switched the headlights back on once they'd reached the main road. He took a left, heading back towards the city. "Stash your gun under the seat," he told Aaron. "It'd be stupid to be stopped by the police now." They sped past a delivery truck heading the opposite way, but Marcus didn't pay it any attention.

"Woah, they're in a hurry," Axel said as the car sped sped past them, fast enough to shake the truck. Turning his attention away, he scanned the road left and right. "I wish the signs for it didn't stop a couple of miles back... I don't think we missed the turn off though." He caught sight of an old beaten track leading off to the right. "Hey, I think this is it!" He brought the truck further up and saw a huge dark shape in the distance. "Yeah, we're here," Axel confirmed to his two passengers.

He continued over the trees, and after a while came to a clear patch of ground surrounding the factory. Heading down, Axel brought the truck to a stop on the overgrown grass, facing the dilapidated building. "Well... cheery place isn't it?"

Suddenly, Kojuuro's shout echoed through the silent night air: "ADRIAN!"

Axel frowned. "He doesn't sound too happy... HELLO?" he shouted back.

Lily perked up when she heard Axel's voice. "Axel!" she cried back, staggering to her feet and limping towards him.

Once they'd reached each other she threw herself in his arms. "It was horrible!" she cried, getting blood all over his shirt, "Those agents, they came back and everything went wrong...Kojurro and I can't find the others...I got electrified..."

Other than her injuries, both of her irises were now red, and there was a gray tinge to her skin that wasn't present last time she and Axel had seen each other.

Axel's eyes narrowed. That wolf in the suit... he came back. That son of a bitch. "You got electrocuted? How, how badly are you hurt?" As he looked down at her, Axel noticed for the first time how ashen her skin looked.

He rasied his gun but stopped when he saw it was Kojurro. "What's going on?" he asked.

Anne sat in the truck and sighed. All this time, she was wondering what the hell was going on with so much noise and excitement.

Oh well, time foróHer hand-rolled marijuana cigarette was gone! She swore as she frantically crawled about the rear compartment, looking for the precious spliff.

Axel felt sick on hearing her condition. He looked down at her face, and was shocked when he saw how nervous she looked. You don't have to be afraid of telling me anything."

He looked around. "Right then, let's find the others and get the hell out of here. This place gives me the creeps." Holding Lily to support her, he headed in the direction Soren had gone.

"Kojuuro!" Axel said when they'd caught up to the pair. "Lily said something went wrong... Where's Adrian? Emilena?"

When they headed to the bottom of the stairwell, Lily gasped at the sight of Adrian. "Oh my god...is he...?"

She looked around and noticed a cell phone, presumably dropped by Adrian. She scanned the names, and noticed Marita's. Emilena mentioned her being at the hospital...

Taking a chance, she dialed the number. Adrian needed all the help he could get.

Tony stumbled across the newcomers and the pair he was familiar with, but he still didn't see his captor. He noticed a big exoskeleton, descending towards a hole. Looking from one person to another, he noticed the cellphone being used. He'd need to make use of that at some point. "Um... is there anything I can do to help?" he asked, partly out of concern (it was clear to him someone was injured, and he feared the worst on that now), and partly because he wanted to use that phone.

He turned the his exoskeleton to the highest setting and bent into a squat. He placed his hands under the piece of rubble and began lifting it. The suit's artificial muscles strained as it slowly began to budge the nearly three ton piece of rubble. "Now!" Soren shouted.

Anne turned to Axel. A lit marijuana joint dangled from her mouth. "So, how do you know Soren?"

He heard Adrian being dragged out, and recoiled when he saw how bad he looked. "We... we can't just wait for the person on the phone to arrive - we at least need to stop the bleeding, he's losing too much."

Axel glanced at the ferret who was hanging around. "Do you have anything we could use to hold against his wounds?"

Tony suddenly sprang to life at the addressing of his name. "Uh... sure!" he said now, fumbling in his pockets. Adrian's phone was still sitting on the ground where Lily had dropped it.

"I can go check and see if this factory had an infirmary or something..." started Lily, but swayed and fell back to her knees when she stood up too quickly. "On second thought...maybe I should get something to drink first..." she concluded weakly, lying down on the ground.

"Alright," Axel nodded, "It's not ideal, but the coat should be thick enough to do some good." He took it off the ferret, deciding that introductions could wait for later, and bent down next to Adrian. He scrunched the coat and pressed it as hard as he could against the gaping wound - it started turning red as the blood soaked in. "Ah..." he muttered through gritted teeth.

He looked at Lily. "An infirmary... it's worth a try. Uh... Anne? Could you go see if there's anything to drink in the back of the truck and bring it back for Lily? It might do some good for Adrian as well if he wakes up. I mean, when he wakes up!" Axel said quickly as he saw Kojuuro's expression.

Noting the phone was lying there, tempting him to pick it up, Tony did so, apologetically glancing at Lily. "Sorry... I'll give this back... I just need to make a phone call." he said, beginning to dial the direct line to his father's residence. He still remembered it after all this time, and felt his heart start to race as he pushed the call button. What was he doing? Was he crazy? How would his father react? He shut his eyes, almost yanking the phone down from his ear and hanging up, but then the line on the other end was answered, and he swallowed hard.

"Stracci residence." came the smooth voice on the other end. It wasn't his father... his father

NEVER answered the phone if it was an unknown number. Instead, Tony immediately recognized it as Max Fontana, his father's consigliere. That was what he'd been expecting. Fontana typically answered the phone if it was an unknown number for legal reasons, as he had extensive legal training and could parry any attempts by the law to probe the residence via phone.

"Max... it's... it's... Tony." the ferret said slowly, his voice thick.

"Tony? Good god, boy! Where have you been?" Fontana asked, sounding incredulous.

"It's a long story... is my pops there?" he asked hesitantly.

"Sure! Let me put him on!" There was the customary pause as the call was directed to either his father's room or his office (depending on if he was in bed at this hour or not), and then, the warm yet aged voice of his father came on.

"Tony?" was the question posed.

"Hey... pops." Tony said, turning away from the group. Then... nothing. His father wasn't speaking, and Tony waited a few anxious moments as he wondered what his father was doing. He knew his father had this weird sort of squinting expression to his face, and might even puffing on those thick cigars he loved.

"What do you have to say for yourself?" came his father's voice after what seemed like ages.

"I... I'm sorry pops." Tony said, face falling.

"Don't you 'pops', me." Gruffness now.

"Yes, sir." Tony said, more respectfully now. His father typically wouldn't insist on his son calling him "sir", but when he was in trouble... then it came out. "Dad... I'm sorry..." he whispered, blinking back a few tears. "I'm sorry. I think I'm ready to come home..." he said softly.

"You'd better be... I had half the city looking for you. I've also heard the most disturbing rumors... rumors about what you've been doing with yourself recently." No surprise there. His pops was always well informed.

"Dad... I want to see you soon. But there's something I have to take care of first. Some people need my help..." Tony began explaining.

"What people? Not family, are they?"

"No, sir. Not family."

"You're helping outsiders before family?"

"Dad... hold on. You said I needed to learn responsibility for my actions. Because of my actions... some people got hurt tonight. I want to help. We might be going to a hospital." Tony continued.

"Which hospital? I'll send Max out to meet you. Take you home." Sending "Max" out meant Max and his squad, as the consigliere never traveled without protection.

"Dad... I can manage. I'll let you know when I know which hospital.... or wherever I'm going next." The ferret held his forehead with his paw now, rubbing it in a massage as he closed his eyes.

"Can I reach you at this number?"

"I don't know... probably not. It's someone else's phone. I'll call you... I promise. I'm not gonna disappear again. I..." Tony sniffled here, opening his eyes again. "I love you dad." he said, his voice cracking. "I just wanted you to know that, OK? I want to see you soon... I want to come back. Just... give me some time. I will be there... I promise."

A pause again... and like before, hefty in length. "I'll let you know where I'll be as soon as I know, dad. Please... just let me do this. Then you can send whoever you want."

Finally, after another interminable pause, "All right. But I'm holding you to that. Your mother's worried sick after all."

Tony sighed. "I know... I'll call you as soon as I can, I promise. I have to give the phone back now... but I'm sorry again. I'll talk to you soon." Tony brought it down, and hung up. No "I love you too, son" or "I'm glad you're safe." But he'd been expecting that. His father was a hardened don after all... but Tony knew his father loved him. The fact he hadn't hung up on him or exploded in anger indicated that.

He promptly erased the number from the phone's call history with a flick of his claw, and began walking back over to Lily. Tony placed a paw on her shoulder comfortingly, noticing how shaken up she seemed, and held the phone in front of her. "Thank you... I needed to do that." he said in soft tones.

Soren let the piece of rubble fall back with a loud crash. He looked around the ravaged factory.

"What went on here?" he asked.

Anne nodded and ripped open one of the boxes. A few bottles of water rolled out. She picked up a bottle and headed over to Lily.

"Axel told me to give this to you," she tossed the bottle to Lily. "Anyways, I'm going to go look for an infirmary here."

Granted, she wanted to go see if there was an infirmary for two reasons: steal whatever electronics were left; steal whatever drugs were left.

Lily took the phone back and spared a short smile for him. "We can't take him to a hospital..." she said. "Remember what happened last time? A hospital is the reason we're in this mess. How can we trust any organization, they could all be working with the Purifiers...or the police."

"It's true," Axel agreed, getting up from the floor now that Adrian seemed stable enough. For now. I hope whoever's on their way gets here quickly. "We met these three when they were escaping from the hospital, and Lily... well, her and the police aren't exactly buddies right now."

He wiped his bloody robotic hands on his T-Shirt with a grimace and offered a hand to the ferret. "I'm Axel." Where did this guy come from? "So what did happen here? If me and Soren knew things were going this badly..."

Tony nodded reluctantly, glancing at Adrian's heavily injured body. Damn... he really looked like he could use medical attention though. If only there was some way... but Tony knew there was. He just wasn't sure if he should pursue this avenue.

Tony stared conspicuously at the metallic hands Axel was sporting. They were so... unnatural. But he shook his thoughts off, and forced a smile, taking the hand and shaking it. "Tony." he offered, not giving his last name for the moment. "As for what happened..." here he became more hesitant. "I uh... I... was part of a group that was supposed to capture one of your own." he admitted slowly. "Emelina her name was. I didn't... really get very far though before he captured me." he pointed in Adrian's direction.

"We soon realized though that it was more than my group... the government was attacking as well. I made a split second decision to help out, because I saw no problem in attacking government agents that heavily utilized technology. I wasn't able to help much though... but we did get rid of the agents. My group... I can only assume, got Emelina however, and apparently abandoned me as well." he explained. He didn't state Purifiers... but he didn't see the need. This Axel could probably connect the dots. He also neglected to mention Agent Lupis's card in his pocket, but figured he'd keep that under wraps for now until he could determine who exactly Lupis worked for. Besides, the card was blank. He'd need to learn its secret first.

"I'm not JUST a Purifier." Tony said calmly as he dropped his paws. "I have a family... I'm not married but I come from a prominent family... and I love them. I want to see them again. I won't do anything to betray your trust. I just... want to make up for what happened." he said now, lowering his gaze. "I don't mean any harm." His assault rifle was on the ground; he'd ditched it when he'd surrendered his coat.

Axel followed his gaze and saw the assault rifle on the floor. He quickly bent down to pick it up. "The last Purifier I met told me he was going to make sure I died slowly," Axel said as he tossed the gun over to Soren, "So you'll understand if I don't take you at your word." He stepped slightly between Lily and Tony.

"I understand." Tony nodded, making no move to stop the confiscation of his weapon. "If you don't want me around, I'll leave as soon as we get back to the city proper. I just need a method of contacting my family when we get there, and I'll be out of your hair." he stated.

Soren considered breaking the rifle in half ó an easy feat considering his exoskeleton's great strength, but decided against it, opting to sling the weapon across his back where magnetic plates secured it.

His armored helmet masked his expression as he glared at Tony. The Human was still sore at the Purifiers burning down his livilihood and home. "Look, I don't give a flying f--- who you are or what your connections are but as long as you stay out of our way, we'll leave you alone. Got it?"

Soren then looked around. "Maybe Anne knows some back-alley docs or something."

A loud crash was heard as Anne kicked down the door to the infirmary. She scowled. The room was in as equally bad shape as the rest of the place. Anything electronic had been stolen ó right to monitors and other wall-mounted displays being ripped straight from the walls.

She opened the cabinet where the drugs were usually kept. Nothing. Looks like the looters before her took the best things.

Cursing, she kicked the cabinet, leaving an imprint of her steel-shod hoof against the thin sheet met.

"Well, might as well help Soren out." She grabbed the only thing not stolen, an industrial first aid kit and made her way back to the front of the factory where everyone was located.

Marcus and Aaron reached the designated Purifier dropoff point. Men took Emilena's unconscious body away.

Lily finished her bottled water. Feeling a lot better, she decided to get to her feet and make herself useful.

"I should wait near the entrance and flag down Marita when she arrives," she said, "since Marita spoke with me on the phone. I'll need to apologize for hanging up on her..."

Axel joined Lily. "I'll wait with you, if you want," he offered. "If that wolf's still hanging around, it probably isn't too safe for you to be hanging around by yourself." He looked around at the darkness surrounding the factory nervously. "I hope she won't be too long..."

The Purifier compound resembled a large bunker; plain, grey and surrounded by a chainlink fence. As Emilena was taken further in, Marcus climbed out of the car, his shoes kicking small clouds of dust into the cold night air. "You might as well get some rest," he told Aaron. "It'll be a while before we start the questions."

Lily smiled. "I'd like that," she said back.

When she and Axel were alone, staring out at the forest and the lonely road, she took his hand. "How are you doing?" she asked. "You've been checking on everyone else, but nobody's really been checking on you."

Axel blushed when she took his hand, his ears turning pink. "Uh, I guess I'm doing alright. Though maybe I could do with a shower and a change of clothes - no matter what people say about us, rats don't like to get this dirty," he joked, looking down at his blood and grime stained clothes.

"None of us exactly look our best right now, do we? Um, I don't mean you look bad though! I meant..." Axel coughed awkwardly. "I'm just glad you're okay. I was really worried."

Lily smiled. "You're not dirty at all, you're fine." She hugged him. "You've got give yourself more credit."

She looked him in the eyes. "That guy who claimed to be my husband on the television. Maybe he is. Maybe we were happily married. I don't know. But up in that room tonight, when two people were trying to kill me, I was being electrocuted, and I thought I was going to die, I didn't think of Danny. I thought of you. And how I would never see you again..."

Aaron nodded and headed through. He passed by two mean looking Rottweilers clad in a ballistic vest and helmet and carrying military-grade magnetic accelerator rifles.

"What are you looking at?" the leftmost guard growled as he saw the German Shepherd staring a little too intently at a skull and crossbones freeze brand on the guard's arm.

Aaron's ears pinned back and his tail tucked between his legs. "N...nothing!" He quickly followed Marcus into the compound.

Soren turned around and saw Anne with the first aid kit in hand. "Took ya long enough."

Anne rolled her eyes. "Just tell me who to bring this to."

Soren got up and headed into the building. "Adrian! Kojuuro! Anne's got a first aid kit!"

"Really?" Axel stared back at her, his heart hammering in his chest. "I thought that when you found out you might have a husband..." Lily's eyes lit up when she heard that, and she began blushing. She drew her face closer, closer, half not believing what she was doing...but then who knows how much time they have left?

And she kissed him. Lightly and politely at first, keeping nervously distant, then slowly as she became more bold she wrapped her arms around Axel and graduated to heavier and more personal contact. The pain, the exhaustion, the love, the fear...she channelled every emotion she had into her kiss.

Tony nodded at Soren's words, but pointed out something further. "I'd love to leave you guys alone, but your Adrian friend implanted a tracker in my arm, and rather than try and dig it out with my knife and risk injuring myself further, I'd like to try and get this removed." he said, indicating the cut on his arm with a claw now. He had no knowledge about surgically removing a tracker, and was afraid he'd just lose massive amounts of blood making the attempt... or worse, cut a major artery. "He did it so I wouldn't run but... battle's over now, right?" he asked. He looked at his coat, but he really didn't need it back... he did want to stabilize Adrian after all.

"Unless of course, you guys aren't going to follow me. Though of course... I was hoping I could at least catch a ride with you guys back into town seeing as how... not many people tend to drive out this way, and I don't have a phone on me." He'd noticed Lily had walked off with Axel, so it was either hitch a ride with these guys or borrow their phone again.

Axel's eyes widened when Lily started kissing him, but after a few moments he closed them as he eased into it. His arms wrapped around her, holding her tightly as he ran his hands up her back, through her hair, feeling her warmth as she pressed up against his body. While it lasted, he forgot about the fear he'd been feeling, the danger, the fact that he could die at any time. There was only the now.

After what felt like a lifetime, he let her lips fall away, resting his forehead on hers. "To hell with these guys and the Purifiers," he said after a while, a dumb grin plastered on his face. "Want to catch a movie? Go for an expensive meal, stay at a high class hotel?"

Axel shrugged at Soren and let Lilly lead him further into the forest. Soon, they were past the treeline; thick, heavy branches overhead blocked the moonlight and cast them into darkness. The smell of pine and wet leaves intensified, and somewhere in the distance an owl hooted.

"Watch where you walk, the ground's pretty uneven," Axel warned, then swore lightly under his breath as he caught his foot on a rogue, unseen tree-root.

"I know," said Lily. "I came through here while I was on the run a few days ago. This exact same time, in fact."

After about 5 minutes of walking, she stopped at a patch of trees that seemed like any other. "It was the first night. I'd been running for countless hours when I reached here. I was exhausted, sore, and covered in mud. When I heard police probes coming from both directions. You see how the trees are so sparse here? There was nowhere to run without being seen. So I had to climb."

To demonstrate she leaped up, grabbed a low-hanging branch and swung herself into the tree. Then he held her hand down to him, smiling. "Come on."

Axel grinned. "Well, hello Tarzan..." Jumping up, he took her hand with one arm and grabbed the branch with the other, heaving himself up into the tree. He then rose to an unsteady standing position on the tree limb they'd climbed onto, holding a branch just overhead for support as he reached down to help her to her feet.

"You had to run through these woods by yourself?" He looked around and swallowed. "I can't imagine how scared you were."

Lily smiled and helped him onto a nearby branch, so they were overlooking the nearby city. She then continued her story.

"While I was up in this tree, the police came the closest they ever got to catching me. I could see them; they had flashlights, and were checking the trees. I knew I was pinned, and that my dress would give me away in the light, so I hid it in this hollow..."

To demonstrate, she slid her dress off over her head and pushed into a deep knot that had formed in the tree trunk.

"At least three beams passed right through me as they walked through, but I guess my dark skin blended in with the bark," Lily retold. "Still, I was cramped, exposed, and cold, after that long night. I was about ready to turn myself in or just die right there. When I noticed that, even though they'd left, the area was still lit up..."

Suddenly, before Lily and Axel, the sun peeked its first rays over the horizon of the city. The skyscrapers became silhouetted in a brilliant bloodred wash, highlighting the forest canopy and Lily's red eyes. Her skin glimmered a light gray, oddly reflective and petrous. She definitely looked far different from when they'd first met, though she hadn't yet seemed to notice.

"The morning always comes," Lily whispered softly, stroking Axel's cheek. "That's what I realized then, and what kept me going. The night is long and the darkness everywhere, but you've got to press on until things get better..."

Axel held his breath as Lily slipped her dress off, his eyes roaming over her body. As the light of the new day spilled through the trees, washing them in it's glow, he could make out the odd discolouration to her skin - but right now he didn't care. She was beautiful, she was perfect... and she was here.

Moving forwards, he pushed her gently back against the thick trunk and pressed himself against her, kissing the side of her neck. "Are things better now?" he murmured.

Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on December 26, 2013, 01:55:15 AM

Lily kissed him back. "Yes..." she smiled, wrapping her arms around him. "Everything's fine."

She ran her hand through his hair and relaxed her body under Axel, surrendering herself to his wishes, whatever they be. She had nothing else to say, just an aching to know that somebody wanted her, when even her own body seemed to want to reject her.

Loud thuds echoed in her mind. There were flashes of light in her eyes, but she suspected those were just concussive phosphenes. Her body felt like it was floating.

Emilena kept her eyes closed and breathed through a tube in her mouth that her unconscious mind had already learned was an air supply. Not interested in anything other than getting her bearings, Emilena chose to give no outward signs she was awake.

She could tell she was naked, floating in some sort of gel. She could see only the blood within her eyelids; there was a light source in her face. She was held in place by loose straps around her waist and the air tube, both of which she was capable of removing if she wanted. Her wounds were completely healed.

She knew where she was; she'd been in one before. This was a growth acceleration pod. As it rapidly ages the subject, it also speeds up the body's natural healing process to the same rate. She had probably aged a few months in a nighttime...or however long she had been unconscious. Well, no point in losing any more of my glory years...

Slowly Emilena removed the straps and felt around the pod for the latch; there was always one. When she found it and flicked it, there was a click and the gel drained from the pod before the door opened. Blinking, Emilena stepped out of the pod and into a laboratory.

Immediately the lights shut off, discombobulating her and preventing her from seeing the facility. "Don't move!" a voice shouted. Strong hands from several directions grabbed her and she didn't have the reflexes to resist.

She was carried down several dark hallways, making only token attempts at resisting. She knew she was at the Purifier's mercy by now. No escape will be possible.

She was thrown into an empty padded shower, just big enough to stand in, and drenched in antibacterial suds to remove the gel in her fur. As she spluttered from the jet of water hitting her in the face, she had just enough time to gasp to her captors, "What do you want?"

She didn't receive an answer.

Balancing precariously, Axel reached down and unzipped the front of his jeans urgently. Pressing forwards again, he moaned softly as he entered her, holding onto the sides of the tree trunk to keep them balanced. After several minutes of thrusting, his breaths got quicker, deeper. Finally, he shuddered as he climaxed, groaning, his hands digging into the wood.

Marcus sat on the bed and stared down at the creased, heavily worn photo in his hands, his expression hardened. The room he'd been designated was small, cold and sparse - just four stone walls and a bed that felt as hard as concrete. A bare bulb hanging from the ceiling cast a white, sterile glare to the room.

There was a knock on the heavy metal door, and a heavily muscled guard opened it. Marcus quickly slipped the photo into his jacket pocket, but not before the guard caught a glimpse of a smiling woman and child. "Echo's awake."

Marcus nodded and stood up, his back cracking as he straightened. "Good. I'll be there soon." He followed the guard out and made his way down the long corridor outside, footsteps echoing against the thick walls. There were several doors on either side of him as he walked along. He stopped at one and rapped his fist against it. Aaron's quarters.

"She's up," he called through.

Lily panted heavily as Axel penetrated her, squinting her eyes shut. She kept her arms tightly pressed around him, fingers dug into his back.

And then suddenly, she was Axel.

She could feel herself, her own flesh, the sensations of sex. More frightneingly, she got a glimpse of her own body; the red eyes, the stone grey skin, the unnatural thinness. The creature in front of her horrified her and she wanted only to get away, but she couldn't.

Go back into my body, she pleaded with herself, Please! I don't want to have to see this! But it felt like having sleep paralysis; no matter how hard she tried she couldn't wake up nd she couldn't look away... Finally Axel groaned and closed his eyes during climax, gratefully letting Lily stop seeing what she had become.

And then she felt herself back on the branch, the roughness of the bark on her backside as Axel lay on top of her. Her breath slowly returned to normal but she continued digging her fingers into Axel's sides.

"Promise you won't leave me," she said desperately, looking straight into his eyes. "Even if I keep changing? I can feel it; something's happening to me. Every time my mind leaves my body, it takes a little longer to come back..."

Abruptly Emilena was torn gasping from the shower and dragged down another hallway. She was carried into a room with an empty desk and a number of closed cupboards and file cabinets; what was inside them she could only guess.

Her holders ran a rope over a pulley in the ceiling, tied her hands over her heads (skillfully enough, she noted with distaste, that she could not use any of her learned methods for escaping bondage), and pulled the rope until she could barely stand on her feet. Without another glance at her, they left and shut the door behind them, leaving her shivering in the inky blackness.

"The prisoner is ready for you," one of the holders radioed Marcus.

He bowed his head slightly and pulled her into a hug, his breath gradually returning to normal.

"I don't--I--" Lily blushed and scrambled to her feet, trying to cover herself. "Axel! Grab my dress! Quickly, please!"

Emilena had barely been there five minutes and her arms were growing tired. She tried to stand on her tiptoes to put some of her weight off of her wrists and succeeded only in slipping in the puddle she'd formed from the shower.

This is a discouragement tactic, she recognized grimly, Sensory deprivation, loneliness, chronic fatigue to the extremities, and an inability to lay down persuades captives to cooperate when the chance at comfort is offered...at a price. Well, they aren't getting me that easily!

Fifteen minutes later, she found her silent rebellious attitude had weakened somewhat.

Axel jerked in shock when he heard the mechanical voice and he wheeled his arms, feeling his balance slip. He managed to correct himself, but looked up and saw Lily fall from the branch. "Lily!" he cried out, peering down to see if she was okay... and breathing a sigh of relief when he saw her land in the robot's arms. She looked unharmed.

"Hang on, I'm coming down!" Snatching Lily's dress, he quickly clambered down the tree and jumped the last branch, landing with a crackle amongst the dead leaves. Axel handed the dress to Lily and stepped between them so she could dress in modesty, looking up at the robot that loomed above them. "Uh... thanks for catching her," he said cautiously. He frowned, sharing Lily's distrust in what this thing wanted with Adrian. "Who are you?" If this thing wanted to harm us, it could have snapped us like twigs by now. "Why are you looking for Adrian?"

Marcus stepped aside so Aaron could leave his room. "Now we get her to talk. Find out what she knows."

A voice crackled in the radio strapped to Marcus' belt. "The prisoner is ready for you."

"On our way." He motioned to Aaron to follow and lead the way down to the end of the corridor, making his way through another series of doors. The place was like a maze. Soon, they came to another hallway with a single door at the end. As they made their way towards it, Marcus looked sideways at Aaron. "We want her to talk, but we can't do lasting damage. Well, not long-lasting damage. Our orders are to keep her functional by the time we're finished with our questions."

They arrived at the door. "She's in here. Are you ready?" After a short pause Marcus opened it, the hinges creaking in protest.

She came up beside Axel. "If you had any sort of proof or something that Adrian knows you and would want to meet with you..."

Emilena regarded her captors, fighting to keep the strain of exhaustion from her face. It was the pair that had captured her the night of the ambush. She kept silent and merely stared at them; anything she said could just give them further information. They clearly want her alive in her current state; the less she says and does, the longer she can keep it that way.

Marcus stepped next to Aaron, his heavy shoes scraping against the concrete floor. The air in the room felt thick, the sound produced by their voices flat and lifeless. He eyed Emilena flatly, as if he were looking at a slab of meat in a slaughterhouse. "He's right. We just want to know what you know. If you tell us, this will be much easier for you."

Police training was very clear on this part; answer no questions when a hostage. But Emilena wanted badly to snap back at the small one's comment about her fear.

Her level face turned into a glare, but she gritted her teeth and remained uncharacteristically silent.

"If you'll give us a minute..." Lily politely asked, then took Axel behind the tree.

"If he's telling the truth, he might be able to save Adrian," she noted in a whisper, "but if he means harm we're leading him right to our friends. I'm not sure if Adrian can survive without him either way. What should we do?"

"I dunno, maybe we can trust him," Axel whispered. "It. I mean, it knows about Adrian's condition, and if it wanted him to die all it would need to do is leave him. The way he was looking, I don't think he has much longer left in him... I think this is a risk we need to take. Plus," he raised a finger knowingly, "He's a German using a robot. That's, like, mad scientist or something - not crazy killer."

Marcus waited for a few moments, but it looked like she wasn't going to say anything. Turning, he made his way across the room to the cupboard. Fixed to the doors were a series of knives, hammers and other implements. He reached past them into the main body of the cupboard and pulled out a car battery.

He walked back and placed it on the metal desk with a heavy CLUNK, then went back for the cables. Marcus tossed them over to Aaron. "Fix these to her," he grunted. Then he looked over to Emilena. "This is going to hurt."

Despite herself, Lily smiled wryly. "All right," she said, "we'll trust him...only beause he's a mad scientist."

She stepped back out. "If you follow us, we'll lead you to him. You're right; he's not doing very well at all. My name is Lily, and this is Axel," she introduced, already starting back at a brisk jog; they didn't have time to lose.

Emilena's heart rate quickened and her mouth went dry, but she maintained her posture. (Not like her current state of bondage permitted her to do anything else.) She was scrambling to come up with a reply, either witty or delaying, but she couldn't think straight since she was still shivering with cold. Like a good soldier, she defaulted to her training and remained silent.

Once the cables were attached and the chances of imminent electrocution became higher, Emilena found herself unable to suffer in silence. "Cutting straight to the torture are we?" she spat. "Not even going to bother trying to coax me, bribe me, or threaten my loved ones first? I know I've got living parents, I'd be heartbroken if you found them and killed them."

Axel ran up alongside the mechanical figure with Lily. "We found this guy in the woods while... erm..." he started to explain, then coughed. "Anyway, he seems to know Adrian so we brought him here." As he looked between Soren, Anne and Kojuuro, he noticed there were two new women in the group.

"Oh. Hey," he said, scratching the back of his head and raising a hand in a wave.

Anne slid the medkit over to the figure but said nothing.

Soren cut the power to the exoskeleton he wore to the absolute minimum. At this level, they just drew enough power to allow him to move. "Okay, once everyone's healed up, how are we going to get out of here? We can't squeeze everyone in the truck I stole? And what about Tony? I don't need another organized crime group on my ass."

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron yawned. "We have our own ways of doing things." Without warning, he snapped an electrical cord against Emilena's tail.

Tony shook his head here. "They won't come after you provided I at least maintain some form of contact with them. All I really need is transportation back to the city, and then I can have them pick me up when I get there." he explained. "As said, I'm sure you want me out of your hair as much as I want to avoid any trouble with your group, so just leave me at some busy street corner and I'll get in touch with my family." he offered.

He briefly considered getting his family to assist in fixing up Adrian, as his father could easily pull strings so that the law would look the other way while Adrian was worked on, but he wasn't really certain if his father would be too keen on helping a non-family member out. He remained silent on that for now, glancing down at Adrian once more, and then turning away as the... machine prepared to start his procedure on him.

Lily noticed that Kojurro was alone, and turned to Axel. "I have to talk to Kojurro about something," she whispered. "For his privacy I need to be alone, sorry. Be back soon..."

She quietly left the room and walked up to Kojurro. "Before you make that call, can we talk?" whispered Lily softly.

Emilena yelped, then immediately sealed her mouth. Such displays of weakness were not acceptable.

"Look, I know you guys probably get off on doing this to people, but maybe your interrogation would go better if you, I don't know, told me what it was you wanted to know?" She shot back, smiling despite herself. She enjoyed opportunities to be snappy at people who supposedly held all the power.

It was then that she felt it; the beginnings of that pressure building up in her abdomen. Oh, for god's sake, not now...

Axel nodded to Lily as she left, then turned to Soren. "I know with all this going on with Adrian..." he started, glancing back to where Adrian was lying on the floor. He saw the blade start slicing into his flesh, and blanched, turning back quickly.

"With all this going on, we shouldn't forget that we have nowhere else to go now," he tried again, his tail curling around his leg nervously. "Even if we somehow managed to get everyone out of here, we need somewhere safe. And quiet. Especially with all the attention we're getting." Axel looked at Tony. "I guess being taken in by the mob is off the cards, right?" he said, only half-joking.

Marcus stared at Emilena. "You're not stupid. You know what we want to know. What were you doing with Kibigami? What were you doing at the city hospital?" When Aaron connected the second cable to her, Marcus grunted.

"Not really interested in answers now." The other end of the cable was already connected to the cathode on the battery. Marcus picked up the second cable. "This is just the warm up." He clipped the cable to the anode, and electricity surged through Emilena.

Emilena arched her back and cried out as hundreds of volts of electricity coursed through her body. Every hair on her body stood on end as her skin crackled with sparks.

The pain was everywhere, it was unbearable...or at least it should of been. What started as a cry of pain quickly turned into suspiciously long drawn out moans. Moans that didn't sound like the electricity was having its intended effect.

"So what if you guys take me to my father's place... but claim that you guys rescued me from... something... maybe the Purifiers, and well... Aaron looked rather nauseated at Emilena's arousal at the electric torture. "Ugh! Turn it off!" He disconnected the power cable. "I don't need to see some deviant getting off on this!"

He then smiled as he realized he had some leverage over her. "You know what? Emilena, I have a question to ask. What were you doing at Soren Almaya's house? Answer right and we'll let you have some fun." He caressed the battery cable.

He then snapped the piece of broken electrical wire against the floor. "Or would you prefer a flogging instead?"

(Robotics Factory)

Soren nodded. "Okay, I'll do it." He turned to Anne. "What do you say?"

Anne said nothing but lit up another marijauna spliff. The sight of the blade cutting into flesh didn't bother her because she had previously cut off external augments off of dead people to sell.

He turned to Axel. "Well, I guess it's settled. We'll bring Tony back and maybe find a place we can lay low...at least until I can get all my s--- together and then I can go f--- up those Purifier freaks once and for all!"

He gave Tony a nervous grin. "Not your fault though, I'm sure. Hey, we aren't going to owe your family any favours, are we? I mean, I've seen 'The Godfather'."

Marcus frowned, glancing down at Aaron. This wasn't going how he'd expected. He took Aaron's seat and leaned back, watching the exchange between the two with something bordering on disgust. At least it's getting results.

"Ohhhh!!!" Emilena moaned again as the cables went live again, sending her straining at the ropes binding her. She couldn't describe it; the pain was setting her alight in a way she'd never experienced or thought she could. It was holding the pressure in her abdomen at bay and sending her brain scrambling to even comprehend all of it. She was well aware that something was very wrong with this picture, but all she could think about was: That bitch! I said I wanted flogging!

And then the electricity stopped.

"This next one better be a flogging or I'm not telling you jack," growled Emilena.

She looked quite strange, with every strand of hair sticking straight out and short sparks crackling down her sides. The parts of her connected to cables were badly singed. "The arrest failed because some idiot typoed on the warrant. Then I lost my badge because I had been on probation. I've been trying to find alone time with him since, so I can knock him out and drag him to the nearest police station."

You performed a service to him, so he'd owe you one. I mean my pops owns a shipping business too, so that might be a convenient way of getting around. He's also wealthy, and has lots of safe houses, so whatever you want, really!" Tony seemed to be getting more comfortable with this idea with each passing minute, and in addition was starting to more visibly relax as well.

He put away the electrical cord and removed all the electrodes from Emilena.

Emilena gasped as the torturing got a bit more personal. Spasming and shaking, she began whimpering and crying with emotion. At that moment, she felt two completely separate parts of her mind connect; this is what lovemaking with Adrian was missing.

As it went on, something was building up inside her, peaking like a wave. She remembered it from nights with Adrian, except far more intense... "Oh! Oh god! Unnggghhh..."

Abruptly Aaron disconnected everything, and with a pang she felt the feeling die down, leaving her feeling incredibly bloated and tight. Goddamit, I was so close...

Still, the torturing could have gone far worse. Reminding herself that she'd gotten off easy, she regarded Marcus, smiling lazily through heavy ragged breaths. "Is that all you got?"

"Yeah," Axel agreed, "You bet I'm ready." He looked down and raised his foot as one of the little robots hurried past him to the German's side. "It looks like Adrian's getting treated pretty well, so he should be okay to move soon. Lily went out to speak with Kojuuro, but I think they'll be ready too. They've been gone a while though..."

Glancing out, Axel was about to make his way to where Lily had headed to see if everything was alright when he noticed Marie making her way over. He gave her a grateful smile. "Hey. Thanks for coming to help, I didn't really think he was going to make it for a second there. I'm Axel." He offered her a hand. "This is Soren, and that's Tony. Or Don Tony if you don't want to get whacked."

Marcus glared at Emilena. Rising slowly from the chair, he stalked over to her. "Whoever you pray to, thank him that you won't get to see everything we've got." Pulling his knife from the back of his belt, he pressed the blade against her face, just enough to drawn a thin line of blood. "Yet," he growled, as he raised the knife and cut the rope connecting her to the pulley, his mouth twisted in a snarl as he watched her collapse to the floor.

Sheathing the knife, he yanked one of her arms up behind her back and grabbed a fistful of her hair, pulling Emilena up. "We're getting her to the cells," he said lowly to Aaron. "The sooner we're done with her, the sooner I can make her really scream."

Marcus dragged her out of the room, and down the maze of corridors leading to the cells. He stopped outside the one marked C3. Motioning for Aaron to open it, he leaned down to Emilena's ear. "We'll see you later," he growled as he tossed her in and slammed the door behind her. He looked sideways at the German Shepard. "That was a first. But at least you got her to start talking."

Tony chuckled now as he was introduced to Marie. "I'm not a don... not even close." he said, shaking his head and smiling. "You don't have to worry about that. Heck, I'm not even an underboss, though my dad wants me to be someday... after I've grown up a bit, I guess." he stated sheepishly, shrugging here. "So yeah, don't worry... I'm not going to be 'whacking' anyone." he chortled.

Tony had noticed this group didn't seem to be too bad. After their guard was lowered, and they started relaxing, there wasn't much difference between them and others with no augments whatsoever. The ferret still had his reservations about the whole thing, but it seemed this bunch was nice overall, and not a threat to society as he'd initially believed. Were they really OK? Could he trust them? He had precious little choices at this point, so for now, he'd observe them, see what they were all about, and maybe try and learn more about their perspective to see if his own would change any.

Emilena reflected on the experience as she was dragged to her cell, not really listening to Marcus. Despite her body being charred, bruised, and cut she felt more alive than she ever had before. If she ever escaped, she'd need to talk to Adrian about this.

She grunted as she was thrown onto the stone floor of a jail cell. Sitting up slowly, she glanced around her new abode. Aside from the dirt-streaked stone walls and titanium bars, notable things in the room consisted of a rusted sink, a cracked metal toilet, and a familiar Indian Cobra...

She leapt to her feet. "Sanjay Bhat, you insipid worm!" She cast her eyes around for anything sharp she could use as a shank; she remembered her promise last time they briefly met. Sadly the cell didn't have anything up to that task.

Sanjay bared his metallic fangs as he reared up and spread his hood. Thanks to the fact that he had killed a Purifier, his artificial venom tanks were still intact. They debated surgically removing them but in the end, they simply settled for eventually killing him to send a message.

"You! You're the one who tried blackmailing me!" Beads of his natural venom began to appear on the tips of his metal fangs.

Aaron shrugged as he sat on a metal chair. "Yeah, I got her to talk but seeing her practically cum when I tortured her...ugh. Now if you'll excuse me, I need a cold shower and a stiff drink." He opened the door to the cell block and headed back to the livin quarters.

Soren got into the rear compartment of the stolen truck. "Okay, Axel, you drive."

He then rubbed an armored hand across his helmeted head. "Now I have to decide where we can go. Right now, I want to find Emilena so I can extract info from her. But first, I need some extra firepower."

"I asked for your help in escaping a combat zone while drugged!" Emilena shot back. "Hardly blackmail. Though considering you stole Class 3 Augments from the government yet didn't flee the country, I shouldn't have been surprised at your selfishness or that you were stupid enough to get captured and locked up in here!"

Due to her lack of weapon she simply assumed an unarmed combat stance with her fists. If he felt like attacking her, she knew a form of disarming judo designed to work against opponents who fight with their mouth. His fangs gave him the defensive advantage, so she couldn't initiate the fight, though she wanted to.

Post by: Serris on December 30, 2013, 10:46:16 PM

"Where do you think I was planning to go!?" Sanjay snapped. He swayed as he watched Emilena assume a combat ready stance.

His limited training and on the job learning gave him plenty of hand-to-hand combat pointers. He was aware that if someone either threw a punch or a kick, his favored tactic was to weave around it, exploiting his narrow and slender body and then either trap the offending limb with his arms or wrap his body around it and then use his fangs.

Knowing this, he decided to goad Emilena into throwing the first strike. "So I heard some moaning coming from the torture chamber. It sounded like you. My, you are a kinky one, getting off on things like that!" He flicked his tongue at her. "And I can taste it; you're getting wet at the thought of being dangled from a pole and then flogged. Am I right?"

Emilena growled. "I bet I managed better than you would have! I can only imagine the sorry state your ass would be in if it were ridden as hard as mine just was by three interrogators at once!"

Were she not covered in red fur, her face would be practically ruby. Both of her fists twitched, and her memory of the defensive-oriented combat stance was being overridden by her desire to punch Sanjay in the face as hard as she could.

Sanjay smirked. "My, someone likes it rough! I'll bet you're just begging for them to come back so you can lift up your tail and have some fun with them?"

He flicked his tongue at her. "Am I right, you filthy Vixen?"

Sanjay took careful note of Emilena's twitching. He was getting to her!

Emilena was not interested in hearing smack from a loathsome individual like Sanjay. Darting forward with inhuman reflexes, she aimed for a full-body tackle centered around the chest. A snake's primary weakness was where the head connected to the body; if she could get an elbow, fist or her fangs in there, that would shut his mouth up right.

Axel hopped into the driver's seat, leaving the door open. He leaned out. "I guess we can think of a plan while we wait for Kojuuro's transport. Hey, Anne probably knows some back-alley dealers we can get some extra guns from!" His ears perked up as he had the idea. "Not to say there's anything wrong with being a back-alley kind of person..." Axel added hastily. Anne's horn looked horribly sharp.

Anne pinched off the burnt end of her spliff and ate the marijauna inside. "Name something and I can probably get it."

"Tony!" Soren called from the back of the truck. "Coming with us or Kojurro's 'transporters'?"

(Purifier Compound)

Unfortunately for Emilena, Sanjay was extremely limber. He seemed to bend around her as she tried to tackle him. Dropping lower to the ground, he made a number of sexual gestures with his hands.

He smiled. "I see someone likes it rough."

"You can't dodge forever in a cell the size of a closet!" Emilena snarled, lashing out with her foot at his side. When he dodged that too, she abandoned all pretense of defense and just attempted a sliding bullrush, attempting to pin him between herself and the cell bars. By staying low to the ground, she could manipulate the fact that he can't jump."Let's see how clever you are when I rip your hemipenes out of your body!"

"With you guys, I guess!" the ferret responded, jogging over to the back of the truck and hopping in now. He'd stay with the familiar faces... and while technically everyone was familiar, he'd been interacting the most (and rather well too, much to his relief) with a few of the ones in the truck, so the truck it was. He knew none of them trusted him, and that was fine. He didn't completely trust them either. He could work on that though by getting them into his father's good graces... and hope they reciprocated. Though at the same time, he was still extremely uneasy about teaming up with others who used augments.

Not too long ago he'd been opposed to this very group he was riding with after all, but they didn't seem vicious, or evil. They were just trying to survive with what they had. That wasn't so bad... was it? He just wished Adrian was up and talking, as he'd seemed very reasonable after capturing the ferret. He'd pointed out an alternate view on things that Tony hadn't considered before. Either way, Tony was now determined to help Adrian as much as possible, until he recovered. He felt obligated since Adrian had spared his life, and it was a debt the ferret was looking to repay.

Sanjay grunted as he was smashed between the cell and Emilena. He coughed a bit as he wriggled upwards. "Bad move."

He opened his mouth and plunged his fangs into her shoulder and shot a dose of his highly neurotoxic venom into her. Her clothing offered no resistance to his metallic fangs.

"'Sup," Anne replied. She leaned against the truck's stolen cargo. Her eyes were slightly glazed over and she reeked of marijauna.

Soren nodded as Tony climbed in.

Axel grinned and leaned back towards Tony. "It's okay. The smell kind of grows on you after a while," he said lightly, then looked out at Lily. "You getting in? There's room for one more up front." The heavy duty SUVs rolling in set him somewhat at ease. At least there's less chance of us being attacked. Pretty conspicuous though.

"I guess we should go ahead so Tony can lead the way for the rest of you," he called out to Kojuuro.

Lily didn't hear Axel, she was taking the opportunity to ask the doctor something, since finally Adrian was stabilized and he had a free moment. "Doctor...can I ask you something?" She showed him her head, skin, and the tattoo on her breast. "Have you heard of anything that causes this? Do you know what's...what's happening to me?"

Emilena cried out as her body was flooded with poisonous toxins. She had her arms in a stranglehold around Sanjay's neck, and even as she grew paralyzed she could feel him short for breath. She couldn't remove her hands if she wanted. At least I'm taking the bastard with me...

"Well, it looks like you two are having fun," a third voice suddenly said from outside the cell. The wolf agent appeared, carrying a syringe and a pistol. "But playtime is over. "

With a swift kick through the bars he sent Emilena skidding off of Sanjay. Keeping the pistol trained right between Sanjay's eyes, the wolf grabbed Emilena's leg, dragged her up against the bars, and stabbed the syringe through her heart with surgical precision.

As Emilena gasped and curled up in the fetal position, unable to control her muscles when they all relaxed simultaneously, the wolf observed Sanjay. "No more of that, I need her alive. I'd also prefer to keep you alive as well, so if you could kindly work to prevent further such instances, that'd be optimal. I'm the only one preventing the Purifiers from killing you both."

Whoever this man was, he wasn't any Purifier either of them had ever seen.

(Robotics Factory)

Even in her stoned condition, Anne's ears pricked up and began swiveling around. "Hey, anyone know why so many new cars are arriving?"

Soren shrugged. "Dunno but I hope those are Kojuuro's Transporters. If they're not, well, we're f---ed."

"I don't remember," Lily replied softly. "About four days ago, I woke up in the middle of the forest with no memory. Since then..." She wondered whether she could trust him with the details. Well, he is assisting a wounded criminal... "Since then I've been on the run from the police. I haven't managed to find anyone that can explain what I did."

She glanced at the tattoo, relieved to see it hadn't dropped since last time. "I don't think I had that tattoo before either."

"My name is Agent Lupis," the wolf introduced himself. "And I work for the government. We have...a bit of a situation, and our Vulpine friend has already encountered it."

Emilena managed to sit up, coughing violently. Her ears pricked. Is he talking about that Sapaar woman?

Her suspicions were confirmed when Lupis held out a headshot. "Lily North has become something of a topic of interest to the government. As such topics tend to do, she has gone missing and my assignment is to retrieve her. Somehow she has allied herself with a proficient team of survivors, most of whom have been hiding from authority for most of their lives. This has made it difficult to approach her."

"Well, that's your problem," Emilena snapped. She tried to stand up, wobbled, and fell over.

"It can be your problem if you like," Lupis added dryly. "I offer both of you complete immunity from your past crimes, and licenses to keep any Augments or other equipment you currently possess." The wolf was glancing at Sanjay when he said this. "In return, you assist me in catching Ms. North."

Axel rested his elbow on the truck's window sill. "Well, sure, your transport might be bulletproof, but we've got all the groceries we could want back here," he said, gesturing towards the boxes piled around Soren, Tony and Anne. "So I guess it's even." He glanced around at the others talking outside, then turned back to Kojuuro. "So, are we about ready to go? Hanging around here for too long probably isn't a good idea."

"I'd like to go for stealth," Soren replied to Kojuuro. He then noticed that his suit suddenly became noticibly heavier. "Great, my suit's batteries are dead."

Anne got to her feet. "Maybe we can plug you into the vehicle's electrical system." She dragged Soren out of the truck and onto the concrete parking lot.

She popped open the recharging port and eyed it along with the portable charger clipped to his suit. The hexagonal port on the truck wasn't compatible with the t-shaped plug on his charger.

"Oh, this might need a little work."

Soren struggled to his feet and climbed back into the truck with a bit of difficulty thanks to the weight of his now unpowered exoskeleton. "Deal with that later! Right now, we're hauling ass out of here!"

"There really aren't," the wolf replied sincerely. "No offense, Mr. Bhat, but you are an extremely small fish compared to this woman. Ms. North contains one of the most dangerous secrets our government has ever held, and they'd be willing to empty death row if it would guarantee her retrieval. But I think the two of you have the skillset needed for this job."

"Wait, you want me to work with him?" interrupted Emilena, suddenly finding more than enough strength to leap up indignantly. "I refuse! I can capture this female alone; I already know where she is!"

"Not an option," Agent Lupis responded without hesitation. "You're too much of a loose cannon. Mr. Bhat has the analytic mind and long-term planning philosophy that a capture of this nature needs to succeed. I expect you to follow his orders if and when he makes them. On the other hand, Mr. Bhat, you are to--"

"--Why the hell should I agree to any of this?" snapped Emilena again, causing the wolf to sigh irritably. "I don't have any illegal augments, and I'm following my own plan to get my job back--"

"Broadstreet has already scratched your name from the records," the wolf said through a tired facepalm. "And your badge has been reassigned to a new recruit. You really thought he'd ever consider reenlisting an officer with your number of black marks? I never offered your old job back, Ms. Echo, because the possibility of that occurring is slim to none."

Emilena opened her mouth again but Lupis cut her off. "Instead, I'm offering you a new job. As a government agent, like myself. Access to the highest quality technology, dealing with threats of national importance. A sphere of influence greater than anything you've done before."

That shut Emilena up.

"No more questions, no more explanations," the wolf continued, shooting Emilena sideways glance. "You each get one sentence before I walk away. I'm asking you both to work together to retrieve Lily North and bring her to me alive. Upon that happening, your records are cleared, past debts are erased and the government pretends your old selves don't exist any more. Will you accept my terms?"

He then turned to Emilena. "I don't like you anymore than you like me, but the reward is too good to pass up. So don't f--- this up!"

(Robotics Factory)

Soren propped himself up against the truck's shelves. "Axel, we're ready to go."

He then turned to Tony. "Tony, mind giving Axel a hand with navigation?"

The armored Human then turned to Kojuuro. "We need to drop someone off first, you mind setting a rendevous point later?"

The wolf nodded respectably. "I figured you would know a good deal when you heard it." He glanced at Emilena. "You on the other hand..."

Emilena folded her arms. She realized that the alternative was dying in a Purifier cell. "...fine."

"Fine what?" pressed Lupis.

"Fine I'll work with the snake to catch the woman!" Emilena snapped. "But it's not my fault if he gets himself killed or ruins the assignment!"

"Yes it is." The wolf pressed a button and a transparent aluminum wall started rising from the floor, flush with the bars. "Your job is to follow his orders and keep him alive. Fail to do either and you won't be an agent in my department any time soon. Now, share some quality time together, and this time keep your hands to yourself. The purifiers will be releasing you once I've finished negotiations."

With that the glassy wall sealed the cell off from outside noise, and the wolf disappeared into the shadows. Then two ceiling sprinklers began lightly spraying the room and its occupants with the healing gel that filled cloning pods, a cheap way of fixing up the occupants' minor wounds.

"Eeergh..." Emilena flashed her eyes at Sanjay, like it was his fault. "I just showered this gunk off me..."

"My father's compound is a large place called the Heights near the western edge of the city. It's well guarded so... you should probably let me do the talking when we get close." Lily noticed that Tony had taken the spot next to Axel. So she waved Kojurro over and led him into his companion's transports.

"Is there a...private place on these?" she asked.

"Uh, I guess we can keep everyone else out of this SUV," the driver replied, focusing on the pre-departure preparations. He pressed a button and a tinted screen rose up between the driver's area and the passenger bay.

Now alone with Kojurro, Lily began pulling her dress over her head. "Here's your half of the favor," she said softly. "Take as long as you want...we have the whole car ride..."

The repulsortruck flew through the smoggy skyways of Lanthae.

"So Tony," Soren said from the back of the truck. "Once, we're at your place, is there anything else we need to know about?"

A loud bang issued from the outside as a hoverbiking hooligan threw a bottle at the stolen delivery truck.

Anne was surrounded by opened boxes and ripped packing material as she began open all the packages in search of something she could hock or get high off of.

"No secret hand signals... at least there weren't when I left. Basically just drive slowly up to the gate, and let me do the talking." he reiterated, cracking a smile at the secret hand signals. "Too fast will get this truck shot up like Swiss cheese, and we don't want that. My father will extend you his hospitality for helping me, so just try and reciprocate by showing him you're grateful. You shouldn't owe him anything, since he'll be repaying you with his hospitality for helping me out, and maybe even extend you a few other favors."the ferret explained now.

Lily sighed. "I'm sorry, Kojurro...I just don't think I'm a very sexual person. You can keep going, but you should just focus on pleasuring yourself. You were doing a fine job, it's just me."

She shivered in the puddle of cold sweat that had formed in the lengthy amount of time since they had started.

Lily smiled weakly. "Oh-okay...if you're sure..."

She lay back and focused on the roof of the car.

"Hello?" Emilena flung a handful of green goop at Sanjay. "Earth to Sanjay? You're supposed to be giving orders, apparently you're really good at that?"

Sanjay flung the goop out of his eyes as he looked around. The bars were too narrow for him to slip between and the area appeared to be deserted.

He noticed a security camera in the corner and flung a handful of the healing slime at it.

"All right," he whispered. "That should attract attention. Once the guards come, we can subdue them, grab their weapons and flee."

The repulsortruck turned down the aforementioned street. The area was surprisingly nice and clean with none of the garbage and bums lying about.

"Tony," Soren asked. "That complex up ahead, is that where we're going?"

"No, no..." Lily forced his belt off desperately and tried to pull his pants down, "That's not good enough! Come on, we had a deal!"

Emilena grinned. She suspected there were some serious flaws in that plan, but that's never stopped her before. "I figured we can't trust that bastard either. You've been here a while, got any shivs or improvised weapons you've made around here?"

She clutched the only weapon she'd been left with; the syringe that had saved her from the poison.

Tony nodded at Soren's query. "Yep... that's the Heights." It was aptly named, being on a high bluff that overlooked the city, with the only access being a road that wound up to it from the outer wall. An inner wall ringed the massive compound as well, hiding it from view from the street below. "OK... start slowing down, Axel." the ferret instructed. "You'll be flagged down by some guys at the front gate. They may look harmless, but make no mistake... they're all armed. Also, they'll have other guns trained on you from hidden positions too so... I'll identify myself immediately once we get within range. They won't shoot unless you try and break through, so just take it easy." he cautioned.

The Heights loomed over the truck imposingly as they started making their way up the hill that snaked around to the front gate. Axel gulped and eased his foot off the accelerator, dropping the truck's speed considerably. The SUV behind beeped its horn, and he jolted in shock. Holy crap, this place is a fortress...

Driving up slowly, the gates soon began to emerge in the distance, creeping closer. "Okay... here we are..." Axel said nervously, while trying to adopt a relaxed, innocent expression on his face and failing miserably. "Maybe you could start, like, waving your arms or giving the secret signal or something, Tony? Please?" The sentries at the gate had begun to stir, staring at the battered truck heading their way.

A guard in a dark blue trench coat held up his hand for the truck to stop, and Tony could make out the assault rifle just barely visible under the guard's coat. "Stop." Tony whispered under his breath, and hopped out of the truck now as it rolled to a halt. "Guys! It's me! Tony!" he called over to them, removing his hat.

"Check fire!" came a yell from inside the gate.

"Tony?" the first guard asked, blinking as he looked the ferret over. "Holy shit! It IS you! Where ya been?"

"That's for my father to know." Tony responded. "These guys kind of rescued me." he said motioning behind him to the truck.

The guard regarded all the SUVs suspiciously. "All of them?" he asked in disbelief, and Tony nodded. "What's the password?"

Tony swore under his breath. His father used two passwords, one for duress, the other for non-duress. But he changed it every year... and it had been a year. He went with the old one for non-duress, hoping it'd work. "Priority mail." he said.

"That's the old one." the guard responded. "But all right... you been gone a year." Tony sighed visibly, relaxing as the guard spoke a few words into his radio. Waiting for a response, a few awkward moments passed, and then the guard approached Axel on the driver's side of the truck. "All right, you, drive up to the front of the house. Here." he held out a map for Axel to follow. "Do NOT deviate from that route. The SUVs are gonna have to park it in our lot. You'll be subjected to thorough screenings at the main entrance, so be prepared." the guard warned, then waved a hand, and the front gate began to retract sideways into the wall. A secondary concrete barrier also visible behind the gate lowered into the ground, and a gravity trap along the ground deactivated as well.

"My father takes security seriously, as you can see." Tony said with a shrug as he climbed back in beside Axel. "One of his capos will probably be meeting us at the front entrance. Whatever you do, don't set him off... both of them are trained killers. Just know you'll have to be screened if you intend to enter the main house." the ferret advised.

Sanjay opened his mouth, revealing his metallic fangs. "Metal fangs and highly neurotoxic venom. I can punch through thin sheet metal with them."

(Mob Compound)

Anne was sleeping off her high in the back of the truck.

Soren was sitting in the back of the truck, his exoskeleton was now little more than a passive piece of armor.

His two guns had detached from his now powered down suit and were lying in the truck's compartment.

Lily pushed Kojurro away angrily. "Why can't you make this simple?" she snapped, tears running down her eyes. She curled up in a ball and faced away from him, overcome by emotion. "Here I am letting you...letting you..." she couldn't even say it. "And I don't even know what the point is, I know you won't hold up your end!"

She couldn't take it any more. Getting up and grabbing her dress, she put it on and threw the car door open. Jumping out of the SUV, she hit the ground rolling.

"Hey! What the hell is she doing?" one of the guards snapped. Instantly a dozen assault rifles were trained on the convoy. "Stop! Stop the cars now!"

Several guards stepped into the hallway of the jail area. Each one carried a high-powered rifle. "What the hell do you think you're doing?" one of them snapped, pointing his rifle at Sanjay.

"We've been told not to kill you, but our orders were significantly less clear on the subject of kneecaps," the other snapped at Emilena, cocking and aiming at her leg.

Axel looked at Tony grimly. "Yeah, I can see your dad likes his privacy... Alright, where did that guy say to go..." He started pulling the truck towards the gate as it slid open. At the sudden shout from the guards, he slammed his foot down on the brake and glanced at Tony, panicked. "What? What'd we do? I don't..." Movement in the rear-view mirror caught his attention, and he looked over his shoulder to see a shape in a dress rolling on the road alongside one of the SUVs. His eyes widened. "Oh, f*ck..."

Without thinking about the guns trained on him, Axel scrambled out of the truck and started waving his arms, moving closer to her. "Wait! Don't shoot her!" he shouted at the guards. He looked back at the truck desperately. "Tony, say something!"

A burst of gunfire cracked out, kicking up dirt at Axel's feet. "Stay where you are!" one guard shouted.

"Wait!" Tony cried, moving to get out of the truck. He had to slide over to the driver's side though, not wanting to exit on the passenger side for fear he might be too late. "Wait!" he threw up his paws in the air. "It's all right! I don't know... what happened. But just... hold fire!" he pleaded. The guards didn't riddle the convoy thankfully, but didn't lower their guns either.

"Get her up!" one of his father's soldiers ordered.

"Yes... yes! Right away!" Tony exclaimed, and moved rapidly over to Lily, who thankfully wasn't too many SUVs back.

"I don't like this." the ferret could hear the guards murmuring. "They're awfully suspicious if you ask me."

"Hey..." Tony said softly, approaching Lily now. "Are you all right? Just... don't make any sudden moves." he advised her as he stood over her now before kneeling down. "They want you to stand up. But do it slowly... OK?" He tried to sound reassuring so that she wouldn't panic and set security off.

Tony noticed Lily wasn't doing a very good job of rising. She appeared dazed, and perhaps the fall out of the SUV had winded her more badly than the ferret had initially thought. He could hear his father's soldiers muttering all about him, their weapons still trained on Axel and the prone Lily.

"All right..." Tony said, knowing he had to do something. He reached out, and firmly grasped hold of Lily. He didn't yank her to her feet though, but instead gently started helping her rise. "Just take it slow." he told her softly. "It's all right! It was an accident!" he called over to the guards, who gradually showed signs of relaxing, though their wariness still remained and their rifles didn't lower much.

"Are you all right?" the ferret asked her now. "I'm going to have to get you to a vehicle. We'll go at your pace though if you were injured." he politely informed her.

Lily staggered to her feet. Not meeting anyone's eye, she allowed Tony to lead her back to the first SUV. She didn't say anything.

Emilena kept the syringe hidden behind her back and glanced at Sanjay, looking for a cue. She wasn't sure how they were supposed to deal with two armed guards when they weren't even freed. Maybe they should have waited for the wolf to free them after all.

Title: Into the Black

Tony noticed Lily's quiet disposition, so he too remained silent as he moved her back to the first SUV and Kojuuro. The guards had trained their rifles on him when he'd stepped out, and finally, the lead guard stepped forward again. "Just make sure it doesn't happen again." he said with some annoyance. "Get back in your vehicles and move along."

Tony helped Lily into the SUV, and gave her a pat on the back. "Don't worry. You'll be fine." he said, and stepped away now, moving back over to Axel. "I think we're all good. I don't know what happened, but we can figure it out at the house." he said now. "We can't stay here blocking the gate. We gotta get moving."

Already he could see lights flaring up inside the main house, and the ferret wondered who would be waiting for them at the front doors. Certainly not his father, but he knew he'd be seeing him before the night was out. The front porch lights snapped on as well, indicating they were getting ready to receive the newcomers.

Sliding back into the passenger seat of the truck, Tony waited for Axel to get them rolling again as he turned around to speak to Soren. "You said you needed... something to make your suit work again? We might be able to get you what you need at the house." he stated.

"Yeah, okay..." Axel turned back to the truck slowly when Tony let him know everything was fine, his pulse rocketing from the shock of the situation. What the hell was she doing? Maybe she got scared of the guards... The sentries still looked agitated - Tony was right, they could figure out what happened later. He hurried back to the driver's door and climbed in, starting up the engine quickly and rolling through the entrance. "Jesus, they were actually going to shoot, weren't they?" he muttered, shaken. "Thanks for stopping them..."

After a few moments, the truck reached the front of the huge mansion. There was a figure standing at the top of the porch, but with the lights behind them Axel couldn't make out who they were. He let the truck stop in front and glanced at Tony, unsure of what to do now.

There were several figures in fact, most of them soldiers of the estate, though two looked different. One was a lean but powerful looking crocodile whose rows of razor sharp teeth glinted in the porchlights. The other was an immaculately dressed green iguana who immediately stepped forward. "Tony! It is you!" the iguana said, the spines running down his back flecked with tinges of red which seemed to wave a bit in the light.

"Max!" Tony exclaimed, beaming as he exited the truck. The crocodile meanwhile stepped down from the stairs and motioned for the SUVs to park in a lot off to the side of the house. "Axel, this is Ignatius Fontana, but we call him Max here. He's my father's consigliere." Tony introduced Axel to the iguana now. "The big croc is Oscar Gambino, one of my father's capos." he explained.

"Pleased to meet you." Max responded. "On behalf of Don Anthony Stracci, welcome to the Heights. If you would please proceed to follow me inside, you'll be screened, and then we'll get you set up with some rooms if required. Tony, your father wishes to see you at the earliest convenience." Max informed the ferret as he led the way toward the front entrance.

"Yeah... well he's going to have to see some of my companions, too. They helped me out... brought me here. Is dad... angry?" Tony asked, flinching.

"Hard to say. He rarely shows his emotions, you know. Now then, if you would all step into the side room here, you'll be screened, and then we can get down to business." Max instructed the others. The room to the side was really a giant screening device, able to detect even concealed weapons inside bodies. Tony stepped with Max into the main foyer, bypassing the security checkpoint for now. The house was still as lavish as Tony remembered it, his father's taste in Renaissance Revival still strong it seemed.

The ferret caught Lily's comment and couldn't help but crack a smile. "The bathrooms are rather palatial in size." he informed her. "I don't think we have a small one in this house. I have to admit, kind of an odd category of room to muse over, but there you are." he stated.

Soren stayed behind and outside the mansion itself because his exoskeleton was pretty much deadweight. Four guards watched him ó both to ensure he wouldn't attack them and to ensure that his stuff wasn't stolen.

Anne emerged from the screening room and met up with the others.

She whistled as she laid eyes on the lavishly decorated interior. She had a vague suspicion that behind some of those elegant carvings lay sensors or even hidden weapons.

Sanjay thought a moment. "That was the only way to get your attention. Now I'd to point out that my cellmate hid contraband in the toilet."

Running back out, he was snaking a long extension cord behind him as he darted past Max, the iguana giving him a confused look. Hopping down the stairs and to the truck, the ferret held out the power plug to Soren now. "Here you are, Soren. You can use this since it's connected directly to one of the house's generators. We sometimes use it to charge vehicles parked out front, but I don't see why you can't use it." the ferret shrugged here, offering him a smile. "I'll just chalk it up to what my father owes you guys for 'rescuing' me." he said in a lower tone now.

The guards raised their eyebrows. "Back against the wall," he ordered. "Both of you!"

Tony gave Soren a nod, glad he could finally help out. "Yeah... it certainly is." he agreed, looking back up at the house. "Well... I'll see you inside then." he said, giving him a wave, and heading back to the foyer while Soren's suit charged.

He arrived in time to catch Kojuuro's remarks, and rocked his head back at this. "Oh... well uh... I guess that's OK." he said now, caught off guard by Kojuuro's apology. "I had no idea you were connected to my father."

"He is indeed, and things are running smoothly, thanks." Max responded, giving Kojuuro a smile of recognition. "I wasn't sure if it was you or not before, but I can see now it is. Business is going very well for the Straccis as of late." he informed the merc.

"Now then... if the lady requires a shower, we can provide that." The iguana waved at a human guard who was kind of hovering around the door. "Bruno, take the lady to one of our guest bathrooms. You may shower or draw a bath if you wish." the consigliere informed Lily. "Just follow Bruno, he'll show you the way."

"Max... is dad... dining alone tonight?" Tony asked, approaching the iguana now.

"Hmmm, I don't know. I'm sure your mother is eager to see you, though. With so many guests, Don Stracci may organize a group dinner, for those interested. Right now he's conducting some business with a supplier, but he should be available shortly." He caught Axel's comment, and shook his head. "I think we could arrange some more... suitable clothing for you to wear." he commented.

Tony nodded at this, and looked behind him at the group. "Anyone up for a dinner with my pops?" he asked, fiddling with his claws.

Lily gratefully followed the iguana to the nearest bathroom. Smiling shyly, she shut the door and gasped when she turned around and saw what amounted to a small pool covered head to toe with water jets, adjustable currents, and peculiar colored nozzles.

Curiously she hit one and fragranted fluid dispensed into her hand.

These are shampoos and body washes, she thought with amazement. He's got spigots for different flavors of shampoo and body wash!

Sanjay's attack distracted the other guard for split second, long enough for Emilena to leap forward and stab him through the forehead with the syringe. This did not do good things for him.

Heh, because they're purifiers you don't need to worry about subdermal armor, she thought wistfully as the guard began screaming and jolting uncontrollably. Reliving him of his rifle, she mercy-killed both of them and double-timed down the hallway. "I'll lead, you navigate."

Tony nodded at Kojuuro. "Very well. I can find my own way up there, thanks Max." Tony said, waving off the consigliere. The ferret led the way up to his father's study, climbing a set of stairs and moving down several hallways until he was standing outside the heavy paneled door. "Well... let's do this." he said, trying to gather himself up before he inhaled deeply, then strode into his father's office.

Cigar smoke curled around an older ferret who sat at the desk at the far end. He was puffing away on a long stogie, and was squinting across the room in his typical fashion. "Come in." Don Stracci said quietly, motioning with his paw for his son to step forward.

Tony hadn't breathed yet, and began moving forward. "Hello... pops." Tony finally said, letting his breath out in too loud a fashion.

Blowing out a wreath of blue smoke, his father narrowed his eyes, the cigar hovering around his mouth before the don tapped it into an ashtray. "If you EVER... leave me again..." Don Stracci said, fixing one eye on his son as he narrowed the other one to practically closed.

"Pops I'm..."

"Shut up!" the don snapped, rising to standing behind his desk now. He wasn't a tall ferret, but he was taller and more well-built than his son, who was much thinner by comparison. "Don't you EVER leave the family again, you hear me? Your mother was worried half to death... how could you do that to her?" he demanded.

"I'm sorry..." Tony said, hanging his head and closing his eyes. "I messed up dad... I know... I haven't done a lot of things right lately... but I came back... I came back because I love you... I love mom... I'm sorry dad... forgive me... please."

His father remained stone-faced, still squinting at him. "You better explain yourself."

"I will..." Tony nodded. "I... was stupid... I was immature... I wanted more... I was impatient... I fell in with a bad crew... dad I just... look, some guys helped me out. They got me out of there... brought me back... I'm sorry OK? Please... I just want to be your son again. I'll do anything... please." Tony clasped his paws together.

His father eyed him darkly, then looked at Kojuuro. "This boy telling the truth?" he asked, nodding at Tony. "That how it was? You got him out?"

As Tony and Kojuuro walked off, Axel looked at Max. "I'm a medium... Thanks a lot, I really appreciate it." He was led down another corridor to a large dressing room containing a huge variety of clothing. There was a row of shirts hung up on coat hangers along one side of the wall, and he made his way over, shifting his way through gently until he found a light blue shirt with medium on the tag. "I won't get too many food stains on it, I promise."

When Axel peeled off his T-Shirt, he winced at the sight of the ugly bruises and scrapes dotted around his body. In all the excitement, it was easy to forget he'd been thrown around a fair bit in the past few days. Unhooking the shirt, he slipped it on and buttoned it up. Clearly, even though it was a medium, it was fitted for someone more heavyset than him - it was a little ill-fitting and hung slightly loose on his lankier frame. At least I don't look like I've been dragged through mud anymore.

He rolled up the sleeves then swiveled back to Max. "I feel like one of the Family! Sorry. Erm..." Holding his balled up T-Shirt in his hand, he looked around for somewhere to put it. Finally, he stuffed it down one of his jeans' pockets, the top of it poking out and flapping down. "Alright, I'm good. Thanks again." Max took him back to the lobby where the others were waiting.

"Kojuuro's still talking to Tony's dad?" he asked Marie. "Better him than me..." He looked at Anne. "This place is huge! The changing room's bigger than my whole apartment!"

Don Stracci narrowed his eyes now at this, and took a long series of puffs from his cigar before he blew out a great pall of smoke and sighed. "Hm... yes... good to see you again. You've done us a service... I'll repay in kind." he said, nodding at Kojuuro. "Very well..." he started moving from his desk now and towards Tony.

The younger ferret gulped, but didn't move, trembling a little as his father reached out, but instead of smacking him sharply across his face, Stracci Sr. placed a paw on his shoulder. It was firm, but not painful. "It's good to have you back." were the words now, and Tony stopped cringing, relaxing a bit as a small smile played over his features. "Say hello to your mother before you eat."

"Yes... thanks pops!" Tony said, brightening up considerably now. He then proceed to hug his dad, which caused the older ferret to straighten up and initially do nothing, caught off guard by his son's display of affection. Though Tony couldn't see it, the slightest wisp of a smile passed over his father's face before he clapped him once on the back.

"Yeah... now go. She's waiting." his father ordered.

"Right." Tony nodded, and looked at Kojuuro. "Thanks for the assistance. I'll be down in a bit after I see my mother." he informed him.

Gittsun blearily opened his eyes. He groaned and raised himself up into a sitting position, taking in his surroundings. He was sat in the back of a car... how did he get here? Oh right... The girls went to help their friend... His foot clunked against something and he looked down. It was a whiskey bottle. Right... On the way to... wherever they were meeting Marita's friend, he been taking some generous gulps of it, and after a while he'd felt like taking a nap in the back. But... where was he now?

Looking through the car windows, he could see he was in some kind of lot. A little way away, in the distance, there was a large mansion. Since the girls weren't here, he could only assume they were over there - though thinking right now was a little hard... Rubbing his temples and letting out another groan, he opened the car door and dragged himself out. Letting it close behind him, he leaned against the body of the car and looked around him.

There wasn't anyone around... No, there's someone! A few meters away, a man in a suit leaned against a fence, facing the opposite direction. He was listening to some kind of MP3 players, his head bopping up and down slightly - Gittsun could make out a pair of earphones sticking out of his ears. Maybe he knows if the girls are at the house... or if there's anything else to drink, heh.

"Hey mister!" he called out. There was no response. Apparently the man's music was too loud. "A little help here?" Still nothing. Damn it. Still limping on his leg, Gittsun stumbled over, his shoes kicking up little clouds of dirt from the floor. He reached the man leaning on the fence. "Hello?" Gittsun clapped a hand on his shoulder.

The guard whirled around, his heart almost jumping out of his chest as his silenced pistol whipped out, and fired off three rounds. They connected with Gittsun's chest, throat, and head, splaying blood about onto the fence and causing the human to stagger back and to the side. Unfortunately, he was staggering right towards the cliff face, and though the horrified guard tried to reach out and grab him, he only grasped thin air as Gittsun tumbled over the side and plummeted hundreds of feet into the black void of the rocky canyons below...

Anne whistled. "Yeah, I could use a meal but let's wait until everyone's present first."

She sat down in an opulent seal-skin chair. "Wow, sealskin. That must a cost quite a few creds."

She rubbed a finger along her horn inplant. There was a small gouge at the base where some punks had tried to cut off her horn. Unfortunately for them, the horn also made a rather effective stabbing weapon and the Shetland's metal shod hooves did a major number on the thieves' bodies.

Soren's suit had charged up and he had stripped it off. The guards had told him ó in no uncertain terms ó that his weapons, HMD and exoskeleton could not be bought into the Stracci

Compoun. On the flipside, they assured that his equipment would be left untouched

He was escorted to the screening room. A few minutes later, he was in the lobby with Max, Axel and Anne.

The Human looked around the elegant room with its white and black marble floors, crystal chandalier and subdued yet tasteful Italian Renassiance decor.

He took a seat in another sealskin upholstered chair as he waited for whatever business

(Purifier Compound)

Sanjay had his pistol out as he navigated through the dimly lit stainless steel and concrete hallways of the complex. Luckily, his cybernetic third eye could see quite well with the low light available.

Unfortunately for the Indian Cobra, his hearing wasn't as good as that of a Vulpine ó or for that matter, a Human.

Aaron slammed back a bottle of beer. The breakroom was a rowdy environment with guards of all species drinking, cursing and generally having a good time.

"You see that cunt in Cell 43-B?" one of the guards ó a big Clydesdale stallion with a skull and crossbones freeze brand on his right bicep.

Aaron pounded back the rest of his beer. "You mean the Vulpine?"

Another guard, a scarred up Human, nodded. "The one who practically came all over you and Marcus during the torture session!"

Aaron's eye twitched as he clenched his beer bottle. "Anyways," he said, his flattened ears betraying his true emotional state. "What do we do next!"

"Get the Fox and Sanjay some more butt-buddies!" a Collie exclaimed. Like the other's she was either scarred up or had a freeze brand. In her case, it was half of her right year ó it had been bitten off by a Macaw in a street fight.

Marcus sat hunched over in the corner of the breakroom, his hands balled into fists and laying on the surface of the table he occupied. Though the room was full, the others tended to avoid Marcus, which was fine by him - he had no interest in joining in with their inane, drunken conversations.

A scowl creased his face as he wondered why Echo and Bhat were still alive. Normally, a prisoner's reward for reaching the end of their interrogation was a bullet to the back of the head. What was so special about these two? Leaving loose ends made Marcus uncomfortable.

All he'd been told was to ensure that Emilena wasn't injured too badly in the course of her questioning. Marcus clenched his fists. He'd seen that Wolf walking around the compound...

though they'd had dealings with him in the past, Marcus knew he couldn't be trusted. He's involved in this somehow...

Tony rejoined the group a few moments later, having been warmly greeted by his doting mother. The family matriarch had been overjoyed at seeing him, and had practically drowned him in worrying affection. The ferret had finally managed to excuse himself under the pretense of needing to get ready for dinner, and after about 15 minutes, was back with the main group.

He noticed Soren had joined the group, and greeted the human as he sat down. "Glad you could join us, Soren! We'll be eating together in about half an hour, so I hope you're hungry." the ferret said. He noted that everyone now seemed to be present, and he didn't notice Gittsun's absence, namely because he hadn't met Gittsun before, so wasn't even aware he was missing. He noted Lily was still away as well, but that wasn't surprising if she had wanted to freshen up.

"I see you changed." Tony nodded at Axel. "Bloody shirt not snazzy enough for dinner?" he inquired, comically using Axel's previous term here.

He grinned and took a spare seat next to Soren. "I can't remember the last time I ate something that wasn't from the microwave."

He looked between Tony and Kojuuro. "So, Koj said the meeting went well?"

Lily was completely ensconced in the bath. The jets were playing water across every curve of her exhausted body, and the mingling of every available shampoo and bubble bath had formed an aromatic perfume around her little haven. Even stretching her body out as far as she could, she couldn't even brush the porcelain edges of the jacuzzi tub.

It was the single most relaxing thing she had experienced since waking up in the forest. Drifting off into a deep content sleep, she didn't even notice that she was completely submerged and breathing underwater.

Emilena ushered Sanjay into a closet as several unknown individuals walked through their hallway. "We aren't going to get this lucky forever," she muttered. "Someone's gonna see us or sound an alarm eventually..."

She creaked the door open a peek, and the unoiled hinge gave a protesting shriek. One of the Purifiers, who had silently stopped to check a text, jumped and looked around. Emilena snapped forward and smashed the pistol into his skull. This only resulted in him screaming uncontrollably. Cursing, Emilena finished him off with a series of shots to the face and chest.

"Goddamit, why can't some people die quietly?" she swore. Casting her eyes around the room, she doubled her pace.

Once she was gone, the mutilated young man crawled slowly down the hallway, leaving a thick trail of blood. Reaching an emergency phone, he dialed security but passed out before it finished ringing.

A series of faint, muted pops from down the corridor drew Marcus' attention. His ears flattened as he turned his head slowly towards the open doorway next to him. Gunshots? Possibly... but the gun range was in the opposite direction - and from the dull, echoing quality to the noise, it sounded like it was being carried a long way down the maze-like corridors. Marcus' stomach knotted. The cells are in that direction...

Nobody else in the breakroom had made any sort of reaction, deaf to all but the laughs and shouts of their conversations. He rose and made his way out through the doorway, proceeding cautiously down the hallway. The clump of his footsteps soon replaced the echo of voices as he turned and followed the branch-off that led to the cells.

"I am indeed, Tony," Soren said as he took a seat. He then involuntarily shuddered as he recalled the fight with the Purifiers. What if they had managed to stick a tracer on his stolen truck or on one of them?

Anne then turned to Soren. "Hey, Soren. Mind looking at my horn? I'm having trouble transmitting signals."

Soren nodded as he looked at the Shetland's horn implant. He noticed a rather deep nickóone that could be caused by an angle grinder or some other cutting instrument. "I don't have the right tools and equipment but it looks like someone tried cutting off your horn.

"No shit," Anne growled.

Soren looked at the nick closer. After a few minutes, he nodded his head. "It looks like the transmitting cable got severed. I can fix it so you can send signals but without the right tools and materials, the signals will be kind of staticky."

"Whatever, just fix it and get rid of that nick!"

Soren nodded. "Axel, Anne's horn implant needs a bit of repair. Mind giving me a hand?"

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron's ears suddenly shot upright as a distinct odor wafted past his nose. Blood. Coupled with the gunshots he had heard opposite the shooting rangeóand the screamingóthat meant only one thingóprison break.

He gave a loud and deep bark that silenced everyone in the room. "We have a prisoner loose."

That did it! All the guards practically stumbled over each other as they made their way to the armory.

"Marcus," he radioed. "I'm coming with the rest of the guards!"

He then tucked the radio into his belt as he followed the others to the armory.

Sanjay's heart thudded in his chest as he looked around the closet. "We need to create a distraction that should occupy the Purifiers or cause panic. Once we do that, we can hopefully get to an exit and swipe a vehicle."

He then noticed the air intake above him. "Speaking of which, I have an idea! Got one of those autocig?"

(OOC - an autocig <slang terms: burner, hot stick, poke 'n smokes, pull-starts> is a self-lighting cigarette. Cheap ones ignite via an incendiary chemical reaction. More expensive ones ignite via an electrically heated wire.)

Tony nodded at Axel. "It did indeed go well! Well... as well as can be expected with my pops. He rarely gets positively emotional. Negatively... oh yeah... but hey... he is my father." the ferret said here now. He took some interest in what Soren and Axel might be doing with Anne's horn. They had some time before dinner after all, and Tony took interest in this. He wasn't really technically inclined, but things like "shop" always intrigued him, so he kind of hovered around, hoping to maybe learn a few things.

"No, but someone around here does," Emilena kicked the door open to a nearby lounge room and brandished her pistol threateningly at the two surprised occupants, who were playing on a game console. "Nobody move and I don't shoot!" she yelled, firing twice and hitting both in the back. "Wait, crap. Oops."

She rifled through the drawers and their pockets and came away with a number of useful items, such as a lighter, batteries, writing supplies, steel wool, and a pack of autocigs. "Work your magic," she smiled, passing him all of the items; she had a distressing lack of pockets at the moment.

At the armory, a young wolf Purifier came puffing into view. He had a bloodied wound on the side of his head. "The Vulpine!" he gasped to Aaron. "She and the snake...they're heading below! I think they're trying to escape through the sewers!"

"That's good," Axel smiled at Tony. "I'm glad." He turned to look at Anne and Soren. "Sure, no problem. Soren's right though, with what we've got it might be a pretty patchy job," he said as he rose and approached the pony, "But hey, you seem like a patchy kind of girl." He bent closer to the damaged augment. "Mind if I just..." Axel carefully held the horn as he switched vision. He could see a faint electrical signal getting past the cut.

"It's not a clean cut all the way through," he said as he straightened up and glanced at Soren, his eyes flicking back to blue. "If we had something thin enough, I think it should fairly simple to connect the wires up again. Then we could try soldering the cut closed?" He looked down at Anne and chewed his lip. "You should be back to your... uh, charming self in no time."

Marcus rounded a corner and stopped dead when he saw the body of the Purifier sprawled on the ground, a phone buzzing in his outstretched hand. "Son of a bitch..." he snarled as he looked up the hallway. They had to have gone that way, it was a straight path back the way he'd come...

He heard the voice of the young Purifier crackling through faintly on his radio. "Aaron!" he barked into it, "Go down into the sewers and get everyone to split into four teams, one for each exit - follow the others, they know their way through! I'm heading up to cover the ground from the roof..."

The mutilated Purifier on the ground gurgled, still clinging to life that was rapidly fading. Marcus stepped over him and started sprinting towards his quarters where he kept his sniper rifle.

As Aaron and his men raced to the sewers, the young Wolf purifier watched them go with a calculating look, all fear and pain vanishing suspiciously quickly. Then he darted in the other direction.

A guard stood at the entrance to the back alleyways. He was startled when a burning ball suddenly ignited to his left.

Immediately he cocked his rifle and assumed a combat stance. "Identify yourself!"

Then Emilena shot him from behind. The ball had been a battery wrapped in steel wool, which ignited shortly after Emilena threw it.

Emilena kicked the door open. "That had to sound an alarm, but we're almost out of here."

As they darted into the alleyways, she glanced up at the looming headquarters. She noted a sniper tower overlooking them and shuddered. Luckily, it appears nobody was stationed in it at the moment...

"Come on!" she hissed, waving at Sanjay. "We gotta move!"

Marcus barreled through the door to his quarters, grinding his teeth hard enough to make his jaw crack. Crouching down, he grabbed a heavy metal box and dragged it out from under the bed. Unclipping the latches, he threw it open to reveal a dissembled sniper rifle. Still crouching down, Marcus snatched up the pieces and rapidly put it together. He didn't care why the two prisoners had been allowed to live this long... but they'd escaped, and they'd killed one of the Purifier's soldiers. They had to die.

Sliding the stock home and locking it into place, he grabbed a handful of bullets and loaded them in with the bolt as he darted out of the room and down the hallway. Soon, he turned off and came to a narrow metal staircase rising sharply up, the faint sound of wind echoing down. A small sign drilled into the wall leading to it was marked Watchtower. Slinging the rifle over his shoulder, Marcus charged up the stairs three at a time.

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron stopped by the armory to get a shotgun. He muttered some curses as he started loading his weapon. The men with him grabbed their own weapons.

"All right into the sewers!"

The group quickly headed outside and lifted up a manhole cover. Slinging their weapons across their backs, they quickly descended the ladder. Spots of light could be seen as the men turned their weapon lights on.

Sanjay nodded and crouched so his entire body touched the ground. He then slithered surprisingly quickly after Emilena.

He looked around, scanning with his infrared third eye implant. He smiled as he noticed a large transformer was nearby. Unfortunately, it was surrounded by a fence too narrow for him too squeeze through.

The Indian Cobra looked at his pistol and then Emilena's rifle. His pistol wasn't powerful enough to pierce the plating of the transformer but her rifle was. "If I can set that transformer on fire, the power outage and flames should cause enough panic that we can scram before they know what's going on.

He took out a handful of autocigs – all chemically ignited ones – and carefully ripped away the tobacco, revealing a small waxed paper pouch the size of a pea. Squeezing the cigarette in the proper place would break the pouch, causing the two chemicals to mix and ignite, lighting the cigarette.

Sanjay then carefully wrapped the incendiary pouches in a sheet of writing paper.

"Okay, once you shoot a hole in the transformer and oil leaks out, I'll use the lighter to set the paper on fire and then throw it into the oil. The paper won't burn hot enough to light the oil but it'll burn away the paper on the autocig lighters, which will give a very hot but short lived flame. That should set the oil on fire."

He then held the crude incendiary grenade with one hand and a lighter in the other. "On your shot."

(The Heights)

"Whatever works," Anne said with a shrug.

Soren looked at the cut. "Some aluminium foil should do the trick." He then turned to Tony. "Mind showing me to the kitchen?"

"Oh yeah, sure!" Tony nodded. "This way!" he exclaimed, waving his paw as he led the way towards his family's massive kitchen. Massive was a bit of an understatement though. The kitchen in here was more like a hotel's kitchen, with a lot of large mixers and ovens and stoves. Tony felt a little embarrassed showing Soren this, but quickly moved to one of the numerous cabinets and tossed over a box of aluminum foil. "Here you are! If you need more, just let me know." be said simply.

He then carried the box to the living room where Anne was sitting in a sealskin chair.

Anne looked at the foil. "Well fuck me, I'm getting fixed up with kitchen goods!"

Soren sighed as he carefully tore up a piece of the foil. "Okay, Axel, Tony, I need some more things: a radio, a set of pointed tweezers, some non-conductive glue, solder and soldering iron."

He turned to Tony. "Lead the way, I'll give you a hand. Unless your family hasn't gotten around to buying a radio..."

Marcus reached the top of the watchtower, the metal flooring rattling underfoot. It was a plain setup, a square perch with a roof shielding it, surrounded by a metal balcony that ran all the way around. He stepped out onto the balcony and looked down, the wind snapping his coat to the side. This watchtower gave him almost total visibility across the northern side of the compound - the side that faced towards Lanthae city. If they were going to be escaping on the surface, this would be where they'd go.

He rested the rifle on the balcony railing and switched the scope to night-vision, scanning the dark alleyways below.

"Uh... OK, sure." Tony nodded now, trying to think of where he could obtain these things. "Well my father has a radio... but we're not... using that one." he said hesitantly. "I'm sure there's others around the house in the guest rooms... the tweezers would be in a bathroom, and the glue, solder, and soldering iron can all be found on the workbench in the garage... or... should I say... the shop, in the garage." Tony said, trying to sound modest.

He led the way to the stairs now, heading up to the halls on the second floor of the house. Walking down the carpeted floor, his shoes made only muted echoes as he looked from left to right. He bypassed his siblings' rooms, and made for the guest rooms around the corner. Knocking on one and not hearing anything on the other side, the ferret entered and looked around. "See if there's a radio in one of the nightstands. I'll check the bathroom." Tony wandered past the polished and heavily paneled veneer of the guest room (including the poster bed) and entered the bathroom. Most guest rooms in his father's house had en-suite bathrooms, and this one was no exception. "OK... OK... let's see." he murmured, rummaging around in the medicine cabinet, and pulling out some tweezers. "Got some tweezers in here!" he called to Axel. "How'd you fare on the radio?"

He pulled open the final drawer and pushed aside a leather bound copy of 'Great Expectations', reaching further in. "Oh hey, I... I think I found something..." he announced as his fingers closed around a heavy object.

He pulled it out to see it was indeed a radio. It looked like a pretty expensive make too, but it looked like it hadn't been used in a while. "Yep, got it!" he said, standing up and tucking it under his arm. Damn, something like this would take me ages to save up for it. These guys are really loaded. "Workshop next?"

Tony caught sight of the copy of Great Expectations in the drawer as Axel pulled out the radio. "Oh hey, that's my favorite book! I wonder what it's doing in there..." the ferret wondered, pulling on his chin fur. "Anyway yeah... let's go to the shop." He nodded, and led the way back out into the hall, threading his way around the corridors and back down the stairs, then towards the side of the house where the garage was located. "OK... try not to have a heart attack." the ferret warned the rat as he opened the door.

The garage extended into the darkness for quite some ways before the lights automatically kicked on, their glow glinting off the polished chrome and rich colors of cars from all eras (though mostly classic) arrayed in two rows that ran down the length of the place. There was a Marmon, Isotta Fraschinis, Auburns, a Cord, Delahayes, Aston Martins, Bugattis, a 1953 Allard, an Avions Voisin, a Stutz, Packards, Pierce Arrows, and numerous other vehicles even further down the rows, making his garage more a museum. "Uh... my dad likes cars." was all Tony said, and moved to his right into what was like an auto repair shop.

"I think we can divide up what to carry so we're not overwhelmed." he suggested, looking around for the supplies.

"Alright, sounds fair enough," he agreed, coming up beside Tony. He sifted through some of the tools piled on the workbench with his free hand, then made a contented noise. Leaning forwards, Axel picked up a worn tube of non-conductive glue. "Well, I guess I've found what I'm carrying," he joked as he slipped it into his pocket, freeing up his hand for another item.

Emilena nodded and blasted it with a single shot. As if on cue, oil began leaking out.

She looked nervously at the sniper tower; if anyone was in there, they'd have heard the shot. "How long is this gonna take?" She asked.

A mansion cleaning lady, noticing that the bathroom had been silent for hours, knocked politely. "Hello?" She asked. "Is someone in there...?"

"Yeah... I guess it is." Tony chuckled, shaking his head as he picked up the solder and soldering iron. "I think I can manage these. You got the biggest thing with the radio, after all." Tony nodded at the radio in Axel's paws.

As they stepped out of the shop now, Tony glanced at a 1939 Delahaye 165 Cabriolet. "That is a sleek car." the ferret said appreciatively of it. "It's one of my favorites that my dad owns. That and well... the 1932 Auburn Speedster V-12. I mean can you imagine it? A V-12?" Tony grinned, shaking his head as they exited the garage. "You a car person, I mean, you know, with your name and all?" Tony joked.

"Oh yeah, in my spare time I'm an illegal street racer. But don't tell anyone..." Axel mock whispered. "Nah. I mean, I'm not, like, an expert on cars or anything. But holy crap, you'd have to be dead not to like those babies!"

As they made their way back around to the house to where the others were waiting, Axel glanced at the ferret, his ears perked up with interest. "So, any other collections around the house? Mona Lisa in the bathroom?"

The crack of the rifle shot carried up to Marcus on the howling wind. He snapped the sniper's sight down to where he'd heard it, and caught movement down in the alleyways below. Two figures were huddled below. Marcus zoomed his scope in, and hissed. A dumpster between them and him obscured his vision of the pair - he could only get brief glimpses of them as they moved around. Marcus didn't want to take any chances - one shot, one kill for each of them.

Keeping his scope on their cover, he reached down with one hand and unhooked his radio. "Aaron, they're not in the sewers. They're on the surface heading for the north exit." There was no response. "Aaron? Aaron?! Fuck!" he snarled, throwing the radio into the tower behind him. Was something jamming it? Marcus returned both hands to the sniper and steadied his aim, finger hovering above the trigger. The moment one of them poked their head out, he'd put them down.

"I know! Right?" Tony asked as they walked back, chuckling at Axel's mention of being a street racer. "I just HAVE to convince my dad to let me roll on outta here in one of his cars when you guys leave!" he exclaimed. "That'd be so cool!"

As he listened to Axel's next question, Tony couldn't suppress a grin. "Well, my father DID buy the Mona Lisa, but the French government refused him an export permit." he explained, not elaborating on whether he was being truthful or not, only giving the rat an amused look.

As they rejoined the main group, Tony waved the tweezers. "Hey, Soren! We got your stuff!" he called.

With a light whiff, a microscopic dart embedded itself into Markus' neck, fired from somewhere behind him. It had an almost instantaneous tranquilizer effect, designed to put every muscle in the body into instant paralyzation. A beast thrice Markus' size wouldn't have the chance to even close his eyes.

The cleaning lady knocked again, and, hearing no response, took out her set of keys and unlocked the door. "I'm coming in..."

Sanjay lit his crude incendiary bomb with the lighter and quickly tossed it over the fence and into the pool of oil. The oil sputtered a bit but the paper continued to burn.

"Let's move! Those incendiary packets could burn through any moment!" He began slithering towards the exit as fast as he could.

Aaron's ear twitched at the gunshot echoing from one of the drainage pipes.

He frowned. "Fucking hell, they're above us!"

The German Shepherd slung his shotgun across his back and began climbing one of the ladders that led to the surface.

(The Heights)

"Thanks!" Soren said.

He used the tweezers to carefully push the tiny piece of foil into the cut in Anne's horn. Turning on the soldering iron and letting it heat up, he pushed the foil back a little bit more so there was a little indentation.

A small dab of the white nonconductive glue completely concealed the nick in Anne's horn. By the time the glue hardened, the soldering iron was now hot enough.

Soren tinned the soldering iron and carefully applied solder, covering the glue and making sure that the molten solder made an electrical connection between the two parts of her horn.

The Human turned off the soldering iron and turned on the radio until he got static. "Okay, Anne, transmit!"

Anne rubbed her horn to make sure everything was good. She took a deep breath and her ears splayed in contentment. They then shot up. Her voice – albeit marred with static – soon emnanated from the radio.

"It ain't perfect...but hey, it's better than nothing!

"That's... impressive!" Tony nodded as he heard Anne's voice come through the radio. Must've been a signal relay of some kind... but Max interrupted the group at that point.

"Ahem... dinner is served." he informed them, and led the way towards the dining hall.

"Right! I'm starved!" Tony said, rubbing his paws as he moved off to follow after the iguana. The dining room was large, like everything in the house, and a long mahogany table stretched off down the length of it. There was more than enough room for everyone, and a crystal chandelier hung from the center of the room, it's bright light playing over the walls and darker table.

Already seated at the table were four ferrets, Tony's siblings who turned to look at him as he entered. There were two males, and two females. The first male, the oldest, was brawny and looked like he could take on a mutant alligator. He was dressed casually, his arm draped across the back of the chair. The other male was more formally attired, but was slighter of build than both the older one and Tony. He had a very friendly disposition.

The older of the two females was... ravishing, to say the least. She had an ample chest, tight waist, and curvy figure. She regarded the group with some interest with deep eyes, though brightened upon seeing her favorite brother enter the room.

The younger female darkened upon seeing the group. She was the youngest in the family, probably mid-teens from the looks of it, and she looked anything but cheery, regarding the newcomers with suspicion and wariness.

"Yo, bro." The oldest brother said with a simple wave.

"Tony!" Both the older sister and the younger brother cried almost at once. The younger brother, Elio, actually jumped out of his chair and ran over to Tony to squeeze him affectionately, causing Tony to exhale.

"Ooof!" Tony breathed.

"It's been... a year! We were so worried! Well... I was at least." Elio said warmly, letting his brother breath now. "It's so good to see you again!"

"Yeah... it's good to see you too, Elio." Tony grinned. "Everyone... I'd like you to meet Victor, Elio, Paula, and Caroline. My pops will probably enter once everyone's seated, knowing him." the ferret introduced the group to the rest of his family.

Axel smiled and awkwardly scratched his arm. "Erm... hey. I'm Axel," he said, raising his hand in a wave. His smile faltered a little when he saw the dark look Tony's younger sister was giving them, but at least the rest of the family seemed friendly enough. "You guys have an awesome place," he tried lamely. Lily's been gone a while... he thought absently.

"Kids?" Caroline asked with some hint of revulsion at the term. Paula however elbowed her sister. "Oww! Watch it!" Caroline growled.

"We have guests." Paula shushed her younger sister. "Yes... we're... the don's children, as you put it. It's very nice to meet you as well." she told him, giving Kojuuro a winning smile.

"Uh right... let's uh... get ready to eat. I'm sure my father will be down soon." Tony said a bit nervously. He took a seat next to Elio, wanting to be near his younger brother for this.

Soren and Anne arrived and sat at the table.

Anne nodded as she saw Don Stracci's children.

"Hello," Soren said as he sat down and looked at the lavishly decorated room.

Anne looked around. "Hey, where's Lily and Marita?"

(Patrick's Neighborhood)

Outside a very posh looking gated community, a Ford 2031 Econoline van with the livery of a plumbing company drove up to the guard house. The guard at the front waved them through.

Inside the van were four men – a Purifier strike team. They were clad in dark blue and had pistols tucked into hip holsters.

Their mission wasn't to assassinate Patrick or destroy his property. They were going to give him a little scare.

The electric van's motor spooled down as the driver stopped. "All right, y'all know what to do!"

The men inside pulled down their balaclavas and donned gloves. They muscled out a large box with a laser carved metal note at the top – and the broken gear emblem.

They made their way to the front door of the house. One of the men, a equine of undetermined breed, got a cylindrical tube ready. Another one of the men used a small magnetic accelerator to shoot large ball bearings through every window.

"Go! Go!" the equine hissed as soon as he yanked the pull-ring and tossed the tube through one of the broken windows. The tube in question was a stolen military training grenade, designed to replicate the flash and thunder of an actual grenade but without the risk of starting fires or throwing shrapnel around.

The men scrambled into the van and drove off.

"Well, let's hope that silicon slut gets the message," one of the Purifiers said, pulling off her balaclava to reveal a surprisingly attractive Golden Retriever bitch. She ran a gloves hand through her golden headfur.

"He's probably too busy gettin' freaky with one of those chipheads!" another Purifier cracked.

The van was filled with raucous laughter as they drove off into the darkened elevated highway that led to this exclusive development. A distant bang was heard as the training grenade went off.

When Patrick would wake up, he would find a file box containing forty pounds of metal scrap, a plastic bag with small bit of C-4 and a blasting cap and this laser-cut metal note:

Quote

> To Patrick Anderson,
> You have sold your fellow Baselines out to the technological abominations known as "Augments". The explosion you heard was the grenade simulant we tossed through your window.
> As you can see, the box in front of you is filled with forty pounds of metal scrap. This your first and only warning:
> Cease prostituting yourself to these hybrid abominations or else the next delivery you recieve from us will be C-4.
> [cracked gear emblem]

(OOC - silicon slut = term for someone who supports Augments, manufactures augmentations or works with augmentations. It is a highly insulting term and using it is likely to result in violence.)

(OOC - chiphead = term for Augment. It's not as offensive as Gleamer but it's still not a socially acceptable way to refer to an Augment.)

"I think Lily was taking a bath," Axel said as he took a seat next to Anne. "I... guess she's just taking her time to relax for once." He glanced down at the cutlery and tableware - it all looked good quality. The sight of the empty plate waiting for food made his stomach rumble. "I'm sure she won't mind if we, ah, just eat a little without her..."

He leaned his elbows on the tabletop, then quickly took them back off in case it offended the hosts, folding his arms nervously across his lap. "Your dad sounds like an interesting guy... I really, ah, like the collection he has in the garage."

Emilena darted out from behind the dumpster and kept her rifle aimed at anywhere that Purifiers might think to show themselves.

They reached a chainlink fence at the end of the alleyway and Emilena emptied her clip at it. "Bulletproof!" she cursed. Apparently somebody had installed basic security precautions in this area. "Either we climb, or find a way around!" She turned to Sanjay, looking for direction.

The purifiers could only be getting closer to their location....

The cleaning lady pushed the door open and coughed as she saw the room was filled with steam. The bath had been running nonstop for what must have been hours. "Hello?" she choked. The air was thick with a phlegmatic taste.

Stumbling to the jets, she turned off the bath and hit the fans. Once the room was clearer, she could see inside the bathtub and cried out. There was an unmoving body floating limply, and the bathtub water was saturated in thick blood.

Staggering backwards, she sprinted into the hallway and reached the first intercom she could. She immediately dialed the security guard on duty in this wing.

"There's been a murder in the east wing bathroom!" she exclaimed.

"I'm glad you like my collection... and that you think I'm an... 'interesting guy.'" The voice that responded to Axel's comments was low and accented, and standing at the entrance of the dining room was an older ferret. He wasn't particularly tall, but he wasn't overly short either. He was dressed in a blue pin stripe jacket, white shirt poking out from underneath and blue pants. A thick cigar was clamped between two of his claws, and he seemed to regard the party with a squint. At his side stood a female ferret wearing a red dress with black fur around the neckline, and a pearl necklace. "Auto enthusiasm is a hobby I've always shared with my son." The don nodded in Tony's direction as he took a puff from the cigar.

Tony nodded back once. "Sir." he replied.

"Which one of you..." the don looked at the assemblage. "Is the leader of your group? Which one of you decided to bring my son here?"

=========================

Security was all abuzz in the hall where Lily lay in the tub. The family doctor was summoned, and he entered the bathroom now accompanied by security. "All right..." he murmured, stretching gloves over his hands as he approached the figure in the bathtub. "OK... let's see what we've got here..." he whispered to himself as he knelt down to begin inspecting the body.

It soon became apparent that the body was not dead; she appeared to have passed out from blood loss. Small open wounds had appeared on the sides of both of her hands, and nubs of bone were sticking out, bones that didn't correspond to any naturally-ocurring bones in the human skeletal system. A much larger opening had formed in her tailbone area, which was where most of her blood loss had occurred. She had roughly 80% of the minimum required blood supply still in her system, which was putting incredible strain on her heart and keeping her in a state of unconsciousness.

He blinked at the Don's question. "Erm... we're, like, a team. Ah, sir... your, er... Don-ness..." Axel grimaced, trying to stop his mouth running. Don Stracci pulled the cigar out of his mouth and exhaled a wreath of blue smoke about his head, looking at the others. "A group?" he asked now, beginning to walk to the head of the table. "So... I have to give out a group reward?" he asked.

"I don't think you have to do anything, pops, if Tony hadn't left in the first..." Victor began, but a steely look from his father shut him up immediately.

"Quiet, boy. No, I believe in doing something... I reward loyalty, after all." the don said as he snuffed out his cigar in a crystal ashtray. Looking down at the meal prepared for him, he smiled. Spaghetti carbonara... his family favorite. There were also selections of veal, steak, salads, and chicken which waiters moved about the table with, offering them to each of the guests. If they didn't see what they liked, the waiters were more than happy to place a custom order.

"So... as a token of my... appreciation..." Don Stracci continued as he began twirling the pasta around his fork. Tony had the same dish as his father, his father remembering his son's shared tastes. "What can I do for you for bringing my son back?" he asked, shooting his narrow gaze around the table.

Tony shoveled a forkful of spaghetti in his mouth. He didn't want to speak out of turn, and if he recalled, there were some who had more solid ideas on what they wanted. Weapons would be good though, for as the ferret recalled, they would need some more firepower... and perhaps an all access pass to a hospital under the guise of a family member for Adrian. But of course... it was up to them what they wanted... Tony had his own ideas, namely a fast classic car for his personal use, but... later.

"She's still alive!" The doctor announced. "But she's lost quite a lot of blood! Let's get her down to the infirmary!" He noted the... changes that seemed to be causing this blood loss all over her body. It was as if she was metamorphosing into something... completely not human.

A few minutes later, Lily was set up on a bed down in the family infirmary. The doctor was busy cleaning and dressing her injuries to prevent further blood loss so that her heart could start replenishing the lost quantities. He was debating on whether or not he should hook her up to an IV, but didn't wish to start a blood transfusion until he knew her type, which he would get to after her wounds were probably dressed. He noted the bone protrusions through her skin, and did his best to work around them. As remarkable as it seemed, her entire structure seemed to be reworking itself.

Soren swallowed his mouthful of spaghetti carbonera. "Don Stracci," he said. "I only desire two things: repair of my workshop and house and exacting revenge on the Purifiers who destroyed my life."

Anne was eating the salad with gusto. Apparently, her high had worn off and she was having a serious case of the munchies.

(Purifier Compound)

The transformer fire had now gotten the attention of those in the compound.

Aaron climbed out of the sewers as soon as the alarm went off. The transformer that Sanjay had set aflame controlled the pumps – without them, the sewers would flood. He radioed Marcus. "Marcus! The fuckers burned one of the transformers!"

Sanjay looked at the fence. The holes were just wide enough for him to fit through. He squeezed through the gap and disappeared for a moment. He then returned with a knotted rope which he tied to a dumpster. "Climb that!" He tossed the rope over the fence.

Emilena had tried and failed to scale the fence; her bulky rifle slung behind her back kept throwing her off balance. Grasping the rope and gritting her teeth, she felt Sanjay pulling her over as the first of the Purifiers located their position.

Suddenly one of the bullets severed the rope and sent her plunging. Grasping the top of the fence with a wild cast of her arm, she panted loudly and was forced to abandon the rifle. Hoisting herself over, she went tumbling into the grime on the other side as the first salvo of bullets pinged against the fence.

She got to her feet staggering. "Go, go go!" she panted, racing down the alleyway as fast as she could.

It wasn't until they'd reached relative safety in an alleyway on the outskirts of the city that she realized she was limping and bleeding. "Sanjay, I think..." she staggered and collapsed. She'd been hit twice; once bullet had passed through the space below her left rib, the other was embedded in her right buttock.

Lupis stepped out of the shadows behind the paralyzed Marcus. Politely sliding the Doberman to the side, he equipped the rifle and sniped the first three Purifiers who attempted to follow Mr. Bhat and Officer Echo over the fence. Pressing a button on his watch, he lifted the radio jammer so that Marcus could hear the survivors radioing him in confusion and fright, trying to figure out what was going on.

With a shimmer, the Agent dissipated from sight.

Don Stracci considered Soren's request, and slowly nodded. "These Purifiers... it's become a rather dirty business as of late. While I can neither confirm nor deny if I deal in augments, the Purifiers have never been able to prove anything with me, and they know better than to randomly raid my trucks. I own a construction company... mostly road repair, but..." he paused here, his eyes not leaving Soren. "I would be willing to extend you this favor, and get your workshop and house rebuilt. However... the Purifiers are not my concern, even if they did invade the sanctity of your home. But... with that said..." he glanced over at Tony now.

"You did save my son and bring him home. For this kindness, I would be willing to lend you more... indirect assistance, shall we say, against these Purifiers. I don't like them personally." Don Stracci continued. "But I also have no war with them at present. However, there's an old saying... the enemy of my friends... is my enemy." the don stated, cracking a slight smile here.

"Sir, we were talking about maybe some guns. Firepower." Tony spoke up now respectfully.

"Guns?" his father smiled again. "I don't provide guns. I do however, provide hardware." It was clear what the euphemism meant, and also why the don was choosing to use it. "Hardware I can provide in abundance. All untraceable; the cops will never know where you got it, if it comes to that. And if you do get in trouble..." the don pointed at Soren now, still smiling, but in a much smaller way. "I can recommend some very good lawyers... or even a judge or two who sees things my way, provided you keep tight-lipped about where you obtained your hardware." The smile grew a tad here. Tony noted Max was present at the table... most likely for legal reasons. This conversation would be refuted by all of his siblings if it ever leaked, and Max would of course provide the clincher. Tony also knew that anyone who ratted his father out had extremely low expectations of actually making it to court to testify... it was amazing how many friends in unexpected places his dad actually had.

"If you could please provide Mr. Fontana the address of your workshop and home, I will ensure that one of my crews are sent out there. I can't guarantee work will start immediately... it's dependent on what current contracts I have, but we'll get the job done at some point." he promised Soren. "I never forget a favor requested of me." he said with finality.

"Oh... should we also ask for Adrian to be checked into a hospital under the protection of my family?" Tony asked Axel in a low voice now.

The family doctor backed away from the mechanical contraption now who was insisting it be allowed to attend to Lily. He merely gave it a nod. "Suit yourself." he said, moving off to at least get a chart started on Lily on his data pad.

Axel nodded across the table to Tony. "Ah, Don Stracci? One of the people who... Oh, thanks..." he paused as one of the waiters placed a salad in front of him. "One of the people who brought Tony back, Adrian, was injured pretty... ah, pretty badly. We took a look at him, and I think he's been taken upstairs, but there's only so much that can be done for him outside of a proper hospital. If it's possible... could you arrange to have him taken there and kept under some kind of... I don't know, protection or something? If he was here with us I'm pretty sure that's what he'd want."

He forked a bunch of the salad leaves into his mouth. The fresh food was a shock to his system after the microwaved, processed junk he'd been living on all this time, and he hungrily stuffed down another few mouthfuls. After a moment, he put the fork down and looked up hesitantly at the Don. "I, erm... I don't have a request for me personally. But the girl in our group, the one who went up to take a bath, Lily... she's in some trouble and we still don't really know why. The cops are all over my place so she couldn't stay there but... I'm asking if this could be a place where she'd be cool to, like, hide out and be protected, if she ever needed it. I want her to have at least one place she can feel safe at." He met the Don's eyes. "That's the favour I'm asking. If... if it's okay."

Marcus' head swam. He could hear gunshots, thumping as if they were a thousand miles away, and voices, tinny and distant, crackled from somewhere nearby. He tried to focus his mind. Faintly, he knew he'd been drugged somehow. Lupis... that motherfucker...

He picked up on Aaron's voice coming from somewhere. "Fuckers burned... transformers..." Marcus focused all his attention into trying to get his body moving again.

Don Stracci nodded. "Of course... I can place him under protection at a hospital of my choosing. He'll have security and the best doctors I can afford." the don graciously offered. He went back to his spaghetti as he listened to Axel's favor request.

"Hmmm... if she can stay here?" A thin smile spread across the don's lips now. "I would say yes but... you should never speak for a lady." he said, waving his fork at Axel in an admonishing fashion, the smile still there. "It's something I learned." he glanced at his wife now, smiling affectionately at her. "Provided your Lily agrees, it's done. But she needs to say yes herself." Don Stracci stated.

That was certainly fair enough, Tony thought.

Anne finished off her third bowl of salad.

"Shit!" Sanjay muttered. He quickly looked Emilena over. It didn't look like her spine was involved.

He then looked around the grimy alleyway. He could easily abandon her and the cops would think that she was a bum who pissed off some street thugs. Them again, Agent Lupis was probably watching – and he really wanted that reward.

Looping both arms under Emilena's armpits, he began dragging her to the street.

He flagged down a passing motorist, a Fruit Bat who appeared to be a construction worker.

"Forget it! I ain't helping no bum!" she snapped upon seeing Emilena's bruised and filthy state. She was about to close the door and drive off when Sanjay shoved his pistol in her face.

"That wasn't a request. Now help me get her in the car and get to Stephenson Memorial before I blow your fucking brains all over the road!"

The Fruit Bat backed away and carefully hoisted Emilena into her car's backseat. Sanjay slithered into the backseat and placed his pistol against the seat's lower back where it would be out of sight to the casual observer.

"Drive!"

The construction worker gulped and headed out of the dark alley way and into the LED light main highway.

"Alright, I understand," Axel said, nodding appreciatively at Don Stracci. "I'm sure she'll agree and... I just wanted the possibility to be there. Thanks."

When Kojuuro reported that Adrian was doing better, Axel looked sideways at him and smiled encouragingly... then did a double take when Lily was mentioned, the smile wrenched from his face. "What?! What happened, is..." He dropped his fork and pushed his chair out from the table, started to rise. "Where's the infirmary?"

"My pleasure." Don Stracci said to Soren. Max took the napkin, nodded once, and slipped it away somewhere inside his voluminous coat.

"I'll look through our current workload and let you know when construction can commence." Max told him.

Tony sat upright upon hearing Adrian was awake. Well... that was some recovery if he was trying to walk around! This was great news! He immediately wanted to go see him, but had his dinner to finish first. But that wasn't the end of the news, or so it seemed. Axel now desired to get to the infirmary, and Max opened his mouth to inform him where it was located, but Tony cut him off.

"You know what? I'll take you there." he offered. "I wanted to speak to Adrian anyway." he said. "I'll finish dinner when I get back." he promised his father, leading the rat out of the dining room now and towards a set of stairs that went down into the basement.

Moving down the flight of steps, Axel could see the basement was its own separate floor, with corridors that stretched away into a labyrinth of passages. Tony threaded his way through them, and fortunately, it wasn't a very long walk. The infirmary was brightly lit, all sterile and colored an off-shade of light green. There were a few beds down here, much more comfortable than you'd find in a typical hospital. "Here you are." Tony said, holding his paw out towards the open door.

Axel stepped past Tony through the doorway, and stopped dead when he saw Lily lying in one of the beds. The robotic Doctor who'd helped Adrian earlier was standing over her, performing some kind of test, and Adrian himself was up. Axel barely acknowledged them as he hastened across the room to where Lily lay, stopping on the opposite side of the bed to where the Doctor stood.

From here, he could see the dressings on her hands - it looked like she had deep cuts along the side of them. The pale green light spilling over the room made it seem like he was staring down at a body. "Lily?" Axel whispered, his voice trembling. He bent down and touched her shoulder lightly. There wasn't a response. Looking up, Axel's eyes were lost. "What the hell's happened to her? She was fine just a while ago..."

Emilena gritted her teeth and squinted her eyes as she bled all over the back of the construction worker's car.

"Why the hell are you...?" she coughed, thankfully no blood came out. That implies the abdomen bullet missed most vital organs. "Why aren't you just letting me die...?"

Lily moaned loudly. Her eyes suddenly flew open and her face contorted in pain. "Oh, it hurts!" She tried to roll onto her back, but the bloodied mass that had formed around her tailbone prevented this, so she remained curled in the fetal position. Something cracked and she cried out and arched her back, tearing the splint the doctor had set on her backside.

The bloodied mass was growing longer and fatter by the second. On her hands, two bony digits were pushing their way through her skin. She looked at them in horror when she tried to cover her face. "Oh god..." Her tear-stricken eyes locked with Axel's. "Help me..." she pleaded weakly.

Axel recoiled back at the sudden burst of movement from Lily. His leg bumped into the small metal table adjacent to the bed, tipping it over with a crash and scattering the medical instruments on the floor. He saw the extent of what was happening to her, saw the digits coming through the skin, saw the growth on her tailbone, and he felt his mind go numb. What the fuck...

He met her terrified eyes, and felt himself slowly pulled back into the moment. "It's okay... it's alright, I'm here..." Axel tried to say soothingly, rushing forward. He attempted to put his arms around her - with her thrashing, it was almost impossible to see if his touch was hurting her. "Look at me! Everything's going to be okay!"

Axel held her tightly and looked up at the Doktor. "Can't you give her something?! For fuck's sake, she's in pain!"

"Because I want to keep my augments!" Sanjay snapped. "And besides, you really think Lupis isn't watching?"

"Who?" the construction worker asked.

"Shut up and drive!" Sanjay pressed the pistol further into the seat back.

"Thank you for the dinner, Don Stracci. Your chefs are quite talented," Soren said as he finished off the fruit desert. "Now if you'll excuse me, I'd like to see how Lily is doing."

He carefully pushed the chair in and stood up. He then waited until Marita moved as he decided to follow her.

Don Stracci nodded at Soren. "I understand. Thank you for the compliments." he said, nodding at the human.

Tony noted how much pain Lily was in, flinching when he heard her cry out for help. "Jeez..." he walked slowly into the infirmary now, not wanting to disturb her too much. "Hey... Adrian." the ferret said softly, smiling at him. "Glad to see you're up and about. You're at my place now... I wanted to help you since you spared me back at the factory." he said. "How are you feeling?"

"Well, how exactly am I supposed to protect you when I'm crippled anyway?" snapped Emilena back. She sat up and the action made her cough again. There was blood this time...

"Drive faster!" she spat, irritated. "Can't we just shoot her and take the car ourselves?"

Lily coughed and threw up. There was another crack from somewhere in her body.

She threw up three more times and couldn't stop choking and crying. The anesthetic didn't appear to be helping at all. And the tattoo on her breast had dropped to 4.

"I'móOkay." Sanjay shoved his pistol into her neck. The driver complied and pushed the accelerator to the floor, causing the car to go over 100 miles per hour.

"Aw, it's OK." Tony waved his paw dismissively here. "If not for you... I wouldn't be alive either. I wanted to help you as much as I could... so I'm glad you made it." he smiled now sincerely, but was interrupted by Lily's rather loud vocalizations and her becoming violently ill.

"Jesus!" Tony exclaimed, noting Lily retch three times. "Damn! Can't we do something?" he asked.

"That mechanical guy just pumped her full of painkillers and who knows what else!" Tony's doctor responded, pointing. "If that didn't help... I don't know what else will unless... we induce a coma chemically to try and stabilize her!" he said.

"I don't know..." Tony trailed off, watching the display with wide eyes and feeling completely powerless as the horrified Lily could only further change against her will.

Axel didn't register the sick spilling over his hands as he tried to hold Lily still, stopping her from struggling right off the bed. The cracking noise he'd heard kept replaying itself in his head. It came from inside her... oh jesus...

He heard her choking. "Come on, keep breathing! This'll... this'll be over soon!" Axel babbled helplessly. His head jerked up when Tony's doctor suggested inducing a coma. "What?! Are you kidding?!" He looked desperately between the two doctors in the room. "There's got to be something else you can do!"

Lily coughed again. "Please...can you all just leave...I don't want you to see..." she threw up again. "...just go..."

She cast an arm out and grabbed the doctor's arm. "Don't...let Kojurro...in here," she said weakly but with conviction, meeting his eyes unblinkingly.

Emi's eyes went wide when she saw their destination. "We can't go there!" she gasped. "They've got my records! I killed somebody there! Why would we go to a government building anyway, we're criminals?"

Sanjay shook his head. "Doctors aren't supposed to pass judgement. Besides, you got any better ideas?"

The car then pulled up in front of the hospital and carefully helped Emilena out. He then aimed his pistol at the construction worker. "Drive off as fast as you can. If you turn your head, I will shoot you!"

The Fruit Bat nodded and the vehicle sped along a short road and then up an onramp to an elevated highway.

Sanjay then carefully helped Emilena into the ER.

"Um... maybe we should go... but I want her comfortable as you can at least make her, OK?" Tony asked his doctor, who nodded.

"I'll do what I can. I only suggested the chemical coma to ease her suffering... it looks as if she's mutating in a rather painful fashion." he pointed out to Axel. "You don't know what's wrong with her, do you? Like her medical history? Why this is happening?" he asked the rat.

Tony turned to Adrian now, offering him a small smile. "Is there... anything I can get you before bed? I'll try and provide it, though I think I'm gonna turn in soon, once I finish up my dinner." the ferret informed him.

==============================

The don nodded. "Yes... our valets will show you to your rooms." Don Stracci said, standing up now as he ordered one of the waiters to take Tony's dish to the kitchen to keep it warm. "The guest rooms are up the stairs and to the right, down the hall. I've provided for each of you to have your own rooms, so no worries on that." the don said.

"If you'll follow me, please." One of the valets at the door bowed to Marie and Rose, and began showing them to their rooms.

Axel shook his head. "No, I don't, I... I've only known her for a few days and she... she can't remember..." He paused and closed his eyes, taking a deep breath and letting it out shakily. Panicking won't help her! He opened them and met the doctor's eyes. "No, I don't know Lily's medical history, or what's happening to her. But she's been getting worse." He bit his lip. "But that wolf... the wolf knows..." Axel muttered lowly.

He looked down at Lily. Picking up a cloth that had been knocked to the floor, he wiped the sick from her mouth gently. "Look, I'll be close by, okay? If you want me, just... just call out for me..." His ears flattened weakly as he left her side and crossed the room to where Tony and Adrian stood, wiping his hands with the towel as if in a daze. Thoughts of the wolf agent, and what he'd done to her kept rushing through his thoughts. He was too pre-occupied to wonder what Lily had meant when she'd pleaded for Kojuuro to be kept out.

"Doctors can pass judgment when the patient file reads 'Killed the last doctor who operated on her and a security guard,'" Emilena shot back. "I thought he said you were smart, this is the most moronic decision anyone I've met has ever made!"

But Lupis had been quite clear; follow all of Sanjay's orders to the letter. Grumbling and light-headed, Emilena allowed herself to be led to the place she'd fought police, guards, and Purifiers to escape last time.

Lily coughed and threw up again. She had refused to let go of the doctor's arm. "I meant it!" she pleaded, "I want...security tonight! Please!"

There was another cracking noise; her spine was realigning. Letting out a low moan of pain, she dug her nails into the cot as a shuddering pulse ran through the tumor on her backside.

Sure enough, when Sanjay bought Emilena in, the doctors, nurses and orderlies were scrambling to get her onto gurney and into the OR to stablize her. The few that recognized her, didn't care about her previous "escapades". They just cared about her wounds.

"What happened?" a Golden Eagle asked.

"Got shot during a robbery." Sanjay took a seat in the waiting room.

As he joined Adrian, Tony and Marita, Axel glanced up at the fox. "Hey, I'm... I'm glad you're okay." He slowly looked at Tony, still chewing his lip. "When we were hiding out at Soren's house, a wolf came looking for her. He was dressed like some kind of... I don't know, a government spook or something... He told Soren he'd pay him if he turned her in. Then back at the factory, there he was again. He knows what's happening to her, if... if there's a way to stop it or reverse it or something..." His hands were balled into fists at his side.

Axel paused, staring at Tony. "Why? Have you seen him?"

Post by: Pterano on January 24, 2014, 09:15:07 AM

Tony hesitated now, thinking on things. He looked down, then nodded. "Yeah... I shot him from behind as he was retreating from Kojuuro and Lily at the abandoned factory. It was just a decoy though... he took me hostage, and agreed not to harm me if I let him escape. He took me to the edge of the factory, dropped me off there, and left."

The ferret paused here, wondering if he should mention the card. He glanced at Lily again, then over to Axel. "There may... be a way to get in contact with him." he said slowly. "If you could... well I mean, if such a thing were possible... what would you do?"

His tail flicked urgently. "We can't just sit here and wait for... whatever's happening to her to happen. If you have a way to get to him, you have to say. Please, Tony."

A few hours later, a doctor and nurse came in to address the cotridden Emilena. "All right, Miss Echo, you should be all set," the doctor said, reviewing a clipboard. "The bullet was removed safely and the wounds have been bandaged and fully cleaned. Just try to take it easy for the next few days." The nurse smiled and held out a copy of the diagnosis and a small cup of gelatin.

Emilena climbed out of the cot. "If you insist, doctor."

"Now there's one final thing," the doctor added, as Emilena closed the door so the three of them wouldn't be disturbed, "You don't have any payment information on file...how would you like to balance your bill?"

Emilena stepped up and put her hands on his shoulders, smiling seductively. "Check."

In a blur she grasped his head in between her palms and twisted his neck 270 degrees with an audible snap. The nurse stumbled backwards as his body hit the floor and opened her mouth to scream, but Emilena kicked her in the solar plexus, knocking the wind out of her. Dragging her hyperventilating body to the sink, Emilena smacked her head against the porcelain and then grabbed a scalpel and stabbed her repeatedly in the temple.

A few minutes later, she returned to the waiting room dressed in the nurse's clean skirt and blouse. "Mr. Bhat?" she said pleasantly, "They're ready for you in the aumbulance parking lot. If you could please come with me?"

Now it was Tony's turn to bite his lip, and he finally nodded. "Well..." He walked out of the infirmary now, motioning for Axel to follow him, so he was out of earshot of Adrian and Marita for the moment. "He left a card with me... there's nothing on it, but I think it's his business card." Tony said slowly, in low tones. "Maybe... maybe we can trap him... capture him even; get him to talk. Or... I could call him, pretend I need his help, and ask him if he knows why Lily is the way she is." he suggested. "Unfortunately, I DO kind of owe him for sparing my life so... I kind of would prefer the latter option first." he admitted.

"If I call him... you're gonna have to promise to keep calm. No yelling... no indicating you're even near me, OK? I'm gonna talk to him like it's a private conversation. We'd need to come up with a really good plan if you want to trap him though." Tony warned. "He's smart... he used a decoy, and a cloaking device. Plus he'll most likely have backup at any meeting I arrange so... we can't go into this half-cocked. Do you understand?" he asked the rat. "So first things first... let me try and talk to him... see if I can at least find out why Lily is suffering and changing. Then... if that proves to be a dead end... we'll go from there. And don't worry... I won't let myself get talked into anything. I've already kind of thought about what I'm going to say." he reassured Axel as he thrust his paws into his pockets.

"So... you have a lighter or a match or anything I can use to get this ink to appear?" he asked now. "If not, we can always head to the kitchen." He didn't pull his paws out of his pockets just yet, however.

"You don't get it, he'll keep coming after her if we don't deal with him..." Axel muttered. Then he sighed and rubbed a hand through his hair, brushing aside a lock that had fallen over his eyes. "But... fine. We'll see if we can do it your way and get what we need without violence. The most important thing right now's to make sure Lily's okay." A small part of him was relieved - even in these circumstances, he didn't know if he'd have it in him to hurt someone. But if it comes down to it...

Axel nodded when Tony mentioned a lighter, patting his pockets and pulling a cheap, plastic one out of his jeans. "Good thing I didn't quit smoking," he said dryly as he handed it over. "And... look, thanks for telling me about the card."

Title: Into the Black

"Hey... no problem." Tony replied, pulling out the card now as Axel handed him the lighter. "Look... if it comes to that... then we'll just have to get him first, OK?" the ferret asked, giving him a nod. "I promise... I'll do everything I can to lure him out into the open. But just give me this chance first... I want to obtain information, see what I can find out, and go from there."

He lit the lighter, and held it under the card, being careful not to set the card alight too. "OK... let's see..." he murmured, and just like that, ink began to appear.

Lupis Wing II

This card will evaporate in 30 seconds

"Oh! Crap!" Tony said, quickly digging in his pocket for his phone now as he handed the lighter back to Axel. He fumbled around with it, quickly pressing the buttons and dialing. He could at least save the number... and it was a very easy one to remember too.

Typing it in, he dropped the card now, letting it dissolve into nothing as he held the phone up to his ear, and listened to the ring...

(Stephenson Memorial Hospital)

Sanjay put down the newspaper he was reading and slithered out to the ambulance bay.

A few of the people in the waiting room gave odd looks at the "nurse" but no one paid too much attention.

(The Heights)

Soren made his way to the infirmary. He gasped as he saw the multitude of medical personnel around.

"What's going on?" he asked.

The security guard in the ambulance bay nodded once to them as they passed.

Emilena stopped. "You're not going to ask why I'm this section? Or check my identification?"

The guard shrugged. "Don't care."

Emilena gave him something to care about when she walked up behind him and snapped his neck. Grabbing his rifle, she marched to the nearest ambulance, where two paramedics were wheeling out a recently-rescued heart attack victim.

"What the hell are you doing?" gasped one when he saw a nurse coming at him with a rifle. Emilena shot both of them, then opened the driver's seat door and cracked the driver's skull open with the butt of the rifle. "Get in," she told Sanjay, backing the ambulance out of the garage and crushing the legs of the man going into cardiac arrest on the pavement.

The phone picked up on the seventh ring. "Faux Manchu Chinese Cuisine, now offering takeout from 9am to 6pm, this is Mike how can I assist you today?"

Tony motioned with his paw to Axel to speak to Soren as the human approached them now. He turned away, and took a few steps down the hall. "Yeah, yeah, very funny, Lupis." Tony said. "I'd like some lo mein, with a side of information, if you don't mind. It's Tony... the ferret you ran into earlier tonight." he stated, waiting to see if the act would be dropped.

Post by: Serris on January 26, 2014, 05:39:45 PM

Sanjay nodded as he slithered into the passenger's seat.

Making his way to the back of the ambulance, he soon found the medicine cabinet. Seeing as he had no lock, he simply smashed the glass front with the butt of his pistol and started rooting around for anything he could use to fill his venom tanks with.

But first, the washout procedure. He injected some saline into the metal port and moved his head around, sloshing the fluid around. Finding an empty basin, he clamped his metal fangs against it and sprayed out the water he had used to wash his venom tanks. A few more times and he was ready to go.

Sanjay grabbed the vial of etorphine – an immensely powerful narcotic painkiller intended for use in either heavy anthros like Rhino, Elephants or Bears or in Augments with either enhanced liver and kidneys or extreme resistance to morphine based narcotics. In anyone else, a standard dosage was assured to kill. Carefully taking a syringe and drawing up the potent chemical, he looked in a nearby mirror to find the small metal port just near the side of his "neck".

He carefully guided the needle into the port and gently slid it through the self-healing silicone septum. Depressing the plunger sent the entire contents into his empty tanks.

He tossed both syringes into the nearby sharps bin and rejoined Emilena. "All right, no we need to decide where we might find our target."

Axel gave an exhausted shrug as Soren approached. "That's something I'd like to know." He waited for Tony to move a little further away, then continued in a lower tone. "It's Lily, she's... Something's happening to her. She's got new fingers, and... and something's growing on her... just..." Axel's voice trembled slightly. He swallowed and gritted his teeth.

He glanced down the corridor at Tony, still on his phone. "But we think we know how to help her. You remember the wolf who came to your house, looking for her?" Axel turned back to Soren. "Tony's got a way to reach him. If we can just get something from him, anything that can tell us how to fix it..." he said, ears poised determidly.

"Tony! Is that your name, then." The voice-alterer was turned off and the wolf's familiar voice shone through. "You wouldn't perchance be Tony Stracci? I ask based on where you're calling from. This isn't the usual line calling me from the Stracci mansion..."

"I've got an idea for that," Emilena replied, as she drove for the cul-de-sac where the clothing store had been. "I've got two leads. The first involves a clothing store that I saw them visit. We should investigate to see if the employees could let us know anything. Unfortunately, I don't think I can enter the store; I doubt they'll be as accommodating as the hospital was."

"Your father is a great man, very reliable," Lupis replied. "I cannot confirm or deny having worked with him. But I'm certainly pleased to have established friendly relations with the future don of the Stracci Syndicate. Tony, you need to be more careful with yourself, you're a very valuable person. If you like (and your father approves), I'd be willing to work with you and teach you how to gain the connections to stay safely off the front lines yourself."

This was unexpected. Tony hadn't realized his father actually knew Agent Lupis... or at least, most likely knew Agent Lupis. And that suggestion... an idea suddenly formed in his mind. "Really? You wouldn't mind doing that?" he asked. "Wow that would be... something else!" he exclaimed, sounding excited. "I-I would of course have to ask my father, but yes, I'd love to do that! But hey... I called because those freaks I was trying to take out tonight... one of them you seemed to be after. I was wondering..." Tony turned a bit in the hall now, twirling some of his neck fur around his claw. "Is she valuable? And if so... if I could track her down for you and deliver her... would that be let's say... something worth my while?" he asked now, sounding hopeful. "Of course... I don't want to get the family directly involved in any government ops but... I was just... wondering... seeing as how you seemed to be after her and all... and I DO feel like I owe you for sparing me." he outlined.

There was a pause. "...tell me about her," was the only reply.

"Well... from what I could see, she looked human but... different. Stony skin... red eyes... hunchback... seemed to be in pain when I last saw her. She mean anything to you? Or the government?" he asked now. "Seems she was your target after all when I... nailed you in the back... or your decoy. Sorry... by the way, about that." he apologized.

"Never mind that," Lupis replied hastily. "Young Stracci, it's time for your first lesson in connections. That woman is incredibly dangerous, and I urge you to stay far away from her; your life is worth too much. At the moment, I have two far-less-valuable allies of my own on the way to collect her; I would be in your debt if you would offer them free room and board for a night. They can take care of her from that point. If your father has any objections, I am available at any time to speak with him. We've trusted each others judgment in the past."

Tony paused here at the mention of the words "incredibly dangerous." He narrowed his eyes, trying to gauge things for himself. Lupis now mentioned two of his more expendable people required room and board at his father's mansion. He closed his eyes, thinking fast. "Well... as you know, my father has ultimate say over who gets to stay here. I'm sure he'll say yes but... I'm gonna have to call you back regarding that, if that's OK?" he asked.

He dropped his voice now, speaking in very low tones. "Agent Lupis... before I go... when you said dangerous... how incredibly dangerous? Like... city-wide destruction apocalyptic movie dangerous? Or... what I'm trying to say is... does she pose a threat to those not even in her vicinity? I'm worried about my family, after all. And well... practically everyone else in this city." he murmured, rubbing his forehead.

"If I could answer that question, she'd only be 'very dangerous,'" Lupis replied. "The reason she qualifies for 'incredibly dangerous' is that we truly don't know what she's capable of. But currently, her damage seems to extend to those only in the general vicinity, and mostly involve mental trauma. But my information comes from a time when she looked nothing like the creature you just dsscribed. For the good and yours and your family's mental health, it'd be best for you to be rid of her as soon as possible."

Tony listened to Lupis's information, finally looking down the hall at Axel and Soren. "All right... well, I'll let my father know about your expendables, and see what he says. I'll call you back as soon as I can. Thanks for the info, and I'll be in touch." he said, pushing the hang up button now.

Sighing, he dropped his phone into his pocket, and strode back down the hall to where the rat and human were located. "How much do you really know about Lily? I mean... really know about her?" the ferret asked Axel now. "According to Lupis, she's 'incredibly dangerous.' That's mostly because he doesn't know what she's capable of, according to him, but that she causes mental trauma to those around her. Now... I'm going to bet she doesn't do this willingly but... do we really know if she's safe or not?" he asked, looking between the two of them.

"Oh and also... he's sending two of his 'expendables' here." Tony sighed. "I need to get dad's permission for that one though, and he indicated as such on the phone. Don't worry... I don't think he knows Lily is actually here but... this warrants a plan, all the same. Do we get Lily out of here... do we ambush these two somewhere on the road leading up to the Heights? Do we get my dad to just say no, they can't stay here? How do you guys want to play this?" he asked, placing his paws on his hips and looking back and forth from Soren to Axel.

Axel gaped at Tony. "Dangerous?! Are you kidding me? Does she look dangerous to you?!" he spluttered. "I mean, no, I... I don't know that much about her, but..." Axel shook his head firmly. "No. It's bullshit. He's lying to you Tony, you can't listen to him!"

He frowned as Tony told them about the two Lupis was sending over. "They're coming to take Lily?" Axel slumped back against the wall as he tried to think. He let his breath out unsteadily. "Alright... at least we know... Gives us time to prepare..." He rubbed his eyes then looked up at the two standing with him. "I don't think we should move Lily. There's nowhere else that's safer than here, or at least not close by. And if we can't get Lupis to talk, there's a good chance the people he's sending know something about her..." Axel grimaced. "I... I think we should do what he says. Let them come here, but then when they arrive we can grab them and... get what we need. If we ambush them on the road here, there's a chance they could get away, then they'd know for sure she's here."

He looked between Tony and Soren. "But... jesus, I don't know. What do you guys think?"

Post by: Pterano on January 27, 2014, 04:07:10 PM

"Now hold on, calm down, Axel!" Tony said, raising his paws before him now. "They aren't coming to take Lily... he gave no indication he even thinks she's here. He said they needed room and board tonight. That's all. I don't know why the hell he thought my place would make a good stop to do that, but whatever. I guess because my father and him are connected... which also makes me uneasy. But then again... he could be lying about that too. My father has connections... but they're mostly with judges and politicians. People he can lean on... government agents... don't hold much interest to him, and contacts with them can be dangerous." the ferret pointed out now.

"OK so you're saying... let them in, then take them?" Tony asked. "He made them sound like they were... expendable to him, so I doubt they'd know anything about her." he shook his head here. "They're probably just boneheads taking orders." he sighed. "Look... if we take them here... and Lupis finds out they failed... you don't think he'd hold me or my family responsible, do you?" he asked now. "That was kind of... why I was hoping we could move her, and lure them into a trap. Kill them or something to send a message, but keep her and my family out of each others' business. My father WOULD kill me if I got him involved in dirty government ops... and no offense to Lily, but she stinks. She reeks of black ops bullshit. Why ELSE would Lupis have attacked her earlier tonight?" Tony pressed.

He rubbed his forehead again. "OK look... let's start over, right? We have to do this in a way that doesn't spark a war between the government and my family, keeps Lily safe, and gets us information about what's happening to her. How do we do this?" he asked, looking around now. "I'm not too worried about my father's end... if things get bad, he can easily handle himself, but I want to play this safe. Is there a way we can meet and satisfy all three objectives?" he inquired.

Axel flinched as Kojuuro landed amongst them. "Holy crap, you could at least warn us if you're gonna do that, Koj..." He nodded along with Tony, waiting for his pulse to return to normal. "Yeah, I'm up to any ideas, this... this isn't exactly the kind of stuff I'm used to planning."

Kojuuro smirked and crossed his arms.
"Simple. Have me safeguard Lily once those thugs of his show up. IF things go down, then you have an easy scapegoat. After all, both times he's seen me, then you can simply say that she hired me to protect her. If I live, then he won't find out, or if he does, again, I'm just Lily's guard. And if I fail, then, at the least, I will take them out with me."
He said coldly...

(The Heights)

Anne emerged from the bathroom and pulled up a chair next to Axel, Soren and Tony.

Soren looked around. He shuddered as he recalled what Agent Lupis said. "I hate to say this but we need to ditch Lily – at least until his two flunkies are gone...or we make them 'gone'."

"Easier said than done," Anne replied as she sipped some wine. She then smiled as she looked at the bottle of wine on the end table. "Because of my high drug tolerance and large size, you can feed them – and myself a dish laced with what would normally be a fatal dose of a narcotic."

"First off, what if they're Augments with enhanced drug resistance? And secondly, that was the most fucking transparent plan ever to get high!"

Anne rubbed her horn and blushed a bit. "Yeah, you caught me."

Soren rubbed his forehead. "Maybe we can let them stay for the night and simply kill them while they sleep?"

(Elevated Highway)

"You said that this 'Soren Almaya' is a licensed cyberneticist, right? Maybe a few cybernetics suppliers might have some info on him?" Sanjay offered as he watched the vehicles passing them.

Emilena nodded. "After we check the clothing store, we should check Pelvanida next. They might have some dirt."

She pulled into the parking lot and looked around. "Can you grab me an outfit that isn't a nurse's uniform while you're in there?"

The tumor on Lily's backside was straightening out. Growing longer and tapering. Simultaneously the bony protrusions on the side of each hand were covering over in scar tissue, stopping the unending bleeding. As Lily stared in horror at her own hands, she flexed her left digits and the new protrusion followed suit. It was a finger.

This was going to be a long night...

Title: Into the Black

Axel shook his head at Soren's suggestion of killing them. "No... Tony's right, this is still the Government we're talking about. If we're going to... kill them, it can't be here, and it can't be straight away. At least, not until we know a little more about what we're dealing with." He chewed his lip. "Could... could we catch them and maybe force them to contact Lupis and tell him that Lily's not here, that's they're going to go investigate somewhere else?" He glanced between all of them. "I mean, Lanthae isn't exactly a safe place. If we made sure there wasn't any... evidence of them left... maybe we could say they left, and that was the last we saw of them?" Jesus, a couple of days ago the toughest choice I had to make was what I was gonna eat for dinner...

He glanced at Kojuuro. "Maybe that's..." Axel trailed off as what Lily had said to the doctor came back to him. Don't let Kojuuro in here... His eyes narrowed in suspicion. "Erm... hey, why don't you help us with, ah, whatever we decide to do with Lupis' men? We can always get some guards to stay down here and protect her..." Axel looked meaningfully at Tony. "Right?"

Post by: Pterano on January 28, 2014, 09:12:27 AM

Tony listened to everything presented to him, and nodded, taking it all in, his mind whirring away and piecing everything together. "I think I've got it!" he said, snapping his claws. "Why don't we combine some ideas?" he asked. "I think I was over thinking things before." he admitted.

"Look... my dad is exceptional... scary even, at making people disappear. He's so good at it, there's never been a single disappearance successfully linked to him. Now let's do this..." he waved his paws outward a bit from his chest to emphasize. "I can put Lily in a place that only my family knows about. It's got state of the art security, and it's so secret, no one outside our immediate family knows where it is. Trust me when I say, she won't be far though. We hide her there for the night, and invite Lupis's goons in. They of course won't be permitted to poke around here without my father's permission, and good luck to them even if they somehow manage it, because it's quite literally impossible to access the place without certain conditions being met, none of which they'll have. Inviting them in to stay the night will get me into Lupis's good graces, as he mentioned he'd owe me one for doing this."

Tony paused here to clear his throat. "We either kill them as they leave, and my father disposes of the bodies, or simply just let them leave in the morning. Then, using our new hardware, we can track Lupis down, and try and find out what's happening to Lily. Oh and... on the off chance Lupis himself shows up and recognizes all of you, we say we ditched Lily in the district where the factory was, because her mutation was making it so we couldn't possibly safely move her, and we were worried about law enforcement showing up with all the gunfire and explosions that were going off. How's that sound?" the ferret asked, looking around at them. "Anyone want to add or amend anything?"

Soren smiled as he listened to Tony's plan. "Tony, is it customary for Don Stracci to give gifts to important people? If so, we can hide a tracer inside said gift and follow them. Granted, I still want them dead because I think they're those Purifier goons I met from before but this time, I think they might be more valuable to us alive."

(Purifier Compound)

"Marcus! Please respond!" Aaron shouted into his mask mounted radio. He and his crew were desperately trying to put out the burning transformer. He helped a large Clydesdale position a foam sprayer and aimed it at the base of the fire. White fire retardant foam covered the entire area but there were still some puddles of oil that were still burning.

(Lanthae Fashions)

As Sanjay slithered through the shop, the clerk, a gangly black teen looked at him. "Welcome to Lanthaeó"

"Official police business," Sanjay said, cutting off the clerk's spiel. He flashed his Palladia Cybernetics security badge, which looked much like an official Lanthae Police Department badge.

"Uh, what's going on?"

"I need your security footage. We've had a murder in Stephenson Memorial and we have reason to believe that the suspect was in your shop. Failure to turn the tapes over can result in your prosecution for obstructing justice."

The clerk gulped and ejected two large flash drives from underneath the counter. It was then Sanjay was aware of his clothing, sticky with the dried healing gel. He then grabbed some clothing and paid for them with his credit chit.

"A little compensation," he said with a wink.

The Indian Cobra tossed the clothes into the passenger seat as he hauled himself up. "I managed to finagle the security cam footage out of the clerk."

He then grabbed his clothes and slithered into the back to change.

Tony though a moment and nodded at Soren. "Yes!" he exclaimed. "My father will usually lavish a gift or two upon guests. This could be a good opportunity to find out where they report to and yes... I agree. Even though... they might be my old comrades... I won't stand in the way of your vengeance, Soren." he told the human sincerely. "Do you have a convenient tracking device we can use? If not... I'm sure my dad does." he chuckled.

"So... does that plan work then? If so, I can transfer Lily now, tell my dad the plan, and get him to confirm with Lupis that his goons can spend the night." Tony stated.

Soren put his glass of water aside and templed his hands. "I would prefer using a commercially made tracer but if need be, Axel and I maybe able to whip one up. It'll be shitty but it should do the trick."

Anne was now on her fourth glass of wine. Despite that, she seemed perfectly sober. "One thing," she said. "As someone who's been traced many times – cops, drug dealers, ordinary crooks, etc – we have to assume that Lupis's goons are savvy about tracers. They might do things like 'lose' the gifts, rip them apart looking for bugs when they have a moment or other such things."

Soren nodded. "So tell us about the times you were bugged?"

Anne sighed. "Well, a dealer who became an informant hid tracers inside drug capsules. Turns out, I swallowed it. Fucking cops got to me before I could shit the damn thing out. Now I just cut open every pill I get."

Soren shook his head. "Too obvious. We can't just give them pills."

"The other time was when I picked up a dropped 4000 cred chit...surprise! It was bugged but I couldn't tell because, well let's face it. I'd have to cut the thing open and waste four grand."

Soren smiled. "That might work. Unfortunately, bugs that small and thin are hard to get. On the other hand, Don Stracci could probably procure one for us. But giving money might arouse suspicion."

Anne poured herself another glass of wine. "Tuck the bug behind a frame of a painting and paint over it. They'll never know."

"Did you grab me anything like I asked, or do I have to walk around looking like Nurse Ratched?" Emilena muttered, noting the lack of clothing for herself. Adrian is a much better partner, he actually thinks of me every once in a while... she found herself thinking bitterly.

She pulled out of the cul-de-sac and headed for Pelvanida. "How do you plan on getting into the cybernetics facility anyway? I sure as hell don't have clearance."

"Look in the bag," Sanjay replied.

He then looked at the streetlights that were currently illuminating the elevated highway. "As for the cybernetics facilty, we don't get in. We wait until someone gets out..."

Sanjay then coiled up on the seat. "Of course, we could break in."

"Well... we might not need to give them pills to get them to swallow a tracer," Axel said hesitantly. "Tony, couldn't your dad get another dinner ready for them, and then we slip the tracer into their food?" He looked around, unsure. "I mean, it's not like they'd be looking through every dish that gets brought to them, right?"

Marcus groaned, willing his body to move. Little by little, he began to get some feeling back in his limbs. After a few more minutes, he was able to clumsily pull himself upright, gripping tightly to the railing. There was a flash of pain, and he brought his attention down to his hand. He'd landed on his thumb as he fell, dislocating it. With a grunt, he snapped it back into place, then turned his attention back to Aaron's voice, which was crackling from the radio he'd thrown away.

Staggering inside the watchtower, he snatched up the radio. "Aaron, what's the situation?! Did they get away?!"

Tony nodded now. "OK... well I think the food could work... and it'd have to be of the type that it wouldn't be.. voided easily." he said here, grimacing. "My dad's got some pretty small ones I think, about what Marita described. I think I saw a movie once where someone basically forced a bug down an unconscious guy's throat without him knowing and he wasn't able to get rid of it initially. Anyway, I'm gonna go and move Lily now. You guys think of a good way to bug our quarry, and I'll be back." he said, moving back into the infirmary now.

He cleared his throat as he stood over her now, and looked at her with concern. "Um... Lily? It's Tony. We're gonna... well I'm gonna move you to somewhere secure for tonight, OK?" he corrected himself. "The others agreed. We're trying to trap Lupis, or at least learn more about your condition. Are you OK enough for me to move your bed?" he asked, noting that fortunately, it was on wheels, like all the beds in his infirmary.

Lily was drenched in sweat, the blood-stained sheets were clinging to her skin like a straitjacket.

She nodded weakly, not making eye contact or uncurling from the fetal position she had assumed. Her new tail dangled off the side of the bed, in the way of one of the wheels.

Emilena parked the Ambulance just out of sight of Pelvanida. "There's the place," she said. "They close to the public in thirty minutes. Someone will be leaving the faculties at that time I wager."

Done driving, she changed into the outfit Sanjay had picked out; appropriate rugged hiking clothes. Probably the best outfit she could ask for given the circumstances.

Tony felt terrible for Lily, looking at how much pain she was in, and how she barely registered his presence. "I'm gonna have to move your tail first..." he said, noting it hadn't been there before. He gingerly picked it up, and laid it down behind her on the bed. "Try to keep it there... OK?" he asked, beginning to wheel her bed forward now. "Dok, you'll come with me to this location to monitor her, OK?" he informed the Doktor.

Wheeling her bed out into the hallway, he began pushing it towards a particular hall. The ferret only wished there was something further he could do, as she looked absolutely in shock over what was occurring, not to mention in pain. He reached down, beginning to rub her shoulder now. "It's all right... we'll find out what's happening to you... I promise." he said softly. "We're not giving up on you.. we're not." he reassured her. He'd need to call his dad once they reached the particular hallway he was thinking of. "I'm taking you to a place my family uses...

it's soundproofed and hidden rather well, so... you should be safe for the night. Nobody can access it but us."

"Yeah but if they bite down wrong and find electronics...We're fucked," Anne said.

Soren listened to Marita's response. "Perfect! Those flexible circuit bugs. Expensive – 5,000 creds for one – and short lived but almost impossible to detect."

Anne's eyes lit up. "I heard about them. They come with everything inside a small stick of putty. If we can find a gift, we can simply wedge it into into an appropriate hollow and paint over it. Failing that, we can carefully smash it flat and paint over it."

"Good thinking," Soren said to Marita.

Anne looked at Kojuuro. "We can't use anything that might entail drilling or cutting into a gift. And if we implant tracers on them, we run the risk of them noticing – or worse, catching us in the act."

(Purifier Compound)

"They got away. We nearly drowned after the fuckers set fire to a transformer and the tunnels flooded. We're currently trying to put out said transformer," Aaron said.

He then put the hose down. "Luckily, the fire's almost out – but the power's gonna be down for a bit. They got the main transformer."

(Pelvanida Cybernetics)

Sanjay got out of the vehicle and slithered towards the main entrance to the building. An armed guard stopped him. "Sorry, sir but Pelvanida's closing in half an hour."

Sanjay flashed his badge. "I'm with the Lanthae PD and I need toó"

He was interrupted by a Human exiting the building. He slithered after the man.

"Excuse me sir!" he exclaimed.

The man turned around. "Yes?"

"Lanthae PD," he said flashing his badge. "I need to ask you some questions."

"Look Officer, I have to get home to my kids. Am I free to go?"

"Not until you answer my questions."

The man sighed. "Fine."

"Name?"

"James Altyn."

"Occupation?"

"Cybernetics researcher at Pelvanida Cybernetics. Specializing in replacement organs."

Sanjay tapped a hand against his chin. "Now, do you know anyone named Soren Almaya?"

James nodded. "Yeah, he works on my hands." He showed Sanjay his hands, including the extremely fine fingertips.

Sanjay nodded. "Now, Mr. Altyn, did Mr. Almaya mention anything about the Purifiers?"

James nodded. "Yeah, he wanted to know if they're the ones who destroyed my hands. I told him the truth – they were."

"When did you meet him?"

"A day or so ago in the parking lot. Anyways, am I free to leave?"

"Yes you are." Sanjay slithered back to the ambulance and into the passenger's seat. James took off running to his Tesla Roadster and sped off.

"Well, it looks like one of the workers, a certain James Altyn,did in fact meet Almaya yesterday. Says the Purifiers mutilated his prosthetic hands," Sanjay said. "Now all we gotta do is find him."

Emilena, however, was no longer in the vehicle.

Lily could barely concentrate on what Tony was saying. One of the wheels on the cart was a sliver unbalanced with the others, not even to the extent a normal human could even register. But it was enough to send jolts up her spinal cord with its every revolution.

All she could tell was that he was taking her somewhere hidden, where the others wouldn't know where she was. She didn't have the strength to protest or agree, but all she could think was, Will anyone know if I die there...?

"OK... here we are." Tony said softly, and pushed one of the wooden panels in the wall that basically looked like every other panel on the wall. A security panel then opened up. Tony bent down for a retinal scan of his right eye while he took his phone out of his pocket and dialed his father. He then placed his paw on the paw reader, which read his data and confirmed who he was. He then entered in the nine digit security code in the keypad. "Dad." Tony said as his father picked up. "I need you to activate the safe room from your floor. I'm moving one of our guests down there now... before you panic... just... listen..." he said, outlining exactly what was going on over the phone as he waited for his father to activate the safe room access point from one of the other hidden security panels in the manor.

His father heard him out, then sighed. "I don't like this. Lupis is a good contact... are you really sure you know what you're doing, son?"

"Dad... I don't really have any other choice. Lupis would attack this place regardless of what we did if he found out Lily was with us." Tony said as the wall suddenly slid back and then down to reveal a large elevator. Their safe room was designed to only be accessible if two family members activated it at roughly the same time. He wheeled Lily's bed in and hit the down button. The elevator would take her to a room deep under the cliff. No one outside of Tony's immediate family even knew this room existed. The guards, consigliere, capos, all were in the dark about it, making interrogating them a pointless task.

"Well all the same... if he did that... he wouldn't do that. He's not stupid." his father pointed out. "He knows how easily I could retaliate. Anyway, you want me to call him and invite his... thugs over?" Don Stracci asked now.

"Sure... do it. Nothing will link back to you... I promise." Tony said.

"Nothing will... don't you worry about that." the don said.

The elevator arrived now, and Tony pushed the bed into a rather sumptuous room. This one was slightly more Turkish in its furnishings, and was large as well, comprising a kitchen, a bathroom, several bedrooms, and a living room. "OK... here you are." he patted her shoulder again. "Listen... you need anything..." Tony fidgeted with a remote control type thing in his paws now that had originally been on a table down here. "You push this red button, OK?" he asked, holding the remote directly in front of her face for her to see. "It'll notify my phone that you need help. I'm gonna leave this with you." he said, placing the device on the bed next to her. "Hey... you watch her, OK?" Tony asked the Doktor now.

Don Stracci dialed Lupis's number after he got off the phone with his son.

Sanjay's hood involuntarily flared out, a sign that he was afraid. He unholstered his pistol and closed his eyes, allowing his cybernetic "third eye" to take over. All he saw were the lights beginning to cool down as they were shut down and the hot glow of the factory's exhaust pipes.

"Emilena, I got the info!"

This time, Lupis picked up immediately. "Now there's the number I'm used to seeing from this address. I figure you're calling about your son?"

Emilena was sprinting through the woods outside Pelvanida, as she had been since Sanjay left the ambulance.

Those cock-sure strategists, both of them... she thought bitterly, thinking they can boss me around and that I can't tell they both secretly look down on me...I am not a jarhead to be ferried around gunning for others! I'll capture Lily myself!

She had done some research when left alone. While Sanjay was in the clothing store, she had gone to the phone company across the street and obtained the call history of the only number she knew from her old team; Adrian's. A quick search on the police database showed that the last number dialed directed to Stracci manor, the crime lord's. She could regain the trail from there, if they'd even left.

Suddenly she and her thoughts went reeling as something in the shadows tripped her. Picking herself out of the dirt, she discovered a weathered backpack containing bottled water and protein bars. Helping herself (she'd forgotten when she last ate), she quickly continued on her exodus.

Lily whimpered. The pain was lessening (not saying much, considering what it had been), and her mind was wrapping it's head around the feeling from when Tony had picked up her tail. Her brain was having a hard time comprehending the feeling of nerves from a body part that hadn't existed yesterday. And even something as simple as grasping the bloodstained sheets for comfort had become awkward with the extra finger.

"Am I...am I a monster?" she tried to ask the empty chamber, but all that her vocal cords could create was a hoarse growl. She'd lost the ability to speak.

"So we bug the gifts?" Axel nodded. "Alright, I can get on board with that... I mean, as long as we're careful and hide them properly." He thought about it some more then nodded eagerly, glad they now had a plan could work. "Yeah, let's go with that!"

He looked to the side as Tony approached. "Is... is she okay? She's safe?" Axel asked restlessly, standing up straight.

Marcus swore. He put a hand to his neck and pulled out the small dart, dropping it to the floor and swinging around to scan the watchtower. But, of course, Lupis was nowhere to be seen. Son of a bitch... Marcus crushed the dark underfoot with disgust.

He raised the radio and growled into it. "I'm on my way."

Tony couldn't even understand what was being asked of him... it just sounded like a growl. A growl that sounded nothing like Lily. He closed his eyes on the ride up, exiting the elevator after a bit, and walking back to where he'd left everyone. Axel was the first to ask how she was doing.

"She's safe but... she's not OK." Tony said heavily, his face fallen. "She's changed a lot... she doesn't... even look human anymore. And I don't... even know if she can talk. She let out this growl in response to me that... sounded more animal than English." he stated sadly. "I don't.... honestly know if she's going to be OK. But I left her with a way to contact me if anything changes. The Doktor is watching her and well... she's safe at least." He informed the rat, knowing it probably wasn't what Axel wanted to hear.

"Yes, I am." Don Stracci replied. "He told me about some of your people needing a place to stay. Let me be clear Lupis... I'm in the middle of some very important business, and my fellow associates might not like seeing government pukes walking around my house. Might make them uneasy... catch my drift?" he asked. "They don't stay longer than a night, and they confine themselves to the area I confine them to, no protests. Any violation of this agreement and well... make sure they understand the consequences of failing to abide by my rules before coming here. And also as usual, they'll have to check any weapons they have with them." he informed the wolf.

"Believe me, it was not my intention for you or your family to get involved," Lupis replied quickly. "I'm honestly not sure how Tony became immersed with this group. But I have reason to believe they are harboring an individual who jeopardizes our national security. A woman named Lily North has proven to be an incredible danger to both herself and those around her, and I've been trying to apprehend her for over a week now." Lupis paused. "The rewards would be substantial to anyone who played a part in her recapture. I'm not even talking money at this point." Lupis trusted that the don would understand the political benefits of assisting the government in a capture of this nature. "You know I'm a man of my word, Don. With your cooperation, my men wouldn't have to stay longer than five minutes."

Emilena continued her sprint. She was near the edge of the forest, halfway to the manor. Every police officer knew the manor's address by heart, considering it was the hub of organized crime in the city...

Don Stracci paused here, his eyes shifting from left to right as they remained narrowed in that squint he so often wore. "Are you implying..." He began, "that I should somehow assist in your search for this fugitive? Agent Lupis... you should know me better than that. I never mix my family business with government affairs... it's too messy!" he said, waving an unlit cigar in his paw now as he paced through his office. It wasn't anything new though... Lupis was always trying to pressure him to do something or other for the government. "While I provide indirect support... I can't in any good conscience lend my family's extensive resources to something like this. I mean if I were ever linked to you... think of the implications of that." he said, tsking now as he shook his head. "That just won't do! You have my house for one night for your... people. After that, they're on their own. Of course... if I do find anything on this... what did you say her name was? Lily North? I'll be sure to send it your way." he said now.

"Of course..." he paused here, deciding to play the card. "I might be induced to more effectively cooperate if I knew exactly why you're hunting this woman. You know as well as I do your targets aren't always... legit, shall we say? If you could provide me with some details... then maybe I could be persuaded." Bribes were below him. He knew the government's promises weren't worth shit half the time anyway. Lupis didn't have direct authority to give him anything substantial he'd really want, after all, and thus, the don considered his hints of further assistance as empty for the moment. Sure he might be able to deliver on some things, but Don Anthony Stracci didn't trust the government any further than they trusted him.

There was a pause. "There are only three people other than myself who know the full story behind Ms. Lily North," Lupis said slowly. "I cannot in good faith tell you much. But for your own safety, I can warn you why she is dangerous."

He chose his words very carefully. "Ms. North is unknowingly developing psionic abilities. Until this occurred about a week ago, she was a completely normal housewife, so she has no training and no idea what is happening to her. We've witnessed her possess the minds of others and get them to do her bidding. As we speak, one of your housemaids might be unlocking the back door to your kitchen to let her in, without even realizing they are doing it. She can also predict danger before it occurs; she receives a flash of insight that informs her of her future killer's whereabouts and thoughts, letting her react accordingly. Every time she uses this ability, she gains a little more psionic power and a little less of her sentience. She might have developed new abilities since we were able to study her, I can't say."

He paused. "Anthony...speaking as a friend. Even if you don't help me...keep an eye on Tony. He's trying to get himself involved in all of this, and I don't want to see him get hurt. He's a good kid and he's got a great future ahead of him. But when I found him, he was in an abandoned factory having a shootout with some Purifiers in a biological cleansing hit. I got him away safely, but that isn't where a boy of his stature should be hanging out."

Don Stracci listened to the information relayed to him, committing to his memory all the important details. "I know full well what my son's been doing." he said, looking from left to right again. "I agree fully with you. I intend to keep him close from now on. I thought a little life lesson couldn't hurt... but he's back now."

He smiled to himself, taking a pen from his shirt pocket and clicking it as he wandered over to his desk. "Well Agent Lupis... I do believe we're making progress, as they call it. However... I'd have to say, with all due respect... Ms. North sounds like something your government 'friends' have no business possessing. No one should possess her in fact... that sounds like it would give whoever does... an... unfair advantage, should we say? And you know I'm all about maintaining our status quo." he said kindly.

"However, with that said, you've piqued my interest. Something stood out to me that you mentioned. You said something about her being a housewife... if I'm going to start my own inquiries, I'd like to start with the husband. What can you tell me about him?" Don Stracci asked, his pen hovering over a notepad he had on his desk now.

"Mine not to reason why," Lupis replied dryly. "I'm just following orders. And I'm sure you have the resources to find Denny North on your own." Lupis knew that, at least as far as he could tell, Denny was a dead end, so he didn't mind revealing this information. "Thank you for agreeing to house them for one night. They'll be on their best behavior and will keep to themselves. You shouldn't have any trouble at all."

Post by: Pterano on January 29, 2014, 02:45:03 PM

Don Stracci scribbled the name down, interested, but noting that Lupis didn't exactly say he agreed with him, even for "old time's sake." Well that was precisely why Don Stracci was a family based ferret... and not government based. He couldn't rely on these assholes... and Lupis had just proven it, which was the don's real motivation for talking to him anyway. A true friend of the family would've agreed about Lily's condition being too dangerous to merely hand over to the government... oh well. On top of that... he'd gotten his son "out of there?" Bullshit!

If that were so, why was it these strangers delivering his son... and not Lupis?

"I'm sure." Don Stracci murmured to Lupis's last bit, and inhaled. "Right... well, I think that about wraps up the initials. Good speaking to you Lupis." the charm was back in his tone. "I'll be in touch. And if you ever get bored pushing pencils... my offer to you still stands!" As he hung up, he gazed at his phone for a moment, then dialed Max. "Mr. Fontana, get me everything you have on a Denny North... spelled like it sounds on both names. No, he's not someone I wish to ice... just get me info on him." He then hung up, and looked up at the ceiling.

Finally... he'd been wanting to fuck with that stiff-assed agent for years. It was a game they'd always play... feigning concern for each other... but Don Stracci's family always came first. Always. Maybe now he could seriously screw with the government... and perhaps even unlock the secrets to Lily's ability himself, in time. But first things first. He'd need to inform his son of the developments, and also let him in on his intentions. Oh this would be good... Lupis's goons wouldn't even realize she was right under their noses! It would be rich when he could finally rub that wolf's nose in that little detail! Right... to business then!

"Always good to talk to you, best wishes," Lupis hung up the phone and rubbed his temples. "Why did the damn Straccis have to get involved in this?" He muttered bitterly.

"Sir?" Agent Extasis had entered the room and was waiting politely for the call to end.

"It better be good news!" snapped the wolf.

"The tracers indicate our marks have split up. From analysis it appears Echo has abandoned Bhat."

"Hmmm. Honestly, she stuck with him longer than I expected. Where are they both headed?"

Extasis handed him a printout of their movements starting with the moment of departure in the Pelvanida parking lot.

"You'll need to fill in for Echo, go find Mr. Bhat," Lupis ordered. "Then head to Stracci manor. I suspect they know more than they're letting on."

"Me?" Extasis looked uncomfortable. "But that means I'll get--"

"It wasn't a request! I don't have time for this!" Lupis tuned his fellow agent out and concentrated on the printout, trying to gauge where Officer Echo was most likely headed.

Don Stracci showed up a few moments later, Tony noticing his father approach. "Oh... sir." he said, bowing his head a little.

"Got off the phone with Lupis." the don informed them.

"And?" Tony asked hopefully.

"I still don't trust him. But never did to begin with. He told me some things about that woman you're trying to protect though. Things which may or may not be true." He regarded the group now as if he were sizing them up for... something. "First off... she's apparently a latent psionic with the power to control others' minds. This alone sounds incredibly dangerous... and NOT something I'm keen on the government getting their hands on. She can also detect danger to herself before it happens, and can take measures to prevent her own death, but loses more of her sentience every time she does this."

Tony thought a moment about these things. "So... that kind of matches up with what I heard with her. I mean... she was more growling when I last left her... she didn't say anything." Tony shook his head here. "So what did you tell Lupis?"

"I ain't revealing nothing to him. Family first, son." he cracked a slight smile at Tony here. "But I wonder... is this... Lily North even worth protecting? Or even worth keeping alive, for that matter? Control others' minds? That doesn't sound very... safe... though of course, he didn't really comment on her personality. If she's an OK individual... the ability to control others' minds isn't so dangerous... is it?" he asked now, spreading his arms. "But if she can't control it all... then... who's to say what could happen? Provided of course his story's true. It's hard to separate the bullshit from reality a lot of the time." he grumbled.

When Tony told them what condition Lily was in, Axel sagged back, feeling like someone had just punched him in the stomach. "She's that bad..." he whispered, mouth suddenly dry as sand. Then this plan has to work... there's no time left...

Axel's head raised when he heard footsteps approaching, and his tail curled nervously when he saw it was Don Stracci. As the Don talked, his stomach tightened. He couldn't care less if she's okay or not, he realised sickly, but at least it sounds like he won't just hand her over...

"Don Stracci," Axel said, trying to fight the panic in his voice, "You said it yourself, you can't trust this Lupis guy... If you'd spoken to Lily just yesterday you'd know she's a good person! I mean... yeah, she can tell when something bad's going to happen, but I've never seen her control anyone's mind, and... and even if her body's changing," he glanced at Tony, "She's still in there, Lily wouldn't just lose control! We just need to find how to... reverse it somehow!" Axel looked pleadingly at the Don. "Please, just don't... do anything to her. If anything happens I'll take full responsibility for it and... and if there's anything I can do to repay you for protecting her, I'll do it!"

The don regarded Axel with a steely gaze, not flinching as the rat plead his case before him. He remained stone like, frowning slightly as the rat outlined his thoughts. He didn't say anything at first, merely standing with a contemplative look on his face.

Tony at least gave Axel a sympathetic look the few times the rodent glanced in his direction. He knew what Axel was thinking... they wouldn't get another chance at this thing. Lily's condition wouldn't allow it.

His father finally spoke, reanimating himself after a moment's thought. "You care for this woman... don't you?" he asked. "It doesn't take a genius to see that. You're willing to do whatever it takes... aren't you? If anything DOES happen... you'll take full responsibility... I like that. You aren't afraid of owning up and doing whatever it takes. I'm afraid if my family is threatened... I'll take whatever steps necessary to protect them, though." he said, glancing at Tony. "You just make sure it doesn't come to that. Do you have an idea on how you can reverse this process? What do you need?" he inquired, raising his brow.

"Sir... we were thinking of getting those answers from Lupis. But..." Tony glanced at Axel now. "Do we even know he knows what's going on with her, or is he just seeking her for her abilities? He might not know, after all." the ferret pointed out.

"Then you're going to have arrange a meeting with him... either willingly or unwillingly on his part. What's your plan?" Don Stracci queried.

Emilena came puffing up to the manor. She raised her hands in the air as she approached the guard station. "I'm a friend of some visitors you may have had recently!" She announced, trying to look nonthreatening; she'd hidden her gun somewhere in the forest. "Adrian...I don't know his last name, Soren Almaya, and Lily North? I need to find them!"

"Hold it!" One security guard shouted as several rifles leveled at Emelina. "Check her out!" Another guard stepped forward and began scanning her while the first one watched her. "What's your name, miss?" the first one asked, ready to radio the name through.

"I... I don't know," Axel admitted. "I don't have a plan. Well, we thought if maybe we could somehow bug one of his guys, we could find out where he is when they go back to him. But even if we managed to pull that off, Lupis isn't... I mean, I doubt he'll just come out to us in the open, not if it isn't to his advantage. So either we need to lure him in somehow, or give him a reason for coming to meet us that he can't refuse..."

He shook his head in frustration. "I didn't even know this guy existed until a couple of days ago, I've got no idea how he thinks... From what Tony said, it's pretty clear he doesn't care about the two he's sending here, so they can't be used as bait. The only thing I can think of is... What if we forced one of his people to say that they'd found her, somewhere secluded, and that for some reason she couldn't be moved? Might... is there a chance he'd come out himself?" Even as the words left his mouth, Axel knew how feeble it sounded - this wasn't exactly a situation he was used to being in. His ears twitched. Dammit, there has to be something...

"Emilena Echo," she replied unflinchingly. "They know who I am." At the moment, she had only her clothes and the water canteen in the backpack, so she didn't fear trouble with the scans. "I don't need to come in if you can direct me to where my allies have headed."

"All right, you get that? Emelina Echo, here for Adrian.. Soren Almaya... and..." the guard paused as he couldn't remember the third name. "Lily North!" he finally said. "Wait here, miss. We'll get confirmation in a few seconds." he reassured her. "What's your business with them?"

"That's not going to work." Don Stracci shook his head now. "You need to move fast... best tag those agents immediately, then send them on their way. I'll refuse them access here tonight... apologize and tell them I'm far too busy for them tonight. Then follow them to wherever they go... you can't waste time with..." He paused here suddenly, as he received some information via a small earpiece he wore. He looked at them now. "There's an Emelina Echo at the gates asking for Soren Almaya, Lily North, and an Adrian. She... someone you know?" he inquired of the group. She certainly knew their names at least.

It didn't immediately click with Tony. He hadn't met Emelina, and hadn't really remembered all the details at the factory of who had been abducted. "That name sounds really familiar..." Tony said, trailing off.

Sanjay cursed as Emilena was nowhere to be found. He slithered into the ambulance...and cursed as he realized that it had not been modified for use by Snakes.

"Emilena, you motherfucker," he muttered.

He was stranded in a factory parking lot and in the middle of the night. He was going to be in deep shit come morning.

(The Heights)

"So we agreed to go with bugging the gifts, right?" Soren asked.

Anne scratched the base of her horn. "I suggest we don't bug the gifts until they leave. Once they're ready to go, I could pose as domestic help and bug their gifts while their eating breakfast."

Soren smiled as he looked at the "putty tracers" that Marita had procured. He handed them off to Anne.

He then turned to Axel. "Truth be told, I'm not sure what's up with Lily but if everything I'm hearing about her is true..." He trailed off, not wanting to finish the statement.

He paused and turned halfway towards Don Stracci. "Hang on, Emilena's here?" Axel looked back at the group. "I thought some guys... took her back at the factory? She got away?"

Emilena didn't bother to answer; she had no interest in trading pleasantries with the hired hands. Instead she rifled around in the backpack, trying to find something to entertain her while she waited to get cleared.

She paused and her eyes went wide as she noted something in the smallest pouch.

Oh. Oh my. I can work with this...

Elsewhere in the parking lot, a flare lit up. "Sanjay!" a voice called out. "Sanjay Bhat! I have a message from Lupis Wing!"

A hulking rhino was doing a fantastic job of being noticeable to anyone in the surrounding acre.

Tony closed his eyes, feeling both sides were right. Axel was clearly deeply invested in Lily's well-being but... Soren had a point too. What if what Lupis said was true?

"She's outside right now." Don Stracci said. "Waiting."

Tony looked at the others. "I don't know if I like this guys... OK... why don't I go up there to meet her? One of you goes with me... just so sees a familiar face, and... we don't let anything on right away, but first determine what she wants." Tony suggested. "Sound good?"

"Are you really sure you're up for that?" Tony asked, looking him over, before it clicked in his mind. "Wait... she was the one... wasn't she? The one you said you wanted to protect? Well... provided you feel up for it..." Tony said, tailing off. "I'll assist you. Oh!" A sudden thought clicked in the ferret's mind now. "Hey! Dad! Um... can we maybe pick her up in the..." his voice shrank here considerably. "Daimler?" he almost squeaked. "Please? It would look really cool!" Tony said, giving his father a nervous smile. "And... it would just be down the driveway... you know? Oh and Adrian can't walk that far! Not in his condition!" the ferret pointed out.

His father thought a moment, but Tony's pleading look with those big, round eyes and that enthusiasm that was just ready to burst at a single good word from his father was too much. Don Stracci relented, giving off a warm smile that he quickly suppressed after a few seconds. "All right... but be very, very careful!" the don said warily.

Tony almost exploded with excitement that he actually jumped a tad in place. "Sure thing, dad!" He turned to look at Adrian now, a wide grin on his face. "So uh yeah... you good to move?"

Soren raised his hands defensively. "Hey, I didn't say we had to kill her! But in the event that she does become dangerous, what else can we do? Leave her somewhere in Lanthae?"

The Human's eye twitched as he heard the name Emilena. He said nothing but his tense muscles betrayed the anger and hatred he felt for the Vulpine.

Anne was reclining in a sealskin sofa and sipping some water.

Sanjay hastily slithered towards the flare-illuminated Rhino.

"What does Agent Lupis want?" he demanded.

He shot one last infrared glance at the forests surrounding the factory – nothing.

Lily, meanwhile, had slipped into a fitful and twitchy sleep.

"Agent Exstasis," the Rhino introduced himself. "We've received evidence that the Stracci crime family might either possess Lily North or know something about her current whereabouts. Under the guise of government agents who need a place to stay for the night, you and Officer Echo are to visit Anthony Stracci's manor and attempt to secure as much information as you can. Can you do this?"

Tony assisted Adrian up to the garage, ensuring they took the public elevator directly into that location to avoid Adrian having to wrestle with using his crutches on the stairs. Walking down the row of glinting cars, Tony stopped at a particularly large silver and maroon convertible. Measuring almost 22 feet from bumper to bumper, the 1951 Daimler DE36 boasted a straight eight engine, and was the epitome of luxury for Britain in the early 50s.

Letting Adrian take one of the back seats in the limousine (he wasn't letting someone he didn't trust into the back seat after all), Tony slid behind the right side driver's wheel, and turned the ignition, letting the big car grumble into life and feeling a sense of glee as he listened to the big motor turn. Carefully pulling out into the center lane and accelerating slowly towards the garage's exit, he waited for the door to lift up before he drove the car out onto the driveway, snapping on the headlights as he rolled down the somewhat snaking drive to the main gate.

(http://www.barthworks.com/cars/cussler/photos/1951daimlerde36c.jpg) heading towards her in the night. By now she had been ushered through the foot gate and was standing behind the main barrier, and Tony turned the big car around in the driveway and braked so the passenger side door was adjacent to Emelina. Reaching over, Tony opened the left-hand door, and motioned for her to enter. "Ms. Emelina Echo... I'm Anthony Stracci Jr. I believe you already know Adrian. Welcome to the Heights. Might I ask your business here?" he inquired, starting to drive back up to the house.

"Hey Emi..."
He said gently...

Once Adrian and Tony had left, Axel breathed out slowly and leaned back on the wall. He crossed his arms over his chest, taking the lull in conversation to try and clear his mind. After a while, he sighed and swung his gaze to the others. Soren didn't look pleased at the news they'd just received. I guess him and Emilena aren't exactly the best of friends...

"So, uh... you said you wanted to act like a maid? They won't tip you with weed, you know..." Axel gave Anne a small grin, trying to lighten the mood.

Even Emilena was impressed when the vintage model rolled up. Certainly not the reception she was expecting, she gingerly opened the side door and smiled at Adrain, though her expression turned serene when she saw his appearance. "What on Earth have you been doing while I was gone?" she exclaimed, noting his crutches and wounds. "I've been tortured by Purifiers and I look better than you do!"

She turned to Tony. "These are my allies. I was captured recently, but I've managed to escape. And I have very, very important information about someone traveling with us. She'll want to hear it as soon as possible."

"You were...they tortured you?!"
He said, suddenly concerned as he pulled her into the car...

Sanjay bobbed his head. "Unfortunately, I do not actually live here, nor am I law enforcement, so I know nothing about the crime families in this area."

He then flicked his tongue. "But...as long as it helps me keep my augments, I'll do it."

(The Heights)

Anne shrugged. "Alcohol will do for now until I can get some of the good stuff later on."

Soren drained his glass of mineral water. "Excuse me," he said coldly. "But I do not want to be near that cunt."

He got up and left the living room.

Tony completed the turn after Emeline got in, and began driving back up to the house. He listened to what she had to say, and glanced occasionally at her in profile, nodding. "Well... I can say that we've been hearing... interesting information as well." he said cryptically. "First off, I'm glad you escaped. Second, I was present at the factory earlier tonight, and well... Adrian and his friends helped me out... got me back here from a bad situation I'd found myself in. The one you're referring to..." Tony paused here. He could take an educated guess about whom Emelina meant.

"She might not be in any condition to hear anything at the moment... what's the information?" he asked, figuring it couldn't be so important that she couldn't tell it in front of Adrian. He purposely avoided any direct talk as to Lily or her present whereabouts, but once he determined Emelina's trustworthiness, he might be a little more forthcoming with details.

Emilena pulled her sleeves up, revealing the charred flesh around her wrists. "They were pretty extensive, but I proved to have a high pain tolerance. I'd like to talk to you personally about that tonight..." she winked suggestively at Adrian.

She turned to Tony. "I'll save the details for when the rest of my friends are present, but the gist is...while in the Purifier camp, I learned what's causing Lily's mutations. I also know how we can make her normal again."

Exstasis nodded. "You really have no other choice in the matter. Where is Officer Echo? Can you ensure she will agree to follow this plan? We don't want her making a bad impression on the Straccis; our relationship with them is rather...political."

Tony couldn't help but smirk a little at Emelina's suggestion to Adrian, but he shifted back into deadpan as she turned to look at him to deliver her news. He pursed his lips at this announcement, but kept his eyes on the road as they approached the house. "Fascinating. Well, if you want to save the details, that's fine. I myself don't know too much about the situation but I saw a few things... and I just hope there's still time." he said grimly as he pulled the Daimler into the garage now.

He drove slowly down the row of cars, the fancy and classic models passing on the left and right as he moved to the Daimler's spot, going past it a little bit before braking. "OK... here we go." he muttered, turning around in his seat now to try and back the big boat up. Shifting into reverse, he carefully began backing into the spot, turning the wheel in order to shift the large car parallel with the two flanking it. "Come on... come on..." he whispered, easing the Daimler back further and further and finally getting it right. "Whew!" he exclaimed aloud. "Glad that went well!"

Killing the engine, Tony remained behind the wheel just a second or two more, feeling rather proud of himself over what he'd been able to accomplish. He hadn't driven the Daimler before except to move it around the garage, so this was a step he was rather pleased with. He'd ridden in it plenty of times of course growing up, but had never driven it that distance.

Opening his door now, he exited the car. "On behalf of Don Anthony Stracci, welcome." he told Emelina, smiling slightly now. "This way." he led the way out of the garage, depositing the Daimler's keys in the workshop and ensuring Adrian had some assistance before taking them down the elevator to the basement where Axel and well... only Anne and his father now it seemed were still present. Soren had since slipped away.

"Look what the ferret dragged in!" Tony declared as he headed down the hall towards the group now.

"Not a scratch on that car?" his father asked, narrowing his eyes.

"Not one, sir!" Tony replied back with a grin. "Oh yes! This is my father, Don Stracci." he introduced Emelina to the head of the family.

"How do you do?" the don asked, giving her a brief nod.

"Uh... hey. I'm glad you're alright..." Axel said hesitantly, raising his hand in a wave. Though he barely knew Emilena, he was happy to see that that she'd escaped from whoever had taken her. And it looks like they put her through hell... he thought, noting Emilena's disheveled appearance.

Marcus stomped his way outside, approaching the group of Purifiers who were attending to the ruined transformer. He spotted Aaron. "How many casualties-" he started to demand... then spotted the three bodies sprawled around. All dead from single bullet wounds. Sniped.

"Fuck!" he snarled, his head pounding as the drug wore off. "I knew we shouldn't trust Lupis!" Marcus whirled around, teeth bared with rage as he started to storm back inside the compound.

Emilena treated Don Stracci with more respect than any person since this whole ordeal had started; she knew just how many shallow graves were incapable of being traced back to this man. Also, as a child she'd first established connections with the police department by working as the bait in pedophile stings, so she knew how to make a good impression on older men. "It is an honor to accept your hospitality," she curtsied. "Apologies for my appearance; I was making the acquaintance of a couple Purifier interrogators earlier this evening." She intentionally had not returned her sleeves to their normal position, allowing the others to see her charred wrists and other wounds.

She plastered a smile on her face when she saw Axel; the only other member of the party who appeared to be present except the loathsome pony. "It's so great to see you all again!" She hugged him for added camaraderie. "Where is Lily? I need to speak with her."

"I can try but I'm not sure where Emilena is. She just ditched me while I was interrogating a Mr. Altyn." Sanjay sighed as he yawned, exposing his metallic fangs.

He then looked at the ambulance. "Also, I have no means of transportation but if you were to get me to the Straccis' I may be able to help you there."

(The Heights)

Soren was in a small study off from the living room. He was reading a newspaper but also listening into Emilena's conversation.

Anne sipped some mineral water as she watched Emilena. Out of habit, she gently ran a few fingers over her horn.

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron put down the firehose and followed Marcus into the dingy building. "Should we retrieve our captives or engage in some 'operations'?"

At the same time, he had to wonder – was the government onto him?

Don Stracci had to admit, he was surprised by the... good mannered woman standing in front of him. He blinked a few times. "Well... er... I'm glad you... managed to extricate yourself from that situation." the don replied, noticing the burned flesh on her arms. It certainly seemed like she'd been through more than just the wringer.

Tony noted the affection Emelina seemed to show for Axel. He'd have to get the rat's perspective on that.

Tony stepped forward now, his face heavy. "Lily... has taken a turn for the worse, I'm afraid." he said softly, bowing his head a bit here. "For her own safety... we had to move her to an undisclosed, secure location. What have you to tell her? I have to admit, I was intrigued when you said you knew what was causing her mutation, and how to stop it. Is there anything we..." he motioned to the others around him. "can do to help her?"

"Sorry Adrian, this needs to happen sooner rather than later," Emilena replied. She turned to the group at large. "While escaping the Purifier camp, I heard them discussing Lily. They want her. What's more, they seemed to understand what's caused her mutation."

She looked at her feet. "I'm sorry, but I'm not comfortable telling all of you what I've learned. I don't know who truly has Lily's best interest at heart." She looked at Axel. "I've noticed that you and Lily share a bond. I think she'd trust you. I'm leaving it up to you to decide who can hear what I've found out."

"We've been unable to contact her as well," mused Exstasis. "I fear we must consider her away without leave until she provides reason for us to assume otherwise. I will be accompanying you to Stracci manor."

He began the walk back to his transport. "I'm not...the best with words. Lupis doesn't trust me to do the talking. That'll be your job."

Tony could hardly believe that with government agents on the verge of showing up on their doorstep, and Lily practically turning into a monster of some sort, that that was what Adrian had on his mind now? He was glad at least that this Emelina was more practical. That was a point for her in Tony trusting her but...

The ferret folded his arms across his chest, and gave Emelina a more serious look now. "Sorry but... I could say the same of you. You show up out of the blue asking to see someone who's been going downhill ever since the factory and... expect us to trust you? But sure!" he said, throwing his arms up now and motioning to Axel. "Let Axel decide. He can do it." Tony nodded at the rat. "He's seen enough, I think. He knows what little time we have."

Tony was tempted to walk out of the room to clear his head, and maybe find where Soren had gone too, but he figured that was pointless. Axel would decide in their favor of course, and they'd get this information one way or the other. Of course... he hoped his father wouldn't resort to the more brutal methods of extracting that information but... Tony doubted it would come to that. Axel would be reasonable, after all.

Axel's eyes widened in surprise when Emilena hugged him. From what he'd seen of her, she seemed like she'd rather kick a kitten than hug anyone... but maybe that wasn't fair. She was one of the reasons why he'd survived the attack on Soren's house, after all.

He gave her a nervous smile as they broke apart, which turned into a full fledged beam when she mentioned she knew more about Lily's mutation. "Hey, that's great! Awesome! There's still time if we..." He trailed off as Emilena added that it was up to him to decide who'd learn about it. "What... what do you mean? I trust..."

Axel stopped, remembering Kojuuro. Lily'd seemed terrified of him back in the infirmary... and thinking back on it, she'd been with him in the SUV when she tried to run away... What the hell's going on between them? Biting his lip, he looked up just as Adrian was rounding on Tony. "Adrian, just... stop. Tony's alright."

He looked at Emilena. "Look, I... I trust everyone here." Maybe not the Don, but saying so seems like a good way to earn a bullet in the back of the head. "If there's something you know, they should all hear it. But... I think Kojuuro should be kept out of it..." Axel glanced anxiously at Adrian. "I'm sorry..."

Marcus strode though the halls, barely giving time for Aaron to keep pace with him. "We can't just let them get away," he growled over his shoulder. "They've seen too much. If they talked..." He shook his head furiously. "I need to find out what our next orders are - we need to act fast."

Winding their way down the corridors, they eventually reached a plain metal door, identical to all the others in the compound with the exception of a small wooden sign hanging down. 'B. Rhaegson' was scrawled across it in black marker pen. It looked faintly ridiculous. Marcus banged a fist against the door, causing the sign to jiggle on the rope it was hanging from. "Rhaegson! I need to talk to you!" he barked.

"Yeah? Come in then, don't need to break the fuckin' door down," a voice echoed through.

Marcus twisted the handle and pushed it open to reveal a room identical to his quarters, with the exception of a large desk that was pushed up against the wall, on which sat a computer and a bunch of paper files. Seated behind it, with his feet propped up on the desk's surface, was the small man who'd come to Soren's door. A cigarette stuck out from between his teeth, and he brushed aside a strand of his greasy blonde hair as he eyed Marcus and Aaron curiously. "My computer won't work," he said. "Fuckin' perfect."

"The main transformer's out... and it got taken out when Lupis helped Echo and Bhat escape!" Marcus rumbled.

"It did?" Rhaegson sighed. "So much for doing things quietly..." He looked as Aaron and smirked. "Hey, buddy. Enjoying your first day?"

"I always told you we couldn't trust Lupis!" Marcus snarled. "So what are we going to do now? Echo and Bhat need to be eliminated, and Lupis..."

"No." Rhaegson said evenly.

"What?!"

"I said no. We're going to let Echo and Bhat go, and you aren't going to do anything about Lupis. We're still working with him."

Marcus stared at him for a moment, his eye twitching. "We're still working with him?" he growled finally. "Are you insane? He just gunned down three of our own..."

"Yeah, and that's... unfortunate. But trust me when I say that in the grand scheme of things..." Rhaegson spread his hands, "It was needed." Taking a final drag, he stubbed his cigarette out on the wall beside him and stared back at Marcus. "Look. What I said about working with Lupis? That's an order. Straight down from the top. Don't follow it, and I'll make sure you don't live past the week. And I'd hate to do that, you've been a fine fuckin' soldier up until now. We clear?"

Marcus growled, balling his fists so tightly the knuckles cracked, and turned, leaving the room without another word.

Rhaegson grunted, then turned his attention to Aaron. "If you got a problem, then please, let me know. If not, fuck off. And get the transformer working again, I'm a busy man here." He lit another smoke. If the questions start, we're gonna have problems...

Emilena's thoughts had followed a similar thought path to Tony's; Axel would have to be mad to deny anyone present a chance to listen in. Or incredibly naÔve, which unfortunately would fit his character quite well.

"All right. Now mind you, I didn't get to ask any questions, but the basics seemed obvious enough. Lily herself isn't what's special; it's where in the forest it happened."

She met their eyes one by one. "Somewhere in the forest, while on her day hike, Lily stumbled across...something. It sounded like it wasn't a tangible thing, so she may not have even noticed it. But it's where her powers came from. The Purifiers are trying desperately to find that spot, so they can learn more about it. But only I know where it is."

She held up the backpack. "I found this while on my way here. Lying in the forest." She opened up the smallest pouch.

Inside was a driver's license and Mantreads Hiking Goods membership card, both for Lily North.

"The spot has already chosen Lily once," Emilena continued. "If we return her there, maybe she'll learn what she needs to control her mutations and her abilities. She might be able to turn herself back to normal."

Ferret junior and ferret senior paid attention to what Emelina had to say, and it suddenly all started making sense to Tony now. When she was finished, Don Stracci motioned to Tony. "Get out. I got something I wanna say first."

"But sir!" Tony protested, but was cut off by his father raising a paw.

"Get... out."

"Sir..." Tony bowed his head, and walked out of the room. The don's gaze suddenly became fierce, much fiercer than he seemed capable of looking as he turned his eyes on Adrian. For all the world he suddenly looked like he could walk up and throttle the life out of the wolf effortlessly, but he remained in place.

"I've taken you in... offered you full medical assistance... my son took you for a nice ride in one of my cars... I'll provide you with hardware later... and you question his word in front of me? Don't test my patience, son. A Stracci's promise of assistance is better than any promise you'll ever get in your lifetime... my son was just trying to get you to stop thinking like a horny little slut and get your mind focused on more... I dunno, important things? Plus rightly questioning the lady's loyalty. Now I think she's proven herself, but she had to do that first instead of having you try and act all macho and defend her, which proved nothing." The don raised his brows here. "But it did tell me what you value and I'm this close..." he held up his claws to show there was a mere centimeter between them, "to feeding you what you seem to value most and seeing how strong your libido feels when you're done eating. Do not ever do that again. I mean come on, you're on crutches... acting like a tough guy at the expense of my son is the absolute last thing you should be doing just to impress your little girlfriend cause I'm telling you now... I'm not impressed, and I don't think she is, either." He shook his head here.

"So start acting like you appreciate my kindness and hospitality, or you'll be finding out that my breakfast menu can be a little... different, shall we say, from other places you're used to staying, to say nothing of the fact that you'll hardly be a male when you walk out of here. Do I make myself clear?" he asked, eyes still on Adrian, the don's calm demeanor having been replaced by steely resolution and an inner fire now that showed he was deadly serious.

Tony sighed and flopped into a chair near Soren. He picked up a cars' magazine his dad liked to read, and began skimming through it. "Well... things could be going... a little better." he mumbled, looking over at the human. "Reading anything good?" he asked, noting Soren was reading a newspaper.

Soren folded up his newspaper. "Nothing much, just some cops raiding a back alley clinic – and another Purifier attack. This one on the CEO of one of the cybernetics corporations."

He then looked around to make sure Emilena wasn't in earshot. "I don't trust that vixen at all. She's up to something and I know it."

Anne shrugged. "So Tony, any news?"

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron gulped as his tail tucked in between his legs. "N...No sir. I'll get right on that transformer!"

He backed out of the office.

Tony nodded, his face falling a bit at the mention of the Purifiers. "Oh... well... yeah... that's not... the way to handle things." he said with a sigh. He lowered his voice then and leaned in to reply to Soren.

"I'm with you on that too. I mean she did tell us what's wrong with Lily but... I dunno... something about this just seems... off. Only way to know if what she said is true or not is if we confirm her story... and I'm not willing to do that with the entire group, just in case." He whispered.

He then straightened up in his chair and looked over at Anne. "Oh you know... not much... we think we know what might be wrong with Lily... provided we can trust this newcomer... and well, my dad's threatening to feed Adrian his genitals... the usual, right?" he half-joked here, chuckling as a wan smile spread across his features. He felt sorry for the wolf, but that was something you learned here rather fast... nobody crossed the don. His father was the type who'd do just the thing he threatened and then still end up helping you because he'd promised to do so.

Soren nodded. "She used a doctored warrant to go snooping through my burnt workshop and before that, she tried beating me up. I strongly urfe you to use caution in dealing with her."

Anne nodded. "Let me follow her. If anything goes wrong, I can use my radio horn implant to let you guys know."

"One problem, Emilena hates Augments."

Anne deflated. "Back to square one." Her ears suddenly pricked up. "Tony, Don Stracci has drones, right? Why don't we spy on them with drones?"

Soren tapped his fingers against the fine mahagony table. "That'll work but what if she's up to something? All we can do is watch."

Axel held his breath in the few moments after Stracci and Adrian had traded words, the tension between the two of them being thick enough to cut with a knife. The Don's threat - which Axel fully believed he would go through with if pushed - had reminded him that they were in the home, and at the mercy, of a powerful criminal mastermind. It left him feeling distinctly rattled.

"I'm... I'm sure Adrian meant nothing by it, sir," he said hesitantly. "We've been through a lot and it's... hard not to be cautious. We are grateful for everything you've done... More than you could imagine."

Swallowing, Axel turned his eyes to Emilena. "You... you actually heard this?" A hopeful smile pulled at the corner of his mouth. "If you're right, then it sounds like a decent plan! Or, a plan, at least, which is more than we've had before. Yeah, I... I say we go for it! We've got nothing to lose, right?!" He looked between the others, his smile faltering and his eyes dropping to the ground when he glanced at the Don and remembered the threats he'd been making just moments earlier.

Post by: Pterano on February 03, 2014, 12:36:25 PM

The don's countenance melted back into its more indifferent self upon Adrian responding. He even gave a slight smile, though it definitely had the air of confidence behind it of someone who could back up his words. "There... see? That's all I wanted." he said, spreading his arms now. He remained silent to let the others continue from this point on, until he caught Axel looking at him. "I'm sure." he responded simply to Axel's attempted reassurance, though gave no hint if he really believed it or not.

When Axel once again met his gaze, the don gave a slight thoughtful frown. "Well one thing I should say... is that I'll deal with the government pukes who are coming here for the night. I'll ensure they're so tied up with my hospitality that they won't be able to do much of anything else. They're playing into my paws after all by willingly coming here... knowing they have to surrender all their weapons and gadgets. So I'll keep them busy while you do whatever you want to do regarding this." he offered.

"What? She did that?" Tony whispered back, his brow furrowing in confusion. "Then what the hell is she doing hanging around with you guys?" he asked, uncertain on this. "And she hates augments? Sounds like she picked the wrong group... not to mention boyfriend... to pal around with." he murmured.

He listened to the plan about the drones, and nodded. "No... better to send some of my father's soldiers along if you're worried about her turning turncoat. I mean I don't know anything about her, but she suddenly shows up here offering to take us... and Lily for that matter, into some strange spot in the woods that we don't even know about? Doesn't sound like the safest of plans to me." the ferret commented. "Plus, you could just insist that Anne has to come along... it's a group effort, or no deal. I think we've already made it clear we don't trust her... say she needs to earn that trust by bringing whoever you want along." he said in hushed tones, pushing his claws onto the tabletop now.

"In fact... why don't some of us check out this 'spot' first? See if what she said about it is true? If it is... then we send Lily along in the hopes that she can be cured, like Emelina said. IF Lily can even move that is..." he said now, glancing to the side and sighing.

Emilena hardly spared a glance at Adrian. It was after all an incredibly stupid decision on his part, and she'd never been particularly impressed by bravado anyway. Nor had she ever asked for a white knight to defend her.

She was far more interested in the don. She knew him as a ruthless and determined businessman who single-handedly made his family the leading crime syndicate. Somehow, she'd made a good first impression, and she hoped to keep it. "I agree with Axel's reservations about Kojurro. I suspect he may have...slightly off-color reasons for following Lily. Motivations Adrian would endorse."

She looked at the group. "It might be a dangerous hike. After all, we'd be heading somewhere that the Purifiers are also looking for. And I don't know anything about how this spot works...and you've all seen what exposure did to Lily. There's a risk of that happening to you. Hell, it might have already infected me; who knows."

She met the eyes of each person in the room. "I just want to make sure you each understand that whoever goes won't be in a comfy mansion with a gracious host anymore. We've all had some horrible nights recently, some of us could do with some downtime. But I think this trip should embark as soon as possible, before Lily's condition gets any worse."

Exstasis pulled out of the parking lot in a jet black Van, Sanjay in the passenger set.

"What do you know about the Straccis?" Exstasis asked.

Axel blinked at Emilena's comment on Kojuuro's 'motivations'. He opened his mouth to ask what she meant... then closed it again slowly when she continued speaking, deciding to bring it up later when they weren't discussing more important things. Even if that was true, it doesn't explain why she'd seem so scared of him... there's more to this going on...

His face set firmly. "I don't care about the risks. If it could help her, then I'm going. And hey, comfy mansions are overrated, right? Ah..." He coughed nervously, hoping Stracci hadn't caught that last comment. "I'll... I'll understand if not everyone wants to go. It's just something I have to do."

Marcus was standing motionless in the hallway. "We do what he says," he said lowly when Aaron backed out of the office. When the door closed behind him, Marcus added, "For now. As soon as we don't need Lupis anymore, I'll deal with him." Marcus snarled. "Personally."

(Pelvanida Parking Lot)

Sanjay adjusted his stolen and holstered pistol. "Aside from the fact that they and the Bak Long Triads are the two largest organized crime syndicatea in Lanthae? Not much."

(The Heights)

Soren nodded. "But how do we know what to look for?" He then carefully peered through the small crack in the door as Axel, Emilena and the others argued

He then got up from the chair. "Anyways, I'll have a word with Emilena."

Soren then stepped out from the small study and crossed his arms as he fixed his gaze on the Vulpine. "All right, Emilena, I'll let you take Emilena to this location. But on two conditions: I and whoever I chose will accompany you with Lily. And you show us where this place is – before we allow you to bring Lily."

(The Purifier Compound)

Aaron nodded. His natural canine night vision helped him navigate the dimly lit hallways. A few points of light showed where the less visually endowed were using flashlights.

"Marcus, I'll be overseeing work on the transformer if you need me. Speaking of which, I heard the name 'Patrick Anderson' mentioned in a newspaper story. Turns out one one of ours got to him. Shall we...finish the job?"

"I literally just invited everybody who wanted to go," Emilena reminded Soren, as if she were talking to a fifth-grader. "You don't get to choose anything; they can volunteer themselves."

She turned to Axel. "Thank you for agreeing to come without trying to tell everyone else what to do. Now, regarding whether Lily comes with us; obviously I think she should, since from what I heard her status is deteriorating at an alarming rate. But the two here who really have the right to make that judgment are Axel and Lord Stracci. Axel since he's the only one in the room that's really proven his loyalty to Lily, and Lord Stracci because Lily is currently recuperating under his medical care."

She glanced at Soren again. "That's just my opinion of course; since Mr. Almaya wants to make decisions for the entire group, he might not agree."

"That should be enough," growled Exstasis. "Now, our goal is to learn what we can, so try to use your charms to get us as far as you can into the mansion. I've got trackers and bugs I can plant after that. I've also got a psionic reader in my eyepiece; I'm hoping to pick up evidence as to whether they've held Ms. North at any time."

He stopped at a red light. "But you better be damn careful, or they're just gonna shoot both of us. You understand?"

Axel looked quickly between Emilena and Soren, feeling the tension rising. He held his hands up. "Guys, come on, we can't argue! That won't help anyone." He faced the human. "Look, I... I don't think we have time to scout it out before we bring Lily. She was looking bad and Tony said it was just getting worse.... I don't think we have a choice. Taking her out there is the only thing we can do."

He glanced over his shoulder at Emilena. "I can't think of why she'd double cross us... Besides, I think we can trust her. Why else would she say we can take whoever we want?"

Marcus scowled as they walked. "Patrick Anderson? He didn't listen to our last warning?" He grunted. "Too bad for him. He dies."

Tony shook his head. "I have no idea..." he said softly, then got up to follow Soren. It seemed as though Emelina didn't exactly dig Soren's orders. Well... so much for that idea.

"Don... Don Stracci." Don Stracci corrected Emelina with a smile. "I ain't descended from no goddamn European royalty after all." he pointed out, looking around and chuckling a little bit. "Don Stracci is fine. I ain't no lord."

A small smile spread across Tony's features as well at this. He then decided to speak up of his own accord, lifting a claw in the air. "Uh... one problem. Lily might not exactly be capable of moving." he said now. "Is there a road that runs by those woods? Cause short of carrying her ourselves... which would really slow us down, I don't see how else we're gonna get her out there. But I am going to go check on her condition and see if she's capable of moving." he threw in now at the end.

"If you're going out there... you aren't going alone." Don Stracci muttered. "I'll assign you a detail... and you'll be taking Mr. Stryker with you." Tony's eyes went wide at this. Mr. Stryker of course wasn't his real name... no one but his father knew his real name... but he was certainly one of the more feared enforcers and hitmen in his father's organization. The don pushed his earpiece now. "Mr. Fontana... arrange for Mr. Stryker to meet me near the infirmary." he ordered.

"You got it, sir. Don Stracci... that information on Denny North is in." the iguana informed his boss.

"I'll take it in my office. Come on... let's go ensure you can visit Ms. North." Don Stracci said to his son now, nodding with his head. "Please... excuse us a few moments."

The two ferrets left the group now, heading through a series of hallways that dead ended at the hidden elevator. Both went through the steps to activate the thing, the wall sliding back to reveal the large elevator behind. "Go on... I'll go back to the others." the don stated.

Tony nodded, and stepped in, riding down deep into the cliff and finally arriving at the secret safe rooms. The ferret noted the Doktor seemed to be off. Approaching Lily's bed now, Tony glanced down at her. "Lily... it's Tony... can you hear me?" he asked, gently shaking her.

Upstairs, the don arrived back with the group. "All right... my son's checking on her. How are you planning on moving her if she can't move on her own?" he inquired, looking at Emelina.

"Is she really that bad...?" Emilena put a troubled look on her face. "Hmmm. Perhaps a gurney, if we have high-quality ones that don't make any sound. Or a wheelchair. It has to be able to navigate in the forest. I'm sorry, I haven't seen her, so I don't know the nuances of her condition."

She looked around. "Where is Kojurro anyway? And has he ever explained to anybody why he's been following us since he randomly appeared in the hospital parking lot? He doesn't appear to have a connection to anyone."

Lily stirred. Her extremities had basically stopped growing at this point; all three of her appendages were covered in crusted blood but they appear to have become functional parts. Her tail was swaying slightly, recalibrating her balance as she shifted positions to get a look at Toby. She didn't say anything, but Toby had her strangely rapt attention.

"She was in a medical bed the last I knew." Don Stracci answered Emelina. "I don't know if we have anything mobile like a gurney but... how far did you say this location was?" he asked.

Down below, Tony suddenly froze as he was staring into what seemed to be a very coherent Lily's eyes. And a very changed Lily for that matter. But how... was... she better? "Um... Lily?" Tony asked again. "Can you get up and walk? We have to take you someplace... can you stand?" he asked, enunciating his words just in case she couldn't understand him.

Lily continued staring at Tony. She seemed to be examining him. She let her gaze run along his flank, lingered on his neck, and finally meet his gaze unblinkingly with her bright red eyes. The pupils had become smaller than ever.

She squinted and shook her head, dizzily. Assuming a crouching position, Lily got onto her knees and shakily climbed off the bed. Her stoney skin seemed slightly lustrous, a side effect of its natural ability to reflect light away from it.

She stood shakily, but her tail twitched to help keep her balance. It was actually rather sleek and stretched to the ground.

All in all, the figure standing before Axel was quite a sight, but not necessarily a pleasant or comforting one.

"It's a little out of the way, but not too bad," Emilena replied evasively. She didn't want to reveal any more of the location than she had to.

She regarded their host with grace, but on the inside her thoughts were spinning. He's just going to relinquish control of a psionic monster, let us walk away with it? That's not the mafia don I've heard of...

"Oh my god..." Tony whispered, in awe at the sight before him. He noted how she seemed to be looking him over... as if he was new to her, or something. But... would she be OK to touch? Gulping, he reached out now, slowly... slowly... very slowly. He gently grasped her hand, hoping nothing would happen to him...

The don caught the evasive answer and narrowed his eyes again. "Out of the way, you say?" He had his own plans... but first things first. "Mmm." he said, nodding now, a thin smile spreading across his features. "I see... of course it is. Such evasive answers, Ms. Echo. If I didn't know better... I'd say you didn't want me to find this place." he said now, his smile growing.

"If you wanted to come with us, sir, the offer of course extends to you, as it does everyone," Emilena amended hastily. "We couldn't guarantee your safety, I'm sure you know, but seeing as Mr. Stryker had over two thousand credited kills in the Scorched Earth War of 2030, he'd no doubt be more than adequate to the task of protecting you."

The Stracci's personal butler was something of a legend among the city police folk.

Lily flexed her six fingers curiously once Tony reminded her of them. Her skin was rough and stoney. The sixth fingers were next to and slightly smaller than her pinkies, and her grasp felt weaker and uncoordinated.

She stumbled slightly as she took a step forward, and growled softly. She was hungry and thirsty. For a few seconds, she forgot to relinquish Tony's hand despite having focused on something else; the door.

She tried to say something, but all that came out was a guttural bark.

"I'm not sure I can be bothered long enough to step away from my business." he said, waving his paw dismissively here. "Besides... someone has to deal with those government hacks." Don Stracci knew the agents were probably going to be stupid and try and bug his place... no one had ever successfully done that before, but he wouldn't put it past these guys. "However... I suppose it depends on how important this truly is..." he trailed off now as Tony suddenly appeared around the corner, walking with Lily... or what Lily now was.

Tony still had his hand in hers to steady her and get her used to walking. "Well... here she is." he said grimly.

His father looked at the monster intently, studiously roving his gaze about her form and her eyes. What was she capable of? "Mr. Fontana..." he signaled his consigliere now. "Do we have any instruments capable of measuring psionics?"

"We might... I can check for you." Max replied back through the headset.

"Good..." Don Stracci said quietly now. He didn't like this... he didn't like this at all.

"My god..." whispered Emilena when she got a glimpse of what Lily had become. This was the gentle Sapaar girl who'd offered her a ride just two days ago?

Lily wasn't walking so much as slinking. Something had changed in her spinal structure and she couldn't walk fully upright. She was shielding her eyes from the bright lights on the main floor, and in a moment of primal panic tore her hand away from Tony and darted into the most shadowy part of the room: the space between the corner and the door to the kitchen.

As she crouched in the corner, nude and with hands bared in a feeble display of self-defense, she hardly even looked like a sentient being.

"Hey!" Tony said, running after her now. "Hey! It's... it's OK... we aren't... we aren't going to hurt you." He said softly. "Axel! Come on!" the ferret motioned to the rat now.

Don Stracci watched the display, and was disgusted by it. This wasn't right... he couldn't use this woman for his own gain... in fact... ANYONE using her would have an unfair advantage... she was a human under there... a person... and she was suffering. "Ms. Echo." he turned to look at her now. "Are you POSITIVE about what you're doing?" he asked firmly. "This woman needs help... serious help... you aren't leading her into some sort of trap... because if you are... I'll ensure you eternally suffer for it." he growled. "I wasn't sure if I could trust you before, but I'm making myself clear now... she's getting the help she needs, all right? This thing... it's not natural." He hissed. "I don't know what the government is after her for... but it ends now. It goes no further than this!" he pointed behind him at the creature in the corner.

"You're free to try whatever you please before we take her out there," Emilena stood her ground. "I'm only telling you what I know and what I think."

She still didn't trust the don's sincerity; nobody in a position of power got there by being compassionate and understanding. But it'll depend on the opinions of the rest of the occupants; she wasn't trying to set herself up in opposition with the Straccis.

Axel's eyes widened as he saw the figure Tony lead through. "Oh fuck... Lily?" His voice was a strangled whisper. He stood, frozen in shock as she stumbled away from the light and backed into the shadows. For several moments he stood completely motionless, trying to process the sight in front of him.

As if from another room, Tony's voice reached Axel. He blinked, an act that seemed more like a twitch, and took an unsteady step towards the corner she was hiding in. "Li... Lily?" He crouched down and approached slowly, his arms outstretched in an attempt to show he meant no harm. "It's me... Axel..." He tried to stop the trembling in his voice, to sound more confident. "It's alright... nobody's going to hurt you..."

"Hmph... very well..." the don murmured, noting the iguana, Max Fontana, come around the corner now with a device.

"Found this, boss! It measures psionic levels and brain wave patterns... I don't know if it can actually read abilities though. Don't think we ever used it." the iguana shrugged here.

"Doubt it." Don Stracci murmured. He could never remember what he'd bought and not bought. "Scan her." he ordered.

The consigliere approached Lily now and began waving the reader up and down her body, though stood a respectful distance away, as you actually didn't need to be very close as the range on the thing was good. Tony stood up now that Axel was there. "Hey... Emelina was it?" he asked. "Can we drive to this place if it's far away and park somewhere near the woods?" he asked. "We can't waste a lot of time. Or is it in walking distance? I'm just trying to save time here." he said, his voice strained.

"Yes?" Don Stracci spoke softly now, hearing Stryker's voice in his headset. "Right... OK..." he began speaking in very soft tones, turning away from the group now as everyone was mostly preoccupied.

"We can't drive there, it's off the trails," Emilena muttered back, noting that the don appeared to be distracted. "It's actually closer to Pelvanida, the cybernetics factory, than here. I'm just worried that a car will attract attention. Ideally, I'd like to reach the spot without anyone else seeing us. We could lead the purifiers right to the place they're looking for..."

Lily, meanwhile, seemed to get a hold out herself. Shakily getting to her feet, she crept forward back into the light. Glancing at the people surrounding her, the first spark of recognition on her face showed when her gaze passed across Axel. Slinking cautiously up to him, she rubbed her hands along his shoulders as if verifying his identity, and then silently embraced him.

Axel carefully put his arms around her, trying to be sure he wasn't hurting her in some way. "It's alright... Emilena has a way to help you," he said gently, trying to keep up a soothing tone. Even through his shirt, Axel could feel the roughness of her skin. There's gotta be a way to fix this... there has to be...

Still holding her, he turned his head to look at the others. "It... it looks like she can walk at least, that's gotta save us some time, right?"

Tony sighed, holding his forehead and shaking it as Max continued to scan Lily. "I feel like going without transportation is stupid... especially if we need to get out of there fast." he said, looking down. "I'm less concerned about the Purifiers finding us out than I am about getting her in and out as quickly as possible." He said, slapping a fist against his paw pads. "If we go with enough protection..." Tony trailed off here, noting his father was talking to someone over his headset. "Um... if we go with enough protection" he continued now, "we shouldn't have any problems. I mean I don't know!" he said, throwing his right arm out to the side now. He began running things through in his mind. OK... what to do... what was the fastest car he could think of? No... the Cobra couldn't carry enough passengers... he needed room for at least six...

Well his dad's Duesenbergs and Pierce-Arrow Berline were fast... and could certainly fit six minimum... plus his dad had upgraded them so... they could hold their own speed-wise.

"If we head there on foot... if" Tony began again. "I'm not going without a means of getting out of there quickly. I can call something in to Pelvanida, have it waiting for us... whatever. But I'm not going out there with no means of escape in case... things turn sour." he said now, finally placing his paws on his hips as he looked at the group. "It just seems foolish otherwise to be stuck in the woods with just our feet... after walking all that way, I might add." he pointed out.

Pelvanida? That was some distance away... but manageable. "Right... Pelvanida by the way." Don Stracci said softly.

Soren nodded. "My exoskeleton and weapons should be in the delivery truck. By the way, Anne's coming too."

Beads of sweat formed on his forehead as he laid eyes on what was Lily.

He then overheard Emilena. "Pelvanida? What could they have to do with Lily's transformation?"

He then used the back of his shirt to wipe his forehead and took a breath. "All right, I need some time to plan."

Anne shivered as she looked at Lily. "Maybe we can screw with the Purifiers? Have one group lead the astray while the other deals with Lily?"

"If you insist we take a car, I'm not attempting to unequivocally shoot that down," Emilena reminded. "Unlike Soren, I'm not trying to make myself the leader and delegator of this group. We should make decisions together."

Lily meanwhile was hugging Axel tighter and tighter. Because she was starting to sense something.

It was the feeling she always got when her conscience left her body; the feeling of taking up senses already occupied by another. But she was still seeing through her own eyes. She hadn't gone anywhere...

She slowly realized she wasn't the visitor this time. She was the host.

"But is that a good idea?" Axel asked Anne. "I mean... if there's any Purifier's out there, they don't know where we'll be so... maybe we should just leave them?" He glanced around to see what the others thought. "I mean, it seems like we'd be, like, kicking the hornet's nest..."

He felt Lily's grip tighten. "Lily... Loosen up a little..." He glanced down and paused when he saw the expression on her face. "Hey, what's wrong?"

Post by: Pterano on February 06, 2014, 09:33:16 AM

"Good." Tony nodded now. "Because going out there without transport is stupid... in fact..." He said now, his eyes darkening a bit. "This whole thing sounds... fishy. I still don't know if I fully trust you." he said plainly, shaking his head.

At that moment, a sungazer lizard rounded the corner, dressed to the nines. He carried nothing visible on him, but he was armed to the teeth. "Ah, Mr. Stryker! You're just in time!" Don Stracci greeted his enforcer. The spiny lizard said nothing in response, but merely gave his don a single nod. His eyes were steely, like cold metal. Death was written on his expression, and it wouldn't take an expert observer to tell this guy was dangerous.

"Ms. Echo was just about to tell us the location she intends to lead you to." the don said here, turning back to Emelina, his own expression having become deadpan. Stryker shifted his cold eyes onto her as well. "If you think... I'm sending valuable people out to some unknown location... on foot... guess again." he said now. "Sorry, Ms. Echo... the location... if you please." he said, more determined now. "I can have soldiers there in a matter of minutes, since they're all over the city at various locations. They check it out first... and not approach it of course... but confirm that your story is true. And if it is... you're free to go." he said simply, raising a paw before letting it fall to his side again. "My word is good after all. I promised my new guests support... and they shall have it... but not until I determine your own word is... trustworthy."

"For Pete's sake, look what they did to me!" Emilena took her shirt off, revealing blackened electrical burns and whip marks all down her body. "It only gets worse south of the border! And I've already told you, I have no idea what's happening out at that spot. Anything special could be completely impossible for a normal person to detect."

She narrowed her eyes. "I admit I can't 100% trust you either. I don't mean to be rude or ungrateful for the hospitality you've given my allies, but you are businessmen. You know how valuable Lily could be from a political standpoint. I'm trying to get Lily out there to help her. Why do you want to go without even bringing her?"

Lily just hugged Axel tighter. She could tell what everyone was talking about, but she was more focused on her own inner struggle. The foreign conscience within her didn't currently seem powerful enough to control her, but it was trying. How could she prevent it from getting stronger?

((Just a note, LB&T and I discussed this, so we're currently working this next part out.))

"You're gonna have to trust me I'm afraid... because you seem to misunderstand, Ms. Echo." Don Stracci said, noting her tortured body. "Heh... that's admirable... you've clearly been put through the wash by something... but just what is hard to say. You're not in in a position to negotiate... I'm NOT sending anyone out there until I know we're only getting involved in what you claim." He gave her a slight smile now. "The location... why are you being so recalcitrant with such simple information?" he asked now. "Seems rather suspicious to me. Mr. Stryker." he said simply.

The reptile quickly produced a high-caliber pistol from his jacket and pointed it right at Emelina's right knee. He didn't even blink as he did so. The gun had a high enough velocity that it could shred most standard body armors.

"This is not a negotiation, Ms. Echo. It's an ultimatum." the don said icily now. "The location..." he said once more.

"Dad?" Tony asked, suddenly getting worried.

"Relax, Tony." his father held up a paw here. "I'm not threatening you, or any of your guests... I'm still in their debt after all and I'm TRYING to look out for them... but her... I owe nothing to. She will produce the location... or she'll suffer. If you don't want to watch... please leave the room." he instructed to all those around him now.

Tony gulped, standing in place, eyes wide. He knew from experience his father's words to his friends were good... he'd help them all the same. So... was this just part of his... making sure they'd be safe out there? It did seem slightly suspicious that Emelina didn't want to part with the details of where they'd be going, and that they'd be heading there on foot. But then again, it was probably hard for her to trust his father, and he figured her story about being tortured was at least, most likely true.

After looking down at her for several moments with no response, Axel sighed and turned his attention to the others, trying to suck in air as Lily's grip tightened. He spluttered when he saw Stryker's gun pointed at Emilena. "Hey, hey, wait! Is... Do you really need to do that?"

His eyes found the Don's. "What if she doesn't know?! She already said she didn't! Jesus christ, she's one of us!" Axel could feel the blood pounding in his head. The thought of someone he knew being tortured made him sick. And Emilena's the only one who knows what to do... if something happens to her...

"Doesn't know what?" the don shot back at Axel. "The location she promised to take you to? How could she possibly not know that?" he said, pointing out the rather odd nature of Axel's question. "One of you? She didn't show up with you guys... what if the Purifiers turned her, huh?" he asked now. "You ever think of that? What if this is all just a big trap?"

This part... rang more true for Tony. According to Soren, Emelina hated augments... it'd make sense she'd support the Purifiers. His dad had a point, there.

Axel's mouth opened... then closed again. As desperate as he was to avoid any bloodshed, he had to admit the Don had a point - Emilena should know the location, but still... Was threatening a woman with violence necessary? And could she be part of the Purifiers? "I..."

He glanced down at Lily. If it's to protect her... Even if there's a chance it's a trap... He raised his gaze to the others, feeling light-headed. "Just... answer their questions, Emilena..."

Suddenly, Anne shot up right in the chair she was reclining in. Inside her head was a faint and staticky voice along with a distinct staticky chime. The words were garbled and indistinct but she knew that sound ó someone in their group had been bugged.

She gulped. "Soren," she said. "Someone's been bugged."

Soren scowled. "Don Stracci."

Anne shook her head. "There's lots of listening devices around here and I can hear their radio transmissions. This is a different frequency and it sounds like the one from the bugs that Kojuuro showed us."

Soren's eye twitched. "When I get my exoskeleton, remind me to shove his head through a concrete wall."

"Easy. Let's have the Straccis' deal with this." Anne got up and made her way to Don Stracci's office. She knocked on the door amd waited for a response.

"Can I help you?" asked a soldier who was casually standing around in the hallway. He was behind Anne, leaning against the wall. "The don's out at the moment... something you need?" he approached her now.

THIS was the Don Stracci she'd heard so much about. Emilena folded her arms. "You clearly don't know just how many times I've already been shot in the last 48 hours," she challenged. "Torture doesn't have a great success rate on me."

She glanced at Axel. "But if even Axel's putting his faith in you, fine. It's a completely moronic decision, and I'm not sure why I'm the only one in the room who doesn't want to trust a mafia don, but if you bring me a map of the forest I'll show you where the spot is. Then you can go excavate it, run sensors through it, and try to control its power for yourself after you've shot all of us through the head for knowing too much."

The don smirked at this, happy she'd seen things his way. Stryker wouldn't have killed her with the first shot... nor the second, or the third, or the fourth. It would've taken her awhile to die, if she died at all... of course... he could take her even further downstairs to the "special" room, and introduce her to all of Stryker's "toys."

"Well... that's not going to happen. I gave my word I would help these nice folks for helping my son... and I intend to stick to that." he stated now. "I won't be putting a bullet in any of their heads, nor will any of my associates. I mean come on... I would've done so already. Anyway... Mr. Fontana..." he snapped his claws at his consigliere. The iguana approached Emelina now and held out a data pad.

"Just press the location on the map... we'll investigate it and confirm your story." he informed her.

"Now my guests, I do owe... and a don's word is always good when it comes to assistance to those he owes favors too... but you? I need to make sure of first." Don Stracci was glad for the support, even from Axel. It seemed paranoia always won out over friendship... but that was true in really any situation in which friends weren't real "friends." "At least you're reasonable about it... I'd hate to introduce you to what Mr. Stryker likes to call his 'toys.'" The don's smile was thin here, and not at all kind.

"I can say my dad wouldn't do that either... from what I know at least." Tony came to his father's support now. "if he promises you something... you get it, trust me." he said now, nodding at Axel. "She's just trying to make us afraid of the alternative... there's nothing to be afraid of." Tony said softly.

"Oh... a bug?" the soldier asked, reaching into his coat and pulling out a remote. "That ain't no thing." he said nonchalantly, and pressed a red button on the remote. This activated the house's ultra high-frequency emitter, totally above the range of almost any humans or animals to detect, and promptly overloaded any external bugs with ruthless efficiency. Kojuuro's bugs were soon nothing more than a memory as they crackled out of existence, the extremely high-pitched whine overwhelming their circuitry. "Problem solved." he said in a bored fashion. The house's bugs were all protected by shielding devices built in that would switch them off temporarily while the frequency was emitted. "Who dared bug us, then?" he asked. "It wasn't by any chance the guy who tripped our wall alarm when he left the premises a short while ago, was it? See we don't really care if someone is leaving the Heights and triggers the alarm, but if someone's entering... that's another story." he said now.

The brief burst of radio waves made itself known in Anne's head as a whine but the microprocesser associated with her implant quickly filtered it out.

The chiming and faded static in Anne's head was soon replaced by the hum of Don Stracci's own bugs. A mental command shut down her horn.

Anne scratched her horn as she tried to place the noise. "The chime I heard sounded similar to that of when this Wolf, Kojuuro I think his name was, showed me the bugs. Anyways, thanks."

She walked off and returned to the study. "Kojuuro's bugs have been destroyed."

Soren sipped his glass of water and smiled. "Now to turn the tables on him..."

The van arrived at the edge of The Heights. "All right, let's roll."

Aware that weapons would be easily detected, he opted to leave his pistol in the truck. He climbed out of the vehicle and waited for Agent Extasis to follow.

Exstasis led the way to the guardposts. "We're here for our free room and board!" he announced, then immediately shut up.

"I forgot, you're supposed to do the talking..." he muttered to Sanjay. "Errr, you take it from here."

Emi circled a tiny portion of the map after zipping around it for a while. "That's as good as you're gonna get; it was the middle of the night and I still haven't slept since traversing the entire forest floor."

She handed the data pad back to the iguana. "So what constitutes 'checking my story out'? Considering I have no idea what you're hoping to find there, and neither do you. Are you gonna kill me unless there's a newspaper stand full of the latest editions of Psionics Monthly and a glowing green aura straight from Close Encounters of the Third Kind?"

He looked around as he waited for a response.

((Done with full permission))

The intercom buzzed back, Oscar Gambino's voice coming through. "You're here to see who?" he asked, then a pause. "Oh yes!" he declared, tone changing to friendly. "Yes, of course! One moment please." he said, and pressed the button allowing them access to the manor. The big crocodile capo stood before them as the doors swung open, and he was hulking even by Exstasis's standards. "Please... this way." he said, dripping charm as he showed them towards the scanner.

Down below them, Don Stracci smirked. "No... but we need to find something substantial... that corroborates your story... ah!" he said now, grinning. "It seems the government hacks have arrived!" He declared, hearing Gambino's report in his ear. "One moment, Ms. Echo." he said politely enough. "Mr. Fontana, check that out." he ordered the iguana, who nodded and headed off with the data pad.

Remarkably, thanks to a slip of the tongue, the don was immediately informed of some incredibly useful information by Gambino. He didn't show it immediately, but then, after a moment, an actual grin spread across his features. He had them now! He even let out a short laugh. "Hahah! Well now... this is fortuitous!" he exclaimed. "It seems your idiot friends have just accidentally given you away, Ms. Echo! You're nothing but one of Lupis's twit hacks! Mr. Stryker!" he ordered quickly, and the lizard's left hand (the one not holding the pistol) suddenly produced a taser, proving the sungazer was ambidextrous as he didn't miss a beat.

The taser's wire was special, as it was high-tensile for hauling in its victims. The darts shot out and struck Emelina's chest, then proceeded to deliver 75,000 volts through her body, enough to knock any human out cold, to say nothing of the fox standing before the lizard now. She was quickly reeled in by the wire, to where she would fall right at Stryker's feet as the electricity ended.

"Take her below, Mr. Stryker... find out what you can... and then... we're gonna go after Lupis." the don ordered coldly. The powerful lizard nodded once and picked up her prone form before he began coolly walking off. "See?" the don asked, looking at them. "Seems I was right... one of those idiot government agents visiting from your good friend Lupis said he was here to see... and I quote... 'Officer Echo.' That enough proof for you?" he asked, looking around the room.

Tony gasped. "What? She was just one of Lupis's... really?" he asked.

"It came from one of my capos... Mr. Gambino, Tony... no mistake." the don said in a steely voice. "She's just another one of Lupis's lapdogs! I knew he was behind this! Trying to screw with me! Well I'll screw with him first!" the don shouted now, his temper actually rising before he seemed to catch himself, and calmed down, a smile spreading over his features again. "What are you willing to bet that location she gave us is nothing but a bunch of horseshit?" he asked now, smirking.

The look on Emilena's face was indescribable when Don Stracci revealed that the government agents had blown her cover.

"You've got to be fucking kidding me--" was as far as she got before the full brunt of 75,000 volts sent her reeling to the floor with a strangled cry. In seconds she had been knocked completely unconscious.

Lily shrieked when she saw a sudden display of violence around her. In seconds, her claws were bared and the tazer flew out of Stryker's hand of its own accord. A second later, she squealed and started shaking uncontrollably, hyperventilating. Sprinting on all fours, Lily ran for an exit and punched through the closest one, leading upstairs. In seconds, she was gone, leaving a trail of splinters behind what used to be a fine oaken postern.

Exstasis nodded as he was led into the interior of the mansion.

"How did you know Officer Echo was here?" he asked Sanjay curiously, keeping his voice to a low mutter so the flanking guards wouldn't hear.

"Shit!" Tony exclaimed as Lily bolted. "Come on!" he said to Axel. "We can't have her running around the house with government agents about!" he waved his paw, and took off after her.

"I'll activate some of the house's less lethal traps!" his father called after him, pulling out a remote to do just that.

Stryker meanwhile had quickly caught the flying taser with his tail, and shoved it back into his coat as if nothing had happened (though inwardly, he'd been surprised). Right... time to get to work then... he entered a secret door and headed for the basement's "fun house" as it was called with Emilena in tow, locking the door electronically behind him.

(OOC - As for why Sanjay said Officer Echo. Out of universe, I screwed up. In universe, Sanjay hates her. He wants to get her on the bad side of the Stracci Family. As for why he knew about Emilena being there, he assumed that Emilena wanted to get "buddy-buddy" with the local crime lords. He's aware that Lanthae cops are very corrupt, even by this universe's standards.)

Sanjay didn't hear Agent Extasis. He slithered after the Rhino, keeping a eye on the flanking guards.

Soren jumped as he heard something breaking from underneath him. "Fuck this! I'm out of here!"

He bolted from the room and made his way to the exit. In his panic, he went down the wrong stairwell and ended up going into the basement where everyone was.

Anne, who was slightly drunk, followed him. And prepared to drag him to safety if need be.

Axel gaped in shock as Lily tore out of the room, then sprinted after her, hot on Tony's heels. Taking the stairs two at a time, he could make out deep gauges in the stairs where Lily's claws had torn through in her attempt to escape. As Axel and Tony reached the top, the sound of something rocketing down the corridor to their left told them which direction she'd gone. A side table had been knocked down, the vase of flowers on its surface smashed on the floor and water pooling around it.

"Come on!" he urged the ferret, taking off after her. "Can't you warn your guards or something?! They're gonna shoot her!"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on February 07, 2014, 07:05:57 AM

"Uh, yeah!" Tony replied, fumbling with his phone and trying to remember what the number was as they raced up the stairs. "Come on...!" he said to himself, wishing he had the radio system that kept his family connected (which he hadn't received yet since coming back). He dialed what he hoped was the number (it was saved but it was kind of hard to run, look where you were going and dial all at the same time) and yelled "Don't shoot the... creature running around!" He hoped his father would've taken care of that too...

Downstairs, the don almost ran into Soren and Anne as he was starting to head upstairs. "Ah! Soren, was it?" he asked. "I'm not sure if you fully distrusted Ms. Echo or not, but it seems you were right to do so. Turns out she was just another one of Agent Lupis's stooges. We're dealing with that though, don't worry." he reassured him.

Upstairs, it was very fortunate that Lily was towards the rear of the substantial house, as Sanjay and Exstasis were still at the front. Gambino was leading them towards the dining room. "It seems Officer Echo is freshening up at the moment." he informed them. "The don will however be with you shortly. Can I interest you in your... 'free room and board?'" he used Exstasis's words now. "Particularly the latter? I can radio in your food so that it will be ready faster." he informed them. He was ever alert however in case Lily decided to come this way.

In the "fun house" deep within the manor, Stryker was busy chaining Emelina to a contraption that hung from the ceiling. The device was a series of chains and manacles which would keep her hovering at a 45-degree angle off the floor, as they were all connected to a hook. She wouldn't be able to move her limbs, as the chains were taut with no give to them. The hands would be brought to a bit off her sides, and her legs would be spread slightly apart.

As Stryker activated the device and began winching her up, he smacked her head. "Time to wake up..." he said, his voice low, somewhat raspy, and very menacing. There was a slight hint of a Germanic accent in there as well, but unless the observer was trained, it would be hard to pick out from which country it originated. She wouldn't be able to see much in here, as it was very dark, and only a dim, low-powered light shined almost directly in her face from across the room. Another thing she'd notice would be the heat... it was like a sweat box in this room, though it didn't seem to be bothering Stryker. In fact, prisoners could be slowly killed down here simply by letting them sweat to death by losing enough fluids, though that of course wasn't what the lizard had in mind.

Lily tore down a hallway, sending a maid (the same one that had found her in the bathroom) flying screaming into a large walk-in closet. A pair of guards saw her coming, but having received the warning not to shoot her, had little choice but attempt a physical barricade, which Lily effortlessly smashed through.

The next room appeared to be a sort of office, with the only window steel-barricaded. When she opened the door, a turret rose from the corner audibly and flashily. <PASSWORD NOT IDENTIFIED> it informed her pleasantly and then began firing blanks; it was designed to frighten, not actually harm.

In a panic, Lily tried to escape back out the door she'd just entered, only to hit a large stun field that had sprouted up over the entrance. As she fell to the ground, a trapdoor opened up to deliver her to a titanium-reinforced net of electrically-woven fabrics, designed to incapacitate the victim through random electrical stimulation of nerves across their body. She would twitch and spasm uncontrollably until somebody came to rescue her, and until then everyone in the vicinity could listen to her screaming.

Emilena groaned when something smacked her upside the head. Slowly coming to her senses, she took in her situation with only mild surprise.

"Well, that went downhill fast..." she muttered, testing her bonds and finding them unsurprisingly solid. "At least I get to keep my pants this time."

She then noticed Stryker hovering over her. "You don't get to make any demoralizing quips about me being stupid," she warned him, "because this totally isn't my fault."

"That would be excellent!" beamed Exstasis. "I'm starving!"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on February 07, 2014, 11:20:18 AM

Axel sprinted after her, overtaking Tony as he slowed to dial his phone, dashing past the walk-in closet from which the maid's panicked cries were emanating. He rounded the corner and jumped over the two dazed guards who were getting to their feet, trying to process in his mind that it was Lily who was causing this mayhem... or whatever she was becoming, at least.

The sudden sound of her screams reached him, and he picked up speed, hurtling towards the open door at the end. "Lily, stop-" he started to shout... then gasped as he made out the light blue tinge of the stun field blocking the door, his trainers squeaking on the polished wooden floor as he skidded to a halt, stopping inches from it. The energy radiation from it was enough to make his fur tingle. Her screams continued to cut through the air, churning Axel's stomach - he was close enough now to see she'd fallen through a hole in the floor, though he couldn't make out what was causing her to shout.

Axel heard Tony catching up, and he turned desperately. "How the hell do you turn this off?! Come on, she's in pain!"

Post by: Pterano on February 07, 2014, 11:53:56 AM

Tony slid to a halt beside Axel, noting the chaos Lily had caused in her passing. "Uh! Hold on!" Tony said, going for his phone now and trying to remember the numbers to press to deactivate the traps. "Uhh... one moment..." He said, holding his forehead. "Right!" he quickly keyed in the three digit code, and the pit trap deactivated. "Come on!" he said now, reaching down to grab hold of one of Lily's arms while he waited for Axel to do the same. They started to haul her up now and back onto the floor.

When she was safely deposited on solid ground once again, Tony wiped his brow and exhaled in relief. "I think she's OK... the field wasn't designed to seriously hurt anyone." he explained. "Don't worry Axel... she's going to be fine." he said reassuringly, trying to get the rat to look at him for a moment.

Gambino smiled at how... easily led Exstasis was. Turning the corner into the expansive dining room, the crocodile capo showed the rhino to a particular seat along the table. "Please, Mr. Exstasis, right here." he said, waving his hand to the particular chair. "Your food will be out shortly. Do you like pasta?" he asked.

"And you, Mr. Bhat, sit wherever you like." Gambino offered. Sanjay would be spared what was coming next, though Exstasis had his seat specially prepared ahead of time. Nothing out of the ordinary could be seen on it though; it appeared like just a normal seat. It was in fact the seat Soren had sat in earlier tonight, and he'd been just fine.

Stryker laughed in a whispering fashion, smiling at her words. "Yes... I would agree with you on that." he said softly, his words echoing in the enclosed room. "In this instance... you have your idiot friends to thank for your current predicament." he stood up now, going for the hanging control panel. "Your pants? Sounds like your last torture session ended well for someone." he commented, pushing another button on the yellow box, which was suspended in mid-air thanks to anti-gravity technology. "Let's make you a bit more comfortable... shall we?" he asked, smiling as a giant steel weight fell from the ceiling and landed none too softly on her backside. It would stretch her spine as her body would be pushed forward, and would gradually get heavier every ten minutes, increasing its mass through nanotechnology. As her body had literally nowhere to go, she'd been feeling the full brunt of the weight as it continually grew.

Stryker avoided his "toys" for the moment, but he did reach into his coat pocket and produce something that looked like a mechanical bug. He studied it for a minute, but did noting further with it at present. "Comfortable?" he asked, looking over at Emilena. "It seems your little friends... weren't as smart or as loyal as you were probably hoping... but even I admit... I didn't expect Agent Lupis to be this stupid. So first things first... what's really out there? In those woods?" He asked, rolling the little "bug" around in his fingers. "And what were your plans when we got out there?" He then began rubbing his hands together slowly, rolling the bot around between them. "You know... the Spanish were geniuses when it came to the art of inflicting pain... mutilating their targets, and forcing even the strongest 'heretics' to confess. I'm a particular fan of some of their more brutal methods... and you'll soon find out some of these for yourself if you don't cooperate." he said now, sitting down in a chair to watch her.

Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on February 07, 2014, 12:34:13 PM

"Do you have a direct line to Lupis?" Emilena asked, gritting her teeth and panting; the position also made it difficult to breathe. "Lets call him and we can all tell him what an idiot he is. I took this gig for one reason: to get out of Purifier prison. With that snake Sanjay Bhat. Do you know what my job was? 'Just keep your mouth shut and keep Bhat alive, he's a master strategist and he can do all the talking.' Well that turned to work really damn well!"

She grimaced as the weights were pressed on her. "Errrgghh...I didn't have any plans for the forest. That was just me trying to get Lily out of here because I trust the mafia about as much as I should have trusted Lupis. That spot story is totally legit though, you should go wiretap it. Bring divining rods."

Lily's body was still twitching uncontrollably; it would take some time before she'd be able to regain control of her motor functions.

Ex stasis sat down excitedly. "I love pasta!" He said excitedly. "The saucier the better!"

Sanjay looked at his uniform. "Excuse me, but I have just slithered through some rather unclean environments and I don't think it's polite for me to sit on such an expensive chair." Inwardly, he had his suspicions about this place."

Soren's eye twitched. "She used a fake warrent to try and arrest me and deatroy my business and before that, she beat me up! Why wouldn't I distrust her!?"

He then took a breath. "Look, I kinda don't care about Lily right now. I just want to make sure Officer Echo and her stooges don't try to fuck me over."

Anne tapped Tony's shoulder. "You may want to speak to Kojuuro. It seems he snuck bugs onto us. Luckily, it seems the house's defense systems have disabled them."

Soren facepalmed. "Him too!? Ugh! What's next?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on February 07, 2014, 01:00:34 PM

Tony looked at Anne. "Bugs? Really?" he asked, but knew his father's home defenses could handle those. "Where is he now?"

Don Stracci clapped Soren on the shoulder. "Don't worry, son. Ms. Echo is being... dealt with... rather efficiently." he said reassuringly, giving the human a smile and a nod. "As are our two guests. As for Mr. Kojuuro... don't concern yourself with him... he slipped away earlier over the wall." Don Stracci said in a bored fashion. "Left his weapons behind too, apparently. I doubt he heard anything useful."

Stryker smiled at her words, grinning a little bit as he shook his head, his body convulsing as another whispering laugh overtook him. He got out of his chair now. "Is that really all there is to it? Get out of Purifier prison? Keep your mouth shut? Help out Sanjay Bhat, whom by the way, is the one who blew your cover." he said now, wagging a claw at her as he disappeared into the darkness to retrieve some of his "toys."

He reappeared a few moments later, carrying what seemed to be two large two-pronged forks tied together with a leather collar, and a pear shaped device, about double the size of a human fist. "These are two of my favorites!" he exclaimed, giving her a winning smile as he strode over to her. "Having trouble breathing?" he asked, noticing what the weight was doing to her. "You'll have even more trouble in a few seconds. While what you say about the forest we'll confirm in a matter of time, I don't think I like your attitude about it very much. So I'll ask again..." He said now, as he took the forks in his hands. "This is called a heretic's fork..." He roughly grabbed her ears, and yanked her head back so that it was craned against her body as far as it would go. "It was designed..." He continued, strapping the fork underneath her neck and fastening the leather buckle tight, so that her head was basically forced to stay in its full back position. "To make breathing very difficult... and to cause the neck extreme discomfort with extended use... imagine having this on you... for hours." He whispered in her ear. She would now barely get enough oxygen to speak, but Stryker was an expert and knew just now much pressure to apply with the fork, in order to keep his victims getting the bare minimum oxygen they needed.

He held the pear up in front of her eyes now. "This... they call a pear of anguish... or... a choke pear, depending on where it was used." he said, waving it in front of her. "It opens up... like so." He twisted a screw at the bottom of the pear, demonstrating for her as the pear split into four leaves which separated gradually away from the center before he twisted them back down. "Now... there are..." he pretended to think a moment. "Three orifices on your body where this can safely go." he bopped her nose lightly with it. "Care to guess which one I'm going to insert it into?" he smiled cruelly again, his eyes boring into hers. "I'll ask again... what's out there, in the woods? Does it pose a danger to our men... and how much does Lupis know about it?" he inquired.

Sanjay didn't go for the trap, but it didn't matter. The proverbial tablecloth was swiftly yanked out from under them.

As Exstasis sat down, he suddenly found himself in free fall, his chair dropping out from under him and dumping his body onto a metal slide which had been greased to create minimal friction. The slide ended in a giant vat of bubbling green acid a hundred feet or so below him. It would've taken less than five seconds since his drop for him to reach the vat, whose contents were strong enough to dissolve even bones...

Sanjay suddenly found a gun pointed directly at the back of his head from Gambino, and other rifles leveled at him from two other soldiers. "Now, Mr. Bhat. I'm afraid dinner plans have been irrevocably changed, for the evening." Gambino said calmly.

As Lily's body twitched on the floor, Axel sat down on his haunches next to her, leaning against the wall. He nodded at Tony's reassurance, but kept staring dully at the wall. The raised voices of the guards echoed dully from further up the corridor. After a long moment, Axel looked up slowly at the ferret.

"She was lying..." he croaked. "Emilena was going to lead us into a trap... and I was just going to let us walk right into it. Right into whatever she was planning for Lily." Axel bent forwards and cupped his head in his hands. "I'm such an idiot..."

Tony's face melted when he saw Axel break down in front of him. "No... no, no!" Tony said now, sliding on his knees over to the rat's side. "Hey... hey..." he said softly, holding the rat's augmented arms. "Hey... that's what you have friends for, right?" he asked, smiling. "Come on... we can't do anything on our own... that's why... I mean I don't know why we exist but... sometimes... I like to think it's to help each other out..." he said comfortingly. "You didn't know... but that's why people like Soren and myself are here, right? I mean come on... I haven't known you all that long... but I can tell you're a good person... even despite... the augments." he said here, looking down at the rat's limbs. "And I can tell you love Lily... a lot. You would do anything for her... and that's why you made that mistake." he spoke in softer tones. "You wanted to help her so bad that's why you were willing to just go out and do whatever it takes... even without thinking."

He paused here, his paws still on the rat's arms. "But... we will get her help... and we'll do that... together. So that we won't make mistakes like the one we almost just made. Just think... if we all have each others' backs... what's to stop us, huh?" he smiled again, hoping he at least got through to his new rodent friend.

Emilena tried to answer, but she was too busy choking on her blocked windpipe. It was making her vision fuzzy in a way that was oddly appealing...

"I recommend...my ass..." she gasped slowly. "It's all...loosened up...from last time..."

She had to work to keep interest from showing in her voice; last time had taught her that sounding excited about torture just made them less willing to do it.

_-----------

Ex stasis let out a long bellowing scream that was almost immediately snuffed out by searing acid, that stripped his bones in seconds. His various subdermal augments floated to the surface, cleaned and probably good for resale.

Lily finally regained enough self-control to curl up in a ball and assume the fetal position. Squinting her eyes shut, she took a deep breath and tried to control herself.

She wasn't acting like herself. She didn't let loud noises shock her in that way. The other conscience was much more...animal. It was fueling her with flight-or-flight reactions. She had to work to get it under control!

"Alright." Axel sucked in a breath and raised his head to the ferret sat next to him. "You're right, I... I'm sorry. You could have been in danger too, and that was my fault. But if we work together..." He paused and smiled weakly at Tony, his ears perking up slightly. "Thank you. I know how easy it would have been for you and your dad to just throw us out on our asses. You don't know how much it means... And... I've got your back if you ever need it." He gave a small, choking laugh. "That probably doesn't mean much. But it's true."

Lily finally stopped twitching and curled up into a ball. Axel looked down and gently laid a hand on her shoulder. But now we're back to square one... And then, a thought that shocked him even as it entered his head; I hope Emilena suffers...

"Hey... it means a lot." Tony smiled, patting Axel's shoulder now. "You're here for Lily, and we're all here for you, OK?" he asked. "Hey... we could've thrown you out... but I think it's apparent to you by now that my dad's word is good... he promised to help... you're still here." He sat back against the wall now and looked down at Lily.

"We're gonna help her, Axel, OK? I'm serious..." He looked over at the rat now. "And we're gonna go with your plan... track down Lupis, and go after him. I mean come on! We've basically nullified all the agents he's sent here, so we've got the upper paw now, I think." He said, nodding with a smirk. "It's the only thing we have to go on, right? We got no other leads. I think he's our best bet of getting to the bottom of this."

Don Stracci suddenly chimed in. "OK... my guys swept the woods around where Emilena said to go... they found nothing of any significance." the don reported.

"Damn!" Tony breathed. "I was... really hoping that maybe it wasn't bullshit but... I guess... it was too much to hope for." he said here, hanging his head a bit. "Sorry Axel... guess that was a bust." he muttered. "Also... if you're worried about moving Lily around in public... my dad's got a Pierce-Arrow Berline that can tow a Pierce-Arrow Travelodge trailer." he smiled here. "She could hide out in there, and I doubt anyone would know." he suggested.

Stryker smiled at her suggestion. "That's what I was thinking..." he wiped his brow, and stood up now. The heat in here was fine for him, being he was cold-blooded (but had augments to keep him from going into shock in cold temperatures). "Though I feel I'm going to need to step up the pain after this." he said, moving to behind her now and violently tearing her pants down. He didn't care how far down, he just needed to get access, stopping when they were around her thighs... after all, a Spanish boot could be in order.

Placing the pear between her cheeks, he then drove his foot downward onto the pear, kicking it fairly deep into her rectum. He then started turning the screw a few times to the right. "I wonder how long it'll take before your rectum bursts." he said, leaving it at its current position right now. "I'll come back and do more of that in a bit." he said, walking around to her front now. "Maybe we should try the skull splitter next? It's not half as deadly as it sounds... but it'll hurt... I promise you it'll hurt. Or the knee splitter... or even a St. Elmo's belt." he commented thoughtfully. He then lashed out with his spiked tail, and struck the side of her head with great force. "There is of course... my own body as well... my spines are capable of flaying flesh." he said, smirking down at her now.

Emilena let out a low ragged moan, but quickly shifted it into a cry of pain for appearances' sake. "This...choke pear...ain't that useful...for questioning...is it?" She choked out. "Let's...try the belt..." She couldn't resist wondering why St. Elmo was into BDSM.

Marita Rose and Marie starred at tony ' you alright?' Marita asked kindly ' the knowledge that Emiklena had tried to deceive them, wasnt all that surprising, the whole reason she had become involved in this adventure was because emilena had busted into her house and forced her into helping her.' i hope emilena gets what is coming to her' she muttered.
gawds only know what the don is doing to her' Marie nodded. ' corrupt cops' she shook her head. ' be careful what you say in here ' rose said ' the don is not a person you want to annoy , or test the patience of. In truth, she wanted to get back on the road, and she was fighting to stay still, biproxytol was something that stayed in your body for a week, after that if you didnt use it you went into horrible wiithdrawals. rose was dreading when the withdrawal would start to kick in, the last time, she had vomited heavily and made a huge mess of the dressing room, it had taken 3 cleanings- all taken out of her takings that week- to clean it up.

Soren shivered. "If we followed her...we could all have been killed."

"Good riddance," Anne said. She had a very low opinion of the cops in Lanthae. Granted, the only reason she wasn't in jail was because almost half of what she made from stealing augments and selling them went to bribing the cops.

"Don Stracci, maybe what we're looking for isn't the forest? Maybe it's Pelvanida?"

Anne rubbed the base of her horn as she poured herself a glass of water. "Maybe we can dig through Emilena's belongings and maybe their vehicles? Maybe they'll lead us to something useful."

Soren rubbed his face. "That's probably as close as we'll get for solid clues."

Sanjay swayed as the guards trained their weapons on him. "Okay, you caught me...So what are you going to do? Feed me to the catfish and crabs?"

(OOC - Catfish and crabs are raised on farms for food. They are voracious eaters and criminals often feed their victims to them – alive.)

Soren nodded. "I don't care about Lupis. But I want Emilena's head on a platter!"

Anne shrugged "I dunno about you, but I could use some weed right about now."

Sanjay bobbed and weaved as he watched the guards. He waited for an opportunity to inject them with the narcotic he filled his venom tanks with.

((Sanjay executed with full permission!))

"I agree." Tony nodded at Marita. "I think that should be our new goal. We find out where he is... and we go for it." He stood up now, and held a paw down for Axel to take. "What do you say we take the Pierce-Arrow Berline and the Travelodge trailer and roll on out of here?" he asked, smirking.

"I'm getting Stryker to extract Lupis's location from Emilena now." the don informed them. "When I know... you'll know. Did I hear you're taking my precious Berline out?" he narrowed his eyes at his son now.

"Dad... we're gonna need a method of moving Lily around surreptitiously and... the Berline's got a V-12. It can out horsepower most cars on the road! Please?" he asked, smiling. "You modded it... it'll be safe." he let a grin spread over his features.

Sighing, the don shook his head. "I'm suddenly worried I'm not carrying enough insurance but... fine. You break it, you bought it."

"That won't happen dad! Or... maybe it will." Tony grinned now, thinking he could own a really awesome car if he broke it. "Anyway, you're the best!" he exclaimed.

"Yeah, yeah... I know." Don Stracci waved his paw dismissively.

Stryker gave her a grin. "The belt? See... when the prisoners start asking for certain treatments... no... that's when I go another direction." he said, striking her face again with his spiny tail. "I'll use the skull splitter." He disappeared once more, noting her disdain for the pear... oh he'd rupture that rectum of hers all right!

Returning with what was essentially a circlet with spikes on its interior, he placed it on her head. "This will split your skull... but only if I apply lethal pressure. In the meantime... I'll just do this." he said, tightening the screws so that the spikes started to drive through her skin and tightened against her skull. "I'll give you another chance." he said, looking down at her now. "You answer the question... and maybe I won't start drilling into your brain. Maybe." he said, smacking her cheek with his hand. "Where's Lupis when you last left him? Huh?"

Gambino didn't like how Sanjay was swaying and bobbing and twisting... it was too snake-like and too threatening. "That's an excellent idea, Mr. Bhat!" the crocodile stated, and fired a round directly into the back of Sanjay's skull, execution style. As the snake slumped forward, Gambino looked at the guards. "Go and feed him to the catfish and crabs. It was his idea!" the croc shrugged, and ordered a cleaning crew to get into the dining room now. "Oh and salvage those augments from the rhino... we could use them."

The guards quickly grabbed the dead Cobra and dragged him off.

They entered a passage way deep into the Heights. There, inside one of the many rooms, lay a large tank with several large catfish swimming lazily and crabs scuttling along the bottom.

One of the guards produced a switchblade and swiftly sliced off Sanjay's clothes. He noticed the augments on Sanjay, but the creatures would eat around them.

"Dig in!" The guards heaved the body into the tank and the voracious predators soon began attacking it, turning the water blood-red.

"Eeergh!" Emilena gritted her teeth as the device dug into her cranium. It was giving her an awful headache. "Fine...don't...do the belt then..."

The skull splitter was making it incredibly hard to think. Lupis, where had she seen Lupis? At the place...the place where she had been...Goddammit, this isn't a hard question...

She decided to stall for time. "I'll tell you...if you do...the belt..." she grinned lazily; the lack of oxygen to her brain was giving her an incredible high, and it was starting to take its toll.

Axel took Tony's paw and let himself be pulled to his feet. "I say that sounds like a plan," he said, returning Tony's grin. They might be stuck back at square one, but he felt better knowing they had something to aim for. Once we get the information from Emilena...

Once Tony had guilt tripped his father into letting him take the vehicles, Axel nodded gratefully. "Thanks, sir. I'll try to make sure the Berline doesn't get too scratched up." He half turned to Tony and whispered, "There's no way you're going to return it in one piece, is there?"

Title: Into the Black

Tony shook his head, and grinned. "I don't think so... but my dad's modded it too so... it's pretty resistant." he chuckled, and looked at the group. "Well... I'm gonna grab some breakfast before we hit the road. The Pierce-Arrow can hold six, plus the trailer can hold basically a family so... I think we'll be good in terms of transport, though we may want to take Axel's truck as well, just for Soren's exoskeleton, unless you have a better way of transporting it." he pointed out here.

"Breakfast? You want the kitchen staff to..." Don Stracci began.

"Oh I got it, pops, don't worry!" Tony said, waving as he went towards the kitchen. "Just gonna whip up something quick. Eggs take a matter of minutes after all." he added. Good, quick breakfast, then they'd all be on the road.

Entering the kitchen, the ferret broke out two skillets, moved over to the expansive stoves, turned on the heat, and let the pans start to heat. He went over to one of their five fridges, retrieved some butter, eggs, bacon, mushrooms, and sausages, and began carrying them over to the stove.

The don looked at the others. "I'll provide you with hardware when you leave... also, your weapons will be returned. You understand, I can't lend you direct support... can't implicate myself after all and risk sparking a war, but indirect... I'll provide whatever you need." Don Stracci stated, taking a data pad from Max now and handing it first to Soren. "Just select from the list what you want and I'll provide it." he offered. "Pass it around, make sure everyone gets it, and the stuff'll be waiting for you when you drive out.''

Stryker glared at her. "You don't get to make requests, I'm afraid... as my boss said, this isn't a negotiation." he stood up again, went around to her backside, and twisted the pear open a few more notches. "Once again... where's Lupis?" he reached behind him, into a box, and retrieved what looked like a cross between a fire poker and cattle prod. Activating it, the tip immediately began to heat up. "This'll hurt you more than me." he grinned, and applied the burning tip to her neck, holding it there and letting the tool begin to sear away her flesh. "Where's Lupis?" he demanded more angrily.

Emilena couldn't help it; she gave out a long, low shuddering moan, arching her back and sticking her tail straight out.

"Oh, it's not my truck... actually, I suppose it kind of is now," Axel said thoughtfully, suddenly feeling bad for the delivery boy they'd stolen it from. He checked that Lily was still alright... or at least, not spasming again, then sidled up behind Soren and peered over his shoulder at the datapad.

He tapped Soren, his guilt over believing Emilena temporarily disappearing when he saw a .44 Magnum was listed among the items they could take. "Hey, get that! The most powerful handgun in the world!" He reflected that firing the gun would probably take his arm off. "Or... maybe just get me a smaller gun. I'd feel better if I wasn't walking into anything empty handed."

Soren looked over the list. He noticed that there was a conspicuous absence of mind altering substances. Nevertheless, he just checked off ammunition for his shotgun as well as a generator. "Well, that'll do." He passed the tablet to Axel.

"Any drugs?" Anne asked.

"Nope."

The mare sighed. "Fuck it, I'll go steal some later. Not from here, of course."

Soren yawned. His supply of moziafil was gone and he fogured it might be useful. But he had little money left. He looked around. He was associating with organized crime and preparing for a vigilante mission. He shrugged; "helping himself" to some moziafil was peanuts.

(Patrick Anderson's Manor)

The Liger watched as his armed guards patrolled his house. The interior had several expensive imported marble furnishings and other high-end products.

He adjusted his tailored suit and looked in the mirror. Staring back was a Feline with the imposing mane of a Lion mixed with the stripes of a Tiger. His black business suit was set off by a dark blue tie. Two golden cufflinks made in the shape of his company logo (a microchip with a cursive P.A. carved on it) adorned his sleeve.

"Sir, are you sure this is a good idea?" a dark-skinned Human said as he watched his boss combing his mane.

"If I do not show up at my workplace, then these terrorists have won." The Liger spritzed some cologne on his suit. "In addition, this suit is my new bulletproof carbon nanotube suit. It's 200,000 creds well spent. In addition my podium has bulletproof corundum shields to protect me."

The guard sighed. "If you insist, Sir."

"Got it!" Tony called from the kitchen to Marita as he cracked some eggs over the first skillet and began whisking them around. He threw in the mushrooms, bacon, and sausage into the second skillet, and let those cook. Soon, as the eggs began to form, he dumped the ingredients in and let them all simmer together. He then went over to the fridge, retrieved some cheese, and sprinkled it into the fast cooking omelette. He moved it around slightly with a spatula to let the rest of the eggs cook and form up before folding it over onto itself and dumping it out onto a plate. He then turned down the heat (but kept it on just in case), and strode over to one of kitchen's many counters, and sat himself down upon the stool.

"Anyone want any eggs?" the ferret called out to the others.

"I don't deal in drugs, sorry." Don Stracci replied to Rose. "It's something I won't touch. I'm sure you could find some easily enough in Lanthae though." he stated. "Aha!" he said now, hearing Stryker report in. "Agent Lupis is at the Purifier compound, ironically enough. I'll be extracting details of its layout very soon." he informed the group.

Down below, Stryker could tell Emelina was getting a kick out of this. He withdrew the searing rod, and smirked. "Hmph... so... you get off on all this, huh?" he proceeded to tighten the skull splitter, hearing the distinct crack of bone as her cranium began to splinter under the spikes. "Just a little bit..." he muttered, noting the weight on her back was close to 300 pounds now.

He moved back to the pear, and twisted it again, causing near rupture of her rectum. "That was just sheer sadism... this next bit... I'm gonna need you to tell me the layout of the Purifier compound, and any relevant details an attacking force would need." he stated, switching on a recorder.

Emilena felt it coursing up, the heaviness in her abdomen. Peaking, like it almost had back at the Purifier base. "Oh, oh, mmmmmm!" her moans turned quickly into a haggard scream as she felt that wave crest. What little oxygen she could get was expulsed immediately as her muscles contracted throughout her body. In one uplifting moment, she squealed shamelessly and bloodied tears poured down her face as she ejaculated loudly and was left shuddering, creaking in the chafing contraption.

"Heh...heh..." she panted heavily. "Oh man...okay......okay..."

Now that her sexual needs were sated, she realized just what a situation she was in. She also quickly learned the downside to continued stimulation after orgasm.

Suddenly she screamed, not a pleasured scream; a real, honest scream of unfiltered pain. "Oh god! Stop! Please!"

She felt it all; the screws dug into her skull, every inch of lacerated skin and shredded flesh. Her flayed burns and torn orifices. How crippled she was. "Oh, god please..." she begged, crying uncontrollably. "Just kill me already!"

Suddenly Lily arched her back and started crying. She was hit by it all at once; someone in this house was in genuine pain. She could feel all of it. And it hurt her.

Make it stop! screamed three consciences at once; hers, her parasite's, and the one assuaging her with uncontrollable fear and anguish.

She shook her head violently, trying to clear it. Her bitter tears stung her eyes. She didn't want to hear this! It was deafening!

Stop! she screamed at the other voice. I'm sorry! But I can't take it! STOP!

And then it stopped.

Where Emilena once hung, now lay dangling, empty manacles. The pear clattered to the floor. A pair of blood-soaked pants lay in an ever-spreading puddle of bodily fluids.

Stryker was alone in the room.

Stryker smirked as he realized he'd finally broke her. She'd had her fun... but it was over. They always broke... and too bad too! He didn't even get a chance to mutilate her seriously yet! But then, as she started screaming and yelling for him to kill her (and he was considering doing other things, after smelling her ejaculation), she vanished. Stryker blinked. "What the... fuck?" he asked, looking around now. Where had she gone? The pear simply fell to the floor, as did her pants, the fork, and the skull splitter.

"Son of a bitch!" he shouted, moving forward now and looking rapidly from left to right.

"What? Gone?" Don Stracci asked into his headset. "What the hell do you mean gone? Well find her!" he yelled. "And alert security! Lock this place down!" he ordered. He then turned his gaze on the others. "It seems Ms. Echo... has vanished." he said, looking at Lily now, the monster clearly in some state of distress. "I'll doubt we'll find her." he clamped his teeth together and looked up at the ceiling. "Great..."

Tony smiled as a glass of milk was procured for him by Marie. "Thanks..." he said, accepting it as he dug into his omelette. "All right... I'll make your eggs soon, just want to finish my breakfast." he smiled again, chugging some milk. "Two scrambled and one over easy order... got it!"

Soren felt a shiver run up his spine. "Emilena vanished...without a trace?"

"I'm vegetarian," Anne said.

Soren pushed the thoughts out of his head and got to work making his own omlette with vegetables and catfish pieces. Some catfish sausages and a glass of orange juice rounded off the breakfast.

The Human sat down to eat when he noticed the TV in the room. "Might as well. Activate."

The flatscreen came to life and the scene showed a Liger businessman standing in front of a well-dressed crowd. His name, Patrick Anderson and "CEO of Anderson Augmentations" appeared at the bottom of the screen.

Axel flicked through the list of items, but half of the things on there was stuff that he'd probably be safer staying away from. Eventually he settled on a small snubnosed revolver, and the ammo to go along with it. Should be easy enough to use... He almost dropped the datapad in surprise when Lily started crying, but before he could do anything she suddenly seemed to calm down. Almost simultaneously, he heard the Don speaking into his headset.

"She's gone?" Axel glanced down at the figure on the floor. Did she do something? Suddenly feeling like it'd be safer in a group if there was a potentially enraged Emilena roaming around, he bent to gently lift Lily to her feet, and started to head towards the kitchen, handing the datapad back to Stracci as they passed him. "Did... did they at least find out where Lupis is?"

"Yes... we found out he's at the Purifier compound." Don Stracci said here. "Your old buddies it seems are harboring him... or he's employing them. Either way, you get to kill two birds with one stone." It was convenient for him, as well, because this way, he could have others do his work for him. He had nothing personal against the Purifiers however, even if he considered them a dirty business. This way at least, he could avoid directly involving his family in something that had nothing to do with them.

Don Stracci regarded Lily again. "I have a feeling your girlfriend was responsible for Ms. Echo's vanishing. She certainly seems to have powerful abilities... but I wonder if she has any control?" he mused aloud.

Tony finished up his omelette now, and proceeded to start cooking the eggs for Marita, Marie, and Rose. He noticed Soren watching the TV, and narrowed his eyes to see the liger on screen. "Hey... I think I've heard of that guy." he said, beating the eggs in a bowl as he watched the speech commence. "Wonder what this is about." he murmured, pouring the whisked eggs into the pan now and beginning to move them around with the spatula. He then cracked two more eggs for the over easy batch.

(Anderson Augmentations)

Patrick looked at his papers. In front of him hovered several camera drones. The corundum shields that surrounded him and the armored business suit he wore along with the two armed guards flanking him should have kept him safe but a twinge of nervousness ran through him.

He took a sip of his water and cleared his throat. "As you all may have heard, I was the victim of a cowardly attack." Murmors ran through the crowd.

The Liger held up his hand for silence.

"However, I will not bow to these Luddites. My company pledges to make augmentations more affordable and more advanced. It is for the world, that I make them, to surpass our own limits! To those who would attack me over creating augments and the Augmented themselves, I dare you, tell the mother whose paralyzed child recieved a spinal cord stimulator and can now take their first step! I dare you, tell the blind man who can now see infrared when all he saw black he's a degenerate!"

The crowd watched in awe as Patrick continued to speak. "I have saved hundreds if not thousands of lives with my company's augmentations and implants!" His voice dropped to a near whisper and he glared into the camera, his amber slit-pupilled eyes daring them to challenge him. "How many lives have you terrorists destroyed? How many fathers who have to tell their children 'Mommy's never coming home'? How many police officers have to tell widowed husbands and wives that their spouse was kidnapped and later found dead? All because of your Luddite beliefs."

The crowd applauded as Patrick finished his speech. Their applause was cut short when a sonic boom echoed through the air and the sound of one of the corundum barriers breaking was heard.

The two armed guards quickly hustled their boss to safety as soon as the sound was heard. Screaming broke out as the crowd began to disperse.

One of the guards radioed for assistance while the other checked on their boss.

Patrick only gurgled as he stared glassy-eyed into the smoggy sky. The heavy steel dart, fired from a camera drone that had been gutted and had a railgun stuffed into it, had smashed through the corundum barrier and retained enough energy to competely rip through the Liger's neck, tearing apart his trachea and other vital structures before it exited through the back of his neck, nearly taking his head off in the process, and buried itself into the concrete sidewalk.

(The Heights)

The Liger's deep resonant voice echoed out from the TV screen as he made his speech. Everything had been broadcast, including the shooting.

Soren stared wide eyed at the scene. His half-eaten omlette lay in front of him. The spray of blood and tissue that issued forth when the dart ripped through the unfortunate man's neck killed his appetite.

"Did...Did I just see what I thought I saw?" Anne asked as she continued eating her pancakes.

Marita had only been half-heartedly paying attention, but after the shooting, her eyes were fixed on the screen. ' my gawd, that guy just got shot on live tv!" she started. '' my gawd, someone was just killed..' Marie said, her meal fiorgotten.

Lily was cradling her head. The lingering aftereffects of the mental trauma she'd just heeded witness to wasn't a thing to shrug off.

It was that police officer. She'd gotten a glimpse of who it was when they'd briefly connected minds. The don had obviously had her tortured, and probably planned for worse...

It left her feeling nauseous. She felt no ill will towards anyone, including Emilena. She hoped the officer hadnt been tortured on Lily's behalf. She worried about how she had stopped the pain; if she'd killed Emilena, she was hardly better than the don.

She looked nervously at the people surrounding her. These were dangerous people, quick to hate and ready to kill. Even her former friends. Even Axel...she could sense it. Something had changed in his thought patterns. To protect her, he was willing to hurt others, or look away as they were hurt. He'd lost part of the kind soul she'd seen when they first met.

What am I doing to these people? Lily wondered. And how far will they go?...

Tony had to admit... the speech was pretty good. He could kind of see where the augment side of the argument was coming from... kind of. He still wasn't fully into augments, but... he could sort of see... holy crap!

The barrier breaking and the liger being shot on live television caused Tony to freeze. "What... the...?" was all he could say at first. "Oh my god! Oh... my... god!" he exclaimed, his paw going up to his mouth now, aghast at what just occurred. Anne finally broke the silence, followed by Marita and Marie.

"I just... I can't..." Tony shook his head, at a loss for words. "Unbelievable..." was all he could whisper. The smell of the cooking food however, brought him back to reality. "Crap!" he said, dumping the scrambled eggs onto two plates now before they started to burn. He flipped the two other eggs over gently, and waited for them to cook a tad more before he slid them onto another plate.

"OK... hopefully you girls haven't lost your appetite..." Tony said softly, shaking his head. "I uh... I think I'll get the car ready." he said in a low voice, and exited the kitchen now as he dropped off the girls' eggs "Hope you enjoy."

He headed over to his father and Axel. "Hey Axel..." the ferret tapped the rat on his arm now. "You about ready to get going? I think I'm gonna fire up the Pierce-Arrow. Want to take Lily to the garage and get her inside the trailer?" he suggested, looking down at the psionic creature now.

Axel shook his head at the Don's question. "I... I don't know..." He had no idea what to think, but considering how panicked she'd been, any form of control was hard to imagine. We need to get to Lupis fast...

He turned at Tony's greeting. "Yeah, the sooner we get on the road the better. I guess the others'll meet us down there after they've eaten?" He put an arm around Lily's shoulders and spoke in a soft tone. "Hey... you ready to go? We're taking you to the garage, you can lie down in the trailer if you want."

Raising his head, Axel gave the Don a grateful smile. "Thanks for everything you've done... We would have been totally screwed. And, ah, I'll keep my mouth shut about, you know... everything I've seen here..." He trailed off as he realised that shutting up was probably a good idea. Turning to Tony, he gave a nod and started to lead Lily in his direction. "Lead the way."

Marita and marie pushed their plates towards Rose who quickly started eating. " I'm not hungry' Marita said. " me neither' marie nodded. ' It only took Rose a couple minutes to wolf down the eggs. " come on girls we're getting in Ton's car " Marita said.

"You will... if you know what's good for you." Don Stracci replied, then let a smile crease over his features now. "It was a pleasure hosting you. I hope you drop by again... any friend of the family, as they say." the older ferret said, taking Axel's hand now and shaking it firmly.

Tony approached his father afterward, smiling shyly. "Well dad... it's good to be back... truly, it is. Sorry we couldn't stay the night..."

"Hey... don't fall asleep at the wheel, OK?" his dad answered, pulling his arm now and dragging him in for a hug. Tony's eyes widened... it wasn't every day his father just hugged him, after all. He reached up, and tentatively hugged his father back. "Hey... whatever happens out there... you're my son and... I'd hate to see anything happen to you... anything." he stated.

"Yeah... I know dad... I won't... do what I did again. I'll come back... I promise."

"When you do... you'll be my underboss... I mean that." his father said.

"Really? Your... underboss? You mean that?" Tony asked, pulling back a bit.

"Hey, only if you do a good job." his father winked. "Now go... do your thing." he nodded in the direction Axel was going.

"Sure dad... take care of yourself, OK? And... I love ya, pops."

"Mm-hm." Don Stracci nodded, smiling. "Love ya too. Get going." he said again, releasing his son now.

Tony backed away, taking a good look at his father before he turned and led Axel and Lily to the garage. Flipping on the lights, he watched as they bathed the polished auto bodies in their glow. "OK... let's see..." Tony retrieved the Berline's keys, and headed for the right car (http://www.supercars.net/gallery/119513/2482/950837.jpg). It was a big dark blue 1936 Pierce-Arrow Berline with a Pierce-Arrow Travelodge trailer hooked up to the back. It sported a powerful V-12 engine that was the best in its day, and still stood the test of time even in 2037, though of course, his father had modded the drive shaft to produce more speed, and gave it a few more combat resistant features as well...

"OK..." he opened up the door of the trailer, which was very spacious and luxurious (http://farm3.static.flickr.com/2461/3536933772_74dc1d10b4.jpg) inside (http://oldtrailer.com/Images/1937-pierce-arrow-travelodge-904.jpg). "Here it is. Pierce-Arrow came up with the idea to design this trailer as something to try and boost sales during the Depression... anyway... she can stay in here rather comfortably without anyone knowing. You... gonna ride back here with her, or up front?" he asked, holding the door open for Lily. "I figure we'll swing by the front of the house, pick up the guns and the others, and get going."

Lily allowed herself to be led to the garage. She looked nervously at the cars; they looked clean, but she smelled age and blood on all of them.

She was still preoccupied with the second conscience in her mind. She was probing it carefully, trying to figure out what it was. Since the pain outburst, it was lying dormant, recovering.

What are you? she asked cautiously. Are you okay?...Can we work together?

It ignored her.

Inside the Stracci manor, Adrian's broken body convulsed as it finally succumbed to the injuries it had sustained over the past few hours. As he flatlined, he managed the strength to grab one of the doctors trying to save him and pull the man close to him.
"T-tell...Emilena...tell her I...love her..."
He choked out, then, as his hand went limp, he managed the ghost of a smile as a single tear rolled down his face. He would later be buried in an unmarked grave, without ceremony or mourners, just another casualty of the city that he had fought for.

(The Heights)

Soren finished up washing the dishes. "All right, ready to roll?"

Anne wiped down the dining room table and then wiped her muzzle with the same rag. "Let's do this!"

Soren and Anne made their way to the front of the house. Along the way, they stopped by Don Stracci's office. "Don Stracci," Soren said. "I must thank you for your hospitality and help."

"I thank you for your hospitality, Don Stracci," Anne said. "Now if you'll excuse us, the Purifiers have got a date with pain."

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron finished off his catfish hash and black coffee. He looked at Marcus. "Looks like one silicon slut's out of the picture."

He tossed a newspaper to the Doberman. The headline read "Patrick Anderson, Cybernetics Magnate Shot!"

"Anyways, what about our latest assignment? We were supposed to steal some shit from an electronics factory or something."

Nairda nodded, clenching his fist.

"The Purifiers will have to pay for what they've done~" He mused wryly, steely-eyed and resolute in his resolve. He followed the rest of the team, chuckling softly to himself...

"I'll stay back here with her," Axel said, helping Lily up the step that lead to the inside of the trailer. "I don't suppose there's any radios on this thing, are there? Might not be a bad idea to have a way of communicating if we're going to come up with a plan, or if... you know, something happens." Lowering his voice, he inclined his head towards Lily. Stepping up, he joined her inside the Pierce-Arrow.

Looking around, he had to admit it was pretty comfortable. There was even a microwave hooked up on the counter with some packets of instant snacks they could use with it. To the left was a small table flanked on both sides by comfy looking seats. He walked with her over to one and helped ease her down into it, noting that she still looked like she was in some discomfort.

"Hey, you haven't eaten for a while. You hungry?" Axel asked, giving her a smile and turning to the microwave. He rifled through the cupboards above it and pulled out some of the packets. "There's macaroni cheese or..." He shifted through them and hummed. "More macaroni cheese."

Marcus shot a hand out and caught the newspaper, still hunched over the bench at his usual spot in the corner of the breakroom. He held it up and read the headline, then grunted, nodding, though his face didn't display any pleasure. "It was a long time coming."

He raised his eyes to Aaron. "Right. Four 18-G12VX Amplifiers. The closest factory's Pelvanida, so I say that's our target. The amplifiers aren't exactly precious, so they shouldn't be too hard to acquire. Rhaegson wants this job to be quick, in and out, so a small team's better. If you and me go, we can be there and back in an hour."

Rhaegson leaned back in his chair, the phone balanced on his stomach as he dialed. Halfway through, the computer screen flickered and the image came back on, displaying the files he'd been sifting through when the power had been cut. "About fuckin' time! Thank you!" Rhaegson shouted through his door, hearing his voice echo, his sarcasm traveling the halls.

On the other end of the line, there was the sound of the phone being picked up. "Hey, Lupis! Big Bad!" he exclaimed, his voice dripping with insincere amiability. "I have my guys heading down to pick up the last few... ingredients. They won't be long." Blowing out a puff of smoke, Rhaegson's voice suddenly dropped lower, hardening. "How are things going on your end?"

"Oh yeah, let me explain a few things." Tony said, stepping into the trailer now with Axel. "First off..." He went around closing all the blinds over the windows. "Just in case, right? Don't want anyone taking a peek inside and glimpsing a psionic creature after all. Now then... this is what the rich in the 30s would've called a 'land yacht.' Towing a trailer around was a big thing then, and you've got some pretty nice amenities in here. Only 450 of these were produced, but they're equipped with hydraulic brakes, a dining area, ice box, two stoves..." he held up two claws here. "One for cooking, the other for heating the trailer, a water tank for the sinks, and fold-out beds." He pointed everything out, motioned to the comfortable couches to indicate they could fold out into beds. "You also have a radio..." He tapped above his head onto the finely polished wood ceiling of the trailer to indicate a black speaker and radio knobs below it. "The bathroom is through the door with the mirror on it." he gestured to said door now.

"And yes, my dad installed a communicator that links you directly to the Berline." He pressed the call button on a wall-mounted speaker to demonstrate. "Just buzz me and we can talk back and forth. So yeah! This is your new luxury land yacht." he chuckled, letting the rat take it all in. "Pierce-Arrow really spared no expense at making sure their customers got their money's worth. This trailer in fact cost about the same as a nice car back in the 30s. So enjoy it! It'll be a good way to move Lily around the city, and can really help fit our entire group too if we run out of room in the Berline."

He stepped out now, closed the door, and headed around to the front of the car. Getting in, he started up the big V-12, listening to it roar to life and echo around the garage. He revved it a few times for the sheer hell of it, and then threw it into gear, pulling carefully out of the row and into the center lane. The Pierce-Arrow Berline was a rakish looking beauty with four sets of headlights curving out of the front fenders in typical Pierce-Arrow fashion.

Driving slowly down the middle lane until he reached the heavy steel door, he waited for it to open before driving out and pulling onto the main driveway. Rolling around to the front of the house, Tony honked the horn for the others to join him. "Your limousine is here!" He shouted out the rolled down window, grinning at them.

Inside the house, Don Stracci warmly shook Soren's hand. "My pleasure, all right? We'll get on reconstructing your workshop at some point. I promise." he said. He then accompanied them out onto the the front portico of his house. Max was there, with metal crates containing their old weapons, and the new ones they had selected.

"Just do me a favor and put the weapons in the trunk and the trailer!" Tony called, popping the Berline's trunk for them. "Carry what you want, and stow the rest! Also, I'm gonna need someone up front with me to direct me to the compound!" He gave his dad a small wave, and his father nodded, smiled slightly, and waved back.

"I can direct you..." Nairda suggested darkly, striding up to the luxury vehicle and riding shotgun. "I've had...an unfortunate history with the Purifiers..." The look on his face betrayed his repressed sorrows from prior encounters with Marcus, his sworn arch-nemesis.

Lily smiled back at Axel and nodded her head. She'd quickly grown to like the cramped space and the darkness of the car interior; as an environment it was far easier to watch all exits and to know just how defensible it was from attack. She couldn't stop her new hyper-cautious prey senses that channeled through her, but she could assuage them.

Marita, Mair and Rose climbed into the back seat all three holding onto thier possessions. ': i'll be working on finding a floor plan for the compound Lupis is in " Marita said, pulling out her computer. '; since this kind of stuff isnt easy to get it, it will likely involve some hacking..and coming up with plausible stores and covers should we try to enter the compound..delivering a shipment of army cellphones wont cut it.. "No troubles whatsoever," Lupis said grimly, not even bothering to sound truthful. He hadn't left his office, and was sitting in the exact same position Exstasis has left him. "I'm trying something...unorthodox in order to obtain our last missing ingredient."

He sat back. "Jesus, when's the last time either of us slept?" He and Rhaegson were both aware that they secretly bugged each others office; it was an odd sort of mutual trust that both followed. At this point, they could even joke about it openly. "Even if it doesn't work, it's got a good chance of teaching me something new. At the very least, according to Exstasis' report, they're reached the last known location without getting immediately killed. So we'll just have to wait and see."

"Alright. Thanks Tony," Axel grinned at the ferret as he stepped out, then turned back to the microwave. "Okay then, one healthy and nutritional breakfast coming up..." Emptying the packet into one of the bowls next to the machine, he tossed it in and closed the door, feeling the trailer shift beneath him as Tony pulled out of the garage. It was one of the expensive new makes that could cook food extra fast; after just a few rotations there was a beep and the door snapped open. Axel took it out and started fishing through the drawers, looking for a fork. Finding one, he walked over and set it on the table in front of Lily. "Here you go. Be careful, it's hot."

He took a seat opposite her and tried to give a reassuring smile. "Not bad, huh? I could get used to this..." Outside, he could hear shouting as they prepared to leave. After a few moments of silence, Axel met Lily's eyes. "What happened with Emilena... when she disappeared... That was you, wasn't it?" He swallowed. "Do you... think there's any way you can control it?"

"That we will, my friend. That we will," Rhaegson drawled. "You know, I never got why you keep using Exstasis. That moron couldn't find his own ass with a map and a GPS tracker. Still, I'll leave it in your capable mitts."

He bent forwards to tap off the end of his cigarette, then took another drag and let loose a series of hacking coughs. "Jesus, these things are gonna kill me." He sighed. "We are so close. We can't screw up now."

Lupis nodded sagely. "He used to be one of our best. He was the top dog in our partnership; the brass would give him any assignment, no matter how impossible, with his track record. Guess that sort of thing catches up with you."

He was in a pensive mood now. Clearing his throat, he shook his head to wake up and got to his feet. "I'm taking a 2-hour nap. If I don't wake up, beep whatever that infrared scanner is you installed in my Shakespeare bust."

He paused. "Glad your projects are wrapping up Rhaegson. Productivity will kick back up once I can stop focusing single-handedly on this one thorn. And we're otherwise ahead of schedule. I was thinking we should bump your public appearance forward to, say, tomorrow, to take advantage of the recent press from the Andersen murder. If you've already written the script and everything. What do you think?"

Rhaegon scowled, his dark eyes narrowing. "What, I'm your fuckin' alarm clock now?" he grumbled. "Whatever. Not like I have anything better to do, right?"

When Lupis mentioned Anderson's murder, he grinned broadly. "I thought taking him out would get attention. Fine, tomorrow sounds good. I always did want to be on TV." Brushing the hair out of his eyes, he leaned forwards and put the main dialing body of the phone back on the desk. "Well, I won't keep you any longer. You're gonna need your beauty sleep for what comes next, right? Oh, and try to keep the snoring down - you can't even imagine how much noise the other bug picks up."

Lily smiled softly at Axel, then daintily took the silverware in her slender hands and brought forkfuls of pasta to her mouth. She noted that her taste buds seemed relatively unaffected, which was a relief considering she'd missed the luxurious dinner.

Once she had replenished her strength, she'd try and connect with her parasite again.

"Don't worry," Lupis rubbed his eyelids. "I highly doubt two hours of uninterrupted time will pass before something urgent requires my attention."

He made to end the call. "You stay healthy Rhaegson. You've fulfilled your end of the bargain perfectly. I swear I'll finish mine, once I get a single goddamn break."

Nairda filed into the vehicle. "We'll be taking a left once we leave the forest~," he informed Tony brightly. "Hey...you know you're really cute...right?"

Title: Into the Black

Tony waited for the hardware to be loaded up, both in the trunk and some in the trailer, then he also waited for either Soren or Anne to get into the Berline (the other one would have to ride in the trailer as there was only room for six in the limousine), and he looked in the rear view mirror at Marita. "Oh there's no way I'm driving this car into the compound. We'll park nearby and figure out a plan from there." the ferret commented.

As Nairda gave him a compliment, Tony's brow furrowed, and he frowned. "Thanks, but I'm not interested, nor do I swing that way." he murmured, throwing the car into gear now and taking it down the driveway as he waved to his father one last time, his dad standing on the portico and watching them go. "I would also assume I would have to get onto the Garden Parkway once we leave the road to the Heights." he commented, honking as he pulled up to the exterior gate and was allowed egress.

Shifting into a higher gear as they approached the highway, Tony let the powerful V-12 do the talking and merged into traffic, accelerating up to 80 miles per hour, which the Pierce-Arrow could drive at very comfortably without shaking or feeling like it was on the verge of losing control. It gave an incredibly smooth ride. They were heading east, back toward Lanthae proper, now. The Berline certainly succeeded in turning more than a few heads as the ferret picked a lane and stuck to it, glad he was getting some envious looks.

He pushed the button on the dash linking the comm to the trailer. "Hey Axel... this is Tony, doing a radio check. You read me? We're on the Garden Parkway now, and on our way!" he exclaimed.

"The Purifier base is up ahead..." reported Nairda grimly. "What's the plan? If you had bothered trusting Emilena, she could have helped a lot right now..." He shook his head grimly, thinking of his love and what could have happened to her.

The transition from black to white was jarring. Almost as soon as she found herself blinded by a flash of light, it was gone and she was lying in the soggy leaves of a forest stained with afternoon dew.

Emilena didn't move for over five minutes. Nothing made sense. Her current situation didn't make sense. She couldn't be here. She couldn't even have died; it was too sudden and Stryker was a professional torturer. Torture doesn't end suddenly.

She rolled onto her back. Leaves clung to her fur, fresh dirt stained her countless wounds. Her various sources of pain had blended together and now her whole body just ached in unison.

The wind whistled through the trees above her. It played daintily across her skin. She couldn't focus on anything else.

She couldn't be here. And until she had sufficient time to process that fact, she wouldn't be thinking or doing anything.

(En Route to Purifier Complex)

Soren sat at the trailer's table, nursing a cup of steaming hot green tea. He had his HMD on and his exoskeleton was plugged into the wall outlet.

He turned to Nairda. "Trust Emilena!?" he snapped. "Are you out of your fucking mind!? She beat me up and tried to get me thrown in jail!"

He then rubbed his temples. "Admittedly, my plan for this is 'kill every Purifier I see'."

Soren then yawned as he trudged over to the sofa, replaced his HMD in its case and lay down on the sofa. "Wake me when we get to the compound." He soon fell asleep, lulled by the engine and road noise.

Anne reclined in the comfortable sealskin seat of the Pierce-Arrow. "So Tony," she said as she opened a cooler and retrieved a small can of beer. "What's our plan when we get there?"

She then visibly shivered as she saw a street sign flash by that read "Holmia – 2 miles". "Mind making a stop in Holmia? I gotta get my fix," the mare said. Holmia was a rather nice commercial district that was also home to a large open air market that sold everything from drugs to weapons to illegal augments.

(Purifier Compound)

"Might as well," Aaron said. He then cracked his knuckles. "How should we do this? We can't break into Pelvanida in broad daylight!"

Title: Into the Black

Axel watched the human walk over to the sofa. "Alright Soren, no problem." Tony's voice issued from the speaker, and he craned his neck, reaching over and pressing the button next to it. "Axel here, I'm reading you loud and clear! Hey, this thing's pretty nice - you might have to pry me out of here with a crowbar..."

His voice grew more serious as he looked around at some of the crates that had been loaded into the trailer. "Are we, ah... are we working on getting a map of this place? Just walking in probably isn't a good idea... even for a super soldier like me." He paused. "Uh... Over?"

Marcus eyed the german shepherd. "No, we can't just break in alone. But there is someone who can help us. We've had... dealings with someone who works there. Mr. Altyn's shift starts soon. I'm sure he can be persuaded to let us in."

Rhaegson laughed, a harsh, unpleasant sound. "I could almost believe you're starting to care about me, Lupis. Almost." He rolled his eyes. "And make sure you do your part. I'm all excited now, and you know I hate being disappointed." Rhaegson unceremoniously dropped the phone onto the cradle.

"She was leading us to an empty spot in the woods where there was nothing located. Back where I come from, that's what we call a trap. She had clearly been proven to be one of Agent Lupis's stooges." Tony shook his head here. "Trusting her just wasn't an option."

He noted Anne requested they make a stop at Holmia, that rather bustling and upscale commercial district which also boasted the open-air market. She needed her fix. Err... right. "Uh... I guess so, provided we don't stop too long." Tony stated. He radioed back to Axel now. "Well yeah... I think Marita is working on getting us a map of that place. It shouldn't be impossible, given a digital copy has to exist somewhere I would imagine, and I highly doubt they've taken all the precautions to protect their place that my dad has, nor would they have the know-how or financial capability to do so." he cracked, smiling to himself. "Sure it'll be like walking into a military base... but a base we've got foreknowledge about ahead of time. Hey... you think I should try calling them?" he asked now. "I used to know them, after all... could be a cover we could use."

He took the exit for Holmia, driving down the off-ramp and pulling onto a wide street with brightly lit buildings on either side. He roughly knew the way to the open-air market, and took a right onto another thoroughfare, heading in the direction of the bazaar. He located an extra wide parking spot on the street about a block away from the market, and eased the car to a stop. Fortunately, thanks to the trailer having its own brakes, the ride would be smooth for them in the back as well. Killing the headlights, the ferret turned to Anne, now. "OK... just hurry back. I know this is a relatively safer part of town, but I think we still have to keep moving, all the same." he stated.

He rested his head against his paw (his elbow in turn resting on the Pierce-Arrow's driver's side window), and radioed back to Axel. "We're stopping at Holmia for a bit... Anne needs... her 'fix.'" he informed them. "We'll be rolling again shortly."

Axel's voice crackled over Tony's radio. "What? What do you mean..." The was a pause. "Oh. Is now a good time? Can't she, like, wait or something?"

In the trailer, Axel was looking around nervously at the blinded windows. He leaned closer to the speaker. "Well... fine, but maybe make sure she hurries it up? It's just, you know... we're not exactly inconspicuous here, and we don't want anyone trying to get a look in." Anxiously, he tightened the blinds of the window next to him and sat back down at the table. The light sound of Soren's snoring drifted across from the sofa on the other side of the trailer.

"Looks like we'll be waiting here for a second while Anne, ah... looks for something," he told Lily. His eyes grew concerned. "How are you feeling? Any... any better?"

Lily smiled softly and put her hand on his shoulder. It was really remarkable that she'd found someone who could possibly care about her despite her condition.

But she had something she had to do. Hello? she thought tentatively, directing the thought at the conscience within. Are you okay?...Can you respond?

It stirred. Curiously poked back. It didn't seem that dangerous. Hi.... Lily continued. Can you talk...err...think back to me? Who are you?

It was very sudden. In a millisecond Lily felt the conscience strike out, leaping out of dormancy and making a play for control of her body. The arm on Axel's cheek spasmed as a foreign body attempted to strike out at the rat invading its personal space.

Lily gasped and refocused with panicked energy. Clenching her fist, she locked her joints and gritted her teeth, forcing the parasite back into dormancy. In less than a second it was over. But she remained spooked for several minutes.

"You just don't understand her~" Nairda shook his head sadly. "I wish I could understand her, but the female mind is a feisty and burlesque thing...But she knows more about what's going on than anyone else here. And how do you know there was nothing out there? We cannot comprehend the spirit realm. This curse on Lily is clearly something above the likes of man..."

He gritted his teeth when he saw Homia. "I have many enemies in Holmia. A life like mine tends to attract undesired attention...I will assist you in your reconnaissance, for your own protection, madam~" he offered charmingly. "I confess to being something of an aficionado for the cloudy analgesics myself. If you're ever interested, we could indulge together..."

Lupis was not one to waste time. Upon the phone call ending, he immediately set the room's security system to a state of high alert and retired to a Spartan cot with a single simple cloth blanket. Using a rigid form of mental training, he could immediately lapse into a dreamless deep semi-consciousness that refreshes the mind at a rate double that of regular sleep.

Anne scowled. "I don't know you very well. I personally prefer nootropics and the classic marijuana."

She got out of the car and drank in the heady scent of Holmia Square. Surprisingly upscale bars, stores and resturants lined the area.

The mare immediately made a beeline for the florist named Corso Flowers.

"Hola, senorita!" the shopkeeper called as Anne entered. His voice carried a distinct of Canary Islands accent. The shopkeeper in question was a huge and muscular Presa Canario wearing an apron with several pruning shears and other florist's tools in the pockets.

"Hola!" Anne replied. Her lips peeled back in the distinct Flehmen response of Equines when the faint scent of marijuana hit her. She chewed her lip as she pondered what to buy.

The big canine chuckled. "No rush." He got to work preparing a floral arrangement that someone had called in for a funeral.

"Mr. Garc�because Mart�because nez," Anne said. "I'd like theó"

"Certainly, Ms. Phoe."

Anne shuddered. "Only cops call me that."

The Presa Canario laughed. "Then don't call 'Mr.'. I'm not old enough for that."

Anne facepalmed. "All right, Joaqu�because n. You got two 'Get Better' wreaths?"

Joaqu�because n reached under the counter and flipped a sequence of switches. Two plastic bottles of 'plant food' emerged from the small dumbwaiter under the counter. He passed them over to the mare who handed him a credit chit (the one she had gotten a while back by hocking some stolen goods).

She placed the drugs into her pocket and exited. "Buenas dias!"

Joaqu�because n smiled and returned the goodbye. He sniffed the air and sighed. He needed to clean out the water pool for his hydroponic flowers.

Anne returned to the car with her bag of drugs. She smiled as she found that Joaqu�because n threw in a complementary pack of rolling papers, a lighter and two tablets of moziafil (illegally diverted from a factory and thus the government hadn't had a chance to levy its 25% drug tax yet). Enough marijauna to last her for a few weeks, all for 900 creds.

"Anyone mind if I roll a joint and light up?" she asked as she grabbed one of the 'plant food' bottles.

(OOC - A Presa Canario is a large dog from the Canary Islands.)

"It's all right... we won't be too long... plus, this district is fairly safe." Tony replied to Axel's concerns. "You just relax back there... this car does NOT stick out... trust me." he chuckled, looking around at all the contemporary limos and hot rods hovering and cruising down the street around them. "My dad sometimes shops down here in fact."

Sure enough, it wasn't long before Anne returned, and Tony threw the car back into gear again. Too bad they didn't have time to shop... Tony actually liked Holmia. "All right! Let's get moving!" he said, cruising up to the traffic light and popping a U-turn to get back onto the highway. "Ahhhh no! Sorry!" Tony quickly replied to Anne. "My dad would kill me if he smelled smoke in here! He's got that whole you know... anti-drug thing going. Best wait till we stop." he suggested, taking the left down the main street that led back onto the highway.

"Yeah well... I think we understood her just fine!" Tony mumbled back, accelerating once he reached the on-ramp and merging back into traffic. He brought the Pierce-Arrow up to speed again, and shook his head. "Anyway... we're heading east so... is it off this highway, or do I take another one?" he inquired.

He buzzed Axel again. "So Axel... you want me to ring Marcus? I think I have his number. Maybe I could I dunno... use that to try and get you guys inside?" he asked.

Axel flinched slightly as Lily's fist clenched and a panicked expression flashed across her face. The movement scraped her claws across his cheek, though not deeply enough to draw blood. After a moment of shocked silence, he spoke up nervously, seeing how worried she looked. "Hey, it's... it's okay. We'll... just be careful about touching each other. I'll..." He was about to say more, but the sound of the car door slamming shut, as loud as a gunshot in the silence of the trailer, interrupted him. Axel felt the weight of the trailer shift as Tony pulled away. Slowly and cautiously, he reached over and touched her hand lightly. "We're going to get you back to normal. Don't worry."

Soon after, the sound of Tony's voice addressing him turned his head. "Marcus? Who's that? One of your Purifier... friends?" He considered. "Uh... I guess that could work. It's not like we can just go in guns blazing... And we don't want to risk Lupis running if he find out a group broke in looking for him. What if... you said we were your prisoners? Would that get us in?" Axel asked, not knowing how well organised the base would be.

Aaron nodded. "Don't know him but whatever helps."

He then pulled the car off into the visitor parking lot. Pelvanida had an exhibit hall that was open to the public and consequently, it was a bit of a tourist attraction.

At the same time, Mr. Altyn's 2008 Tesla Roadster cut through the visitor parking lot on its way into the employee parking lot.

Fifteen minutes later, the chill draft was what finally convinced Emilena to stop spinning over and over everything in her head to understand what had just happened. Slowly and painfully, she got onto her hands and knees, and finally staggered to a standing position, leaning against a nearby tree.

She coughed up blood. She'd never sustained nearly this many injuries at one time; no doctor would ever advise walking in her current state. But nobody would be arriving to assist her this time; she just knew it. She'd played all her cards, and that wound her up in the mafia's snuff room.

Now that she'd achieved standing up, she wanted only to lie back down. Her skull was pounding. Blood trickled down her arms, neck, and legs. She wasn't looking forward to the next time she had to hit the head. But the pain only served to remind her that she was miraculously alive.

My life wasn't saved so that I would die out here in the forest, she thought with determination. She tried to walk, and had to wrap her arms around the tree to stop from face-planting back into the fallen leaves. Her head swam with vertigo and she quickly vomited whatever remained in her stomach.

She compromised with gravity and assumed a kneeling position. She suspected she'd be crying if she wasn't lethally dehydrated. Everything was unbearable.

Where would I even go? she wondered to herself. She had nowhere. She can't even return to her apartment, Broadstreet will be watching it 24/7. She could find somewhere abandoned, maybe hide out alone in the slums...

...I can't be alone right now, she finally confessed to herself. In her state and her confusion, for once she needed someone to talk to, to help her recover and plan her next move. And with a sinking heart, she realized there was one place left for her; one couple she'd never turned to. A single household with an obligation to her that they'd never fulfilled, that she'd never visited despite learning their address within seconds of being granted access to the police databases.

The possibility of a destination was enough to get her back on her feet. One step at a time, she began the long hike to the house of Emile and Lena Kibagami.

Lily smiled reassuringly at him. She was doing a lot of that recently, but she hadn't really any other way of communicating; she hated the sounds her mouth made when she tried to talk.

She'd grown incredibly introspective recently. Having another conscience attempting to take her over at the slightest provocation will do that. If she'd been more focused on the outside world, she might have paid enough attention to realize that the others were driving towards an assault on the Purifier camp, probably the last place Lily would want to go. But for the time being she was content to trust their judgment and follow them wherever they deemed the proper next step on the road to recovery.

Marcus inclined his head towards the Tesla as it crossed the parking lot in front of them. "There. That's him. Follow, but don't draw attention." The public would make things harder... but as long as the cyberneticist didn't try anything, getting through to the private section wouldn't be impossible.

A few minutes later, as the man was locking his car door, a shadow fell over him. "Altyn," Marcus rumbled as he turned around. "It's been a while. How's the hand?" He stepped closer, forcing Altyn to press himself against his car. A quick glance around told him nobody was looking. Turning his gaze back to the human, he bared his teeth. "Me and my associate here need a few things... and you're our way in." He loomed over Altyn. "Don't get any ideas, or it won't just be your fingers we cut off."

Tony nodded at the rear view mirror as Marita explained a few things. "Oh wait! We aren't going to Pelvanida anymore, remember?" he asked. "Just the Purifier compound. No need to head to Pelvanida." he explained.

"Lunch? Well..." he glanced at the dashboard clock. "It's currently five in the morning... we just had breakfast." he joked, chortling. "I can get you something if you're really hungry though." he stated, the sun having not risen over the horizon yet. "Oh right... you might not have eaten your breakfast..." he trailed off, remembering Patrick Anderson.

"Anyway..." he responded to Axel now. "Yeah... I'm gonna try that. It's worth a shot, right?"

Tony began fiddling with a bluetooth console on the dash that his father had installed, and which was definitely not vintage. Fortunately, it was only attached to the dash, and not grafted in. Pushing a few buttons, he opened up a digital HUD that had his contacts, and began paging through them, swiping his claw upwards until Marcus Hayton appeared. Taking a deep breath, the ferret pushed the name, and then inserted a headset into his ear as he let the phone ring.

After god-knows-how-long of walking, Emilena managed to relate her location in the forest to a known landmark. The abandoned robotics factory loomed through the trees, the place where she was originally kidnapped after the disastrous attempt to get ahold of a Purifier. Looking back, that was probably where things started going downhill for her.

Every step was a bit harder than the last, but she took a detour to the site because she'd lost something very important there.

It took over an hour but finally she found it in the underground passages; her heirloom katana, gleaming in the moonlight from the katana-shaped hole above it. Feeling it buzz to life in her hand stirred something in her heart; finally, there was something in her life she could count on.

She continued her journey.

At Tony's words, Nairda cockily wiped his long strands of thin hair out of his eyes and grinned at the notion of finally getting his long-overdo vengeance on Marcus. "That contemptuous charlatan will finally breathe his last on this day...I look forward to the opportunity to watch the life drain from his eyes while I stand triumphantly over his still corpse...this'll be a piece of cake~" he chuckled...

A beeping in his jacket pocket interrupted Marcus. Seizing Altyn's shirt, he shoved him in away from his car in the direction of Pelvanida's staff entrance. "Get us into the storage area. We need 18-G12VX amplifiers. If someone tries to stop us, I'm sure you can think of something. Move." He turned and gestured to Aaron. "Stay close to him."

Lagging behind, Marcus pulled his cell phone out of his pocket and flicked it open. His brow furrowed at the name blinking on the screen. He's still alive? He hit the answer button. "Tony? Where the hell are you? Are you hurt?"

Axel drummed his fingers on the tabletop, trying not to think about the knife edge the group was balancing on. Though he was trying to keep optimistic, the fact that they were dealing with some very dangerous people kept twisting his stomach in knots. If we screw this up... Axel shook his head to try to rid himself of the doubts. We won't. We can't.

After a while, he looked across at Soren, who was still snoring, and smiled at Lily. "Sounds like a broken lawnmower." Then he snapped his fingers and jumped up. "Hey, I just had an idea! I know talking isn't that... easy for you right now, but..." He started opening the cupboards and drawers, rifling through their contents. Eventually, he whooped triumphantly and pulled a slightly worn notepad out from one of the drawers, with a pencil hooked through the wire binding. Turning back to Lily, he passed them across and sat back down. "Here. Should make your life a little easier. Not that there's anything wrong with your miming..." he grinned.

Tony actually felt his heart stop for a moment when Marcus answered. He was there! OK... focus... calm... do this. He steeled himself, gripping the wheel of the Pierce-Arrow tightly for strength. He gritted his teeth, then responded.

"Hey! Marcus! How ya been?" Tony asked, grinning. Smiles can be heard. "No, I'm fine! In fact, I got some presents for ya! Where are you now? Back at base? I can meet you there if you aren't there already." the ferret offered, letting the optimism drip from his voice. "It's just great to hear you, ya know? Thought I was a goner several times, but I pulled through."

"No, I'm not at base," Marcus muttered, frowning. "We'll be back soon. What are you talking about?" He picked up his pace, catching up to Aaron and Altyn and looking around to make sure they still hadn't attracted any attention. Still in the clear.

He turned his attention back to the call. "What do you have? The last time I saw you, we were under heavy fire..."

Title: Into the Black

Mr. Altyn gulped as the two burly canines approached him.

Aaron glared at Altyn. "Move," he growled.

"Give me a moment!" he snapped as he got his keys and work materials.

Aaron raised a fist to punch him, but he thought better of it. He looked around and noticed that the parking lot was pretty quiet.

The Human locked his car and looked at the two. "Okay, I can pass you off as guests or even new employees. But don't make a scene or else your asses will be on the line."

Kojuuro sighed as he drank another bottle of sake at Club Tyrell. His girlfriend from a one-night stand from a while back, was on thr barstool next to the Wolf and busy flirting with him. The images from his previous military service had surfaced with a vengeance and he turned back into his preferred drug – hard liquor.

"Man," the Gypsy Vanner stallion said as he wiped down the bartop. "It's five in the fucking morning and this is like your third bottle. Isn't that enough?"

"Gimme my fucking liquor!" Kojuuro snapped. His ears splayed back as the Pomeranian bitch licked him on the cheek. He turned to the woman. "Sorry about that."

"'S cool. 'S cool," he said. "Here you go." The stallion passed another bottle of sake to him."

A hulking Brown Bear wearing a lab coat walked in. On his lab coat, a badge reading "Bytis Industrial Electronics – Piotr Kozlov" could be seen.

"Ah, Kozlov, how was work?" the bartender asked.

Kozlov sighed. "I had argument with coworker. I need drink! Get me cosmopolitan!" he ordered in his thick Russian accent.

The bartender mixed the cocktail and passed it to the Brown Bear. He sighed as he looked around the bar. Mostly empty and frankly put, kinda gross with thin layer of grease covering the floors and furnishings. A TV playing footage of some low grav hockey game blared from the corner.

As he looked around the bar, he accidentally laid eyes on the Pomeranian bitch. Kojuuro immediately turned to the Brown Bear. "Hey asshole! Why are you looking at my girl!?"

Kozlov's eye twitched. "I was not looking at woman. I was looking at TV. She was in way."

Kojuuro got up from his seat and went over to Kozlov and shoved him. Thanks to his enhanced strength, the shove knocked the hulking Bear over.

"Sweetie, Ió" the Pomeranian began.

"Don't worry, I got this." Kojuuro assumed a fighting stance.

"You make big mistake!" Kozlov boomed.

"Why? You're just a nerd! I on the other hand, amó"

Kojuuro was unable to finish his sentence as Kozlov belted him across the face with the barstool he had ripped out of the floor. Kojuuro grunted as he slammed into a wall containing some of the bar's decorations. "So that's how it's gonna be..." He cracked his neck and howled to psyche himself up.

"Yeah, we were..." Tony agreed, smiling to himself. "I've got them, Marcus. The ones giving us so much trouble at the factory... the ones putting us under heavy fire. I don't have... all of them." he said now. "But I've got a few. Unfortunately I don't have the one you were after. But... maybe her friends will suffice? If she hears we have them... you never know what could happen." Tony said suggestively.

Lily smiled and wrote Thanks. She paused and kept writing.

Thanks for doing all this for me. Standing up for me even now.

She was never a very eloquent writer. She couldn't think of what else to say at the moment. Pushing the macaroni bowl away, she hugged Axel and tried to let him understand just how much his support meant to her.

Nearby, Nairda saw them and suddenly put the pieces together. "Huh. I always thought Kojurro would be a better fit for her..." he muttered to himself, watching them with barely-hidden voyeuristic pleasure.

Axel suddenly felt a slight chill creep up his spine, as though they were being spied on... but that was probably just the nerves of the situation.

He hugged her back and kissed her lightly on the cheek, feeling the roughness of her skin under his lips. When they broke apart, he gave her a dumb grin. "Well, I guess I did promise..." Axel held her hand. "Someday, we'll be looking back on this and... well, probably having nightmares. But it'll be over, and we'll be looking back on it. That's what matters."

"You have them?" Something in the ferret's upbeat tone set him ill at ease... but the kid had always been cocky. And he is one of us. Maybe he's actually done something to back up his words this time... "Alright. We'll talk about how you managed it later." Especially if Naidra was one of his prisoners... "Bring them. We'll be back soon."

He snapped the cell phone shut and moved to join Aaron and Altyn. "Move it," Marcus grunted, shoving the human forwards. "I want this done quickly." He had a bad feeling... but he couldn't think of a reason why Tony would betray them. He knew what happened to traitors.

"Will do! I'll see ya soon!" Tony responded right before Marcus hung up. Pulling the ear bud out of his ear, he grinned. "Well, that went well!" He turned the Pierce-Arrow onto another highway that led to the Purifiers' base. He remembered it from here, and no longer needed directions.

Pushing the button to the trailer's comm, he began speaking to Axel. "Hey Axel! I think they bought it! We're about 20 minutes away I'd say, in current traffic. So I figure we'll leave the car and trailer a ways away from the base, and I bring you in on foot. Maybe a block or two away? This way, we can keep Lily out of it, and make it seem like you're more my prisoners than my guests. Now they've got some security measures in place, but I think we could still manage to smuggle some guns in all the same, or better yet, take what they have at the base. Maybe Marita could even take a few of their defense systems offline too in a timed fashion before we get there?" he suggested.

"At any rate, I might have to place binders on your wrists to make this look legit." he warned him. "When we get there, I'm gonna try and find out where Lupis is, and we'll make our way to him after I either conveniently forget to lead you to your cells, or we simply overpower the guys taking you to your cells. Sound good?" he asked.

Nairda stirred at Tony's words. "We're leaving Lily behind?" He looked at Axel, wide-eyed. "Are you to leave the sight of your true love?"

He grabbed Axel's arm with pleading vigor. "I sure wish I'd never let my true love alone...for my folly i have been punished by never seeing her again..."

His eyes bored into Axel's soul. "Do not make the same mistake that keeps me up in slumberless nights..."

Many miles away, a young fox was tending to his bioluminescent algae fields outside a respectable, if remote, adobe farmhouse. His particular crop was used as a garnish for specialty dinners, and one of the few nocturnal bloomers. As such it required nighttime tending.

Because of the night, and the general lack of visitors to such a distant place from the city, he didn't see the figure staggering towards him until it was less than fifteen feet away.

In a split second he'd pulled a Kriss Vector SMG off his back and had it readied at the intruder. "Don't move!" he yelled, voice commanding authority. "Identify yourself!"

The figure collapsed. Inching forward cautiously, the fox kept his safety cocked and his muscles tense, ready for an ambush. You could never be too careful...

The light flicked on in his farmhouse and a young female dashed outside, throwing on a bathrobe. She was the same age as him, and looked strikingly similar in appearance. "Emile?" she gasped, worry tinging her voice. "Who is--?"

"Stay back!" he warned her. "I'm not sure!"

Clicking a thin light on the barrel of his SMG, Emile saw an incredibly battered and bleeding woman passed out among his crops. "I...uh...don't recognize her," he reported to Lena, who had ignored his command and was rushing forward to see. "No clothing or possessions...might be a victim of sexual assault, if I had to--"

Lena suddenly gasped; her vision had always been better than Emile's. "Honey..." she knelt down and picked up the katana. "This is..."

Emile's eyes went wide. "Let's get her inside. Quickly."

Axel recoiled slightly as Nairda grasped his arm, gasping in surprise. Where did he come from?! Looking across at Lily, he felt his mouth go dry. He desperately wanted to go with the others... as much as the thought scared him, Axel felt he had to help them - if he didn't, he wouldn't be able to shake the feeling that he was abandoning them. But, in his flowery, confusing way of talking, Nairda had hit the nail on the head. Leaving Lily alone, unprotected, for however long it took them to do what they had to do...

He grimaced and turned back to the speaker. "Yeah, Tony, that... that sounds like a good plan. Look, I was thinking..." He pressed closer and lowered his voice. "I... I don't know if leaving Lily alone is such a good idea. I mean, you saw what she did back when Emilena.... well, you know. If she got scared again, this trailer couldn't hold her, and if she got out into the open..." Axel swallowed. "But if I was here to keep her calm... I'm sorry Tony, I don't want you or the others to think I'm backing out, but..." he trailed off, fearing what the ferret's reply would be.

"Okay, so what do I do?" Anne asked as she leaned back. "By the way, if it helps, I can shoot a gun. I'm not a super shooter or anything but I know enough to defend myself."

(Pelvanida)

Mr. Altyn grunted as Marcus shoved him. "Easy!"

He then led the two to the main entrance. By now, other employees had arrived and were busy scanning their work IDs to be let in. "Ah, Mr. Altyn," the Augment Iguana said as he saw the Human.

Mr. Altyn gulped as he looked at the two thugs next to him. "Um, these two are visitors and I am taking them to my office for an introduction to cybernetics manufacturing for uh, a TV program."

The Iguana narrowed his cybernetic eyes. "Mr. Altyn, I need to have a word with you."

The two Canines didn't know it but the Iguana had implants that allowed him to discern subtle physiological changes that signaled fear.

Mr. Alytn nodded and followed the guard.

Tony listened to Axel's voice, and could detect the rat's feelings even without being able to see him. "Hey... that's fine." he said now. "We'll adapt. Don't worry. Just... be careful, OK? I'll try to park far enough away from the base that you won't be in danger but... if Lily really did do something to Emelina... yeah, it's probably a good idea to keep her calmed." the ferret admitted.

He accelerated a little bit once the lane in front of him opened up somewhat. The Pierce-Arrow was certainly providing one of the smoothest rides he could remember. "Anne... shooting is fine." Tony said, looking over at her. "OK... I think we should go with this. When I stop, I'll bring a certain number of you over to the base. I'm not sure if Soren should go or remain behind in his exoskeleton as backup for when our assault starts. We can decide that when we get there. We get shown in, and if we time things right, we can hit them when they're at their weakest in terms of having the most manpower spread out. I memorized the movements of some of their guards, and know that in the cell block, they have a gun gallery up above the cells that's caged. A guard usually patrols that but has to move between the two cell blocks. He typically spends about fifteen minutes in each one. Once we get to the cell blocks, there will be another guard on duty at the entrance. He'll frisk me, even though I'm one of them. That'll be our cue to strike. I'm gonna time it so that we show up when the second guard in the gallery is in the other cell block and can't see what's going on. As I'm being frisked, one of you will attack him from behind. and we'll overpower him."

Tony kept the speaker to the trailer on so the others could hear his plan as well. "Then, either myself or someone else will climb up to the gallery... I'm pretty thin, so maybe I should do this. Before we get there, we should fashion together a makeshift bar spreader, which is easy enough to cobble together with just a nut and some pipes. We'll use this to spread the bars, and squeeze through. Since I'm thin... I should probably be the one to do this." he reiterated. "I'll then wait for the other guard to start coming back, kick the door back on him as he opens it, and subdue him. Once subdued, I have access to all the guns kept up in the gallery and can start handing them out. With weapons secured, we'll be good to go. We have Marita disable the defense systems, make straight for Lupis, and try and capture him as quickly as possible. How's that sound?" he concluded, looking at everyone present in the car.

Marcus' expression hardened, his eyes narrowing. Dammit, he could ruin everything... Gesturing for Aaron to follow, he stalked after Altyn and the Iguana as they walked away, his long strides rapidly catching up to them.

"Is there a problem?" he rasped as he drew even. "I was told we'd be let straight through - we're already running behind schedule." The employees who'd arrived were a problem... but if the Iguana led them to a slightly more secluded area...

"Yes there is." The Iguana pointed to Mr. Altyn. "I detected that he is carrying a recording device. I will need to strip search him in private."

Mr. Altyn's mouth gaped. "What!? This is an outrage!"

"Look, I know those two coerced you into doing something. Roll with it!" he whispered, as he pulled Altyn away from the two Canines. He prayed that the TVs in the lobby and footsteps masked the whispering.

(En route to Purifier Complex)

Soren swore as he rolled off the couch. "We there already?"

(Club Tyrell)

By now, the rather dirty bar had attracted a fair number of local toughs – including members of a local hoverbike gang – who were watching and placing bets on the two brawlers.

"Told ya. The Augment always wins!" a female Golden Eagle said as she watched Kojuuro quite literally punt Kozlov through the men's bathroom door.

A Ferret biker twisted out of the way as a sink went flying through the air seconds later and impacted against a booth. Kozlov, labcoat torn and covered in debris, staggered out of the bathroom. He pointed at Kojuuro with a large pipe. "You dead meat!" he roared.

"Really? Who got thrown through the bathroom door?" Kojuuro smirked.

Kozlov roared and charged at the Wolf with his pipe. "Amateur." Kojuuro adroitly dodged the swing and knocked the massive Brown Bear off his feet with a swift leg sweep.

"Now where were we? Ah yes." Kojuuro put one foot on Kozlov's chest. He reached for the katana on his belt. Unfortunately for him, Kozlov threw a vicious uppercut to the Wolf's groin. Even though his claws tore through the outer layer of his pants, they didn't pierce the tough metallic bullet-resistant layer. Nevertheless, the impact was immensely painful. Kojuuro gasped slightly and flinched. That was enough for Kozlov to throw him into the soda fountain.

Kojuuro looked around for something to use as a weapon. Finding a vodka bottle, he threw it at Kozlov when he charged with his pipe in hand. The bottle broke upon impact, stunning the Bear as the liquor ran down his eyes.

Kojurro smirked and drew his katana. The crowd cheered, knowing the stakes had been raised.

Through stinging eyes, Kozlov could see the Wolf with blade raised. His heart pounded as he realized Kojuuro was intent on killing him. He silently cursed for leaving his pistol at home. He groped around and found a wooden bench.

With a grunt, he ripped the bench free and hurled it at Kojuuro, who adroitly dodged it. Kozlov rubbed his eyes in an attempt to clear his vision and saw that the Wolf was getting closer.

Lacking no other recourse, he charged towards Kojuuro at a speed that belied his massive bulk. Kojuuro swung his sword, leaving a deep cut on his left arm . Before he could swing again, he was slammed into the bar top so hard that he cracked it. And his katana went flying.

Groaning in pain, Kojuuro smiled. "That all you got?"

"I give lot more." Kozlov raised both arms overhead and slammed them down on the countertop. Kojuuro rolled out of the way just as the Bear's massive fists reduced the three inch concrete surface to a pile of rubble.

(i;ll take him)
Kojurro panted as he got to his feet, his privates still stinging from being puncded here. he gazed around the room, looking for his katana, which had gone flying when he had been thrown into the tabletop, his eyes scaned the area quickly, he tried t keep away from Kozlov, who looked like he was perfectly willing to kill him. surviving the fight would require him finding his kantana before Kozlow could smash a solid bench over his head. the other bar customers were taking bets on who would win the fight and calling out " i got 25 bucks on the bear! I got 50 on the Augment! Kick his ass Kozlov!' and the like. 'This is bloodsort to these folks' Kojurro thought as he tried kkeeing away from Kozlov.

Kozlov ripped out the minifridge that held beer and threw it at Kojuuro. He then ripped out a metal drain pipe to use as a club.

He was about to run after Kojuuro when one of the toughs broke a beer bottle over his head.

That proved to be a huge mistake as Kozlov backhanded the man, fracturing every bone in his face and snapping his neck with the sheer power of the impact.

As the Iguana pulled Altyn away, Marcus bared his teeth in frustration. This was already taking longer than it should... It didn't take a genius to work out the guard was planning something. His eyes flicking around the room, Marcus noticed a door set into the side of the lobby - a public toilet. As he looked at it, Marcus heard a flush. There was a click as the door was unlocked and an employee stepped out, wiping his hands on his trousers before wandering away. The path the Iguana was taking would lead them right past it...

Secluded enough. Marcus subtly moved a hand along his side, underneath his coat. "Is there anything I can do? This must be a misunderstanding," the doberman said, walking close behind the guard.

Axel turned his head at the thump as Soren landed on the floor. He grinned. "No, not yet. Tony figured we were about 20 minutes away." He glanced at the Exoskeleton that was still plugged into the wall. "That charged yet? Something tells me you'll probably need it..."

Tony exited the highway in a less protected part of town and began driving towards the large Purifier base, which was easily visible from the main road. He pulled onto a side street and parked the Pierce-Arrow in a public spot next to the sidewalk. Bright smaller buildings flanked them, housing seedy vendors and shops. "OK... we're gonna hoof it from here on out!" Tony said, shutting the big V-12 off and taking the keys.

Stepping out onto the street, the ferret walked to the trailer and opened the door, slapping the side twice. "Hey guys! We're here!" he explained his plan to Soren now, and ran him through all the details. "So yeah... you want to stay here with your exoskeleton, or act like one of my prisoners?" he asked. "I think I'll take Nairda, Anne, and the trio, and Axel's staying here with Lily, just in case. Oh yeah! Also..." he stepped into the trailer now, and rummaged through one of the cabinets, pulling out a pipe, a nut, a wrench, and a small steel grooved rod. Shoving the rod into the pipe, he spun the nut around until it was roughly at the junction where the two met. "And voila! Ghetto bar spreader!" he exclaimed, smiling as he held it up. "I just twist the nut with this wrench, and it'll spread the two ends of this doohickey out, exerting enough pressure to bend the bars of the gun gallery." he explained.

He also retrieved some wrist binders, as part of the upcoming charade.

Emilena was in the waiting room of the don's mansion. A flash of light, and she felt a bullet plow through her brain.

Then she was falling, abruptly in a darkened space. Her fall ended with a splash, where the liquid ate the flesh off of her bones slowly.

Before she could even scream, she was falling again, her broken limbs and bullet-ridden body smashing into a splintery staircase waiting for her in the dark.

A second later, light stung her retinas as an electric field enveloped her. Stumbling away and attempting to clear her head, she had only a moment before a dart embedded in her forehead and she felt herself vaporizing from the inside out...

With a jolt, Emilena sat up, inhaling sharply. As her haggard breathing returned to normal, she realized it had just been a particularly vivid nightmare. Exhaling, exhausted, she collapsed back onto her pillow.

She was halfway back asleep when she realized she had no idea where she was. Sitting up, she took note of her surroundings. She was in a simple bedroom, a warm patchwork quilt and hand-sewn cotton sheet enveloped her in a plush four-poster bed. Pictures of a happy vulpine couple dotted the warm walls, and a plate of cookies and milk sat on a self-heating tray on the bedside table.

In seconds she'd scarfed down the whole batch. Shaking to clear her head, she became aware of voices in the next room. Climbing out of bed (and only then noticing she was clad in deer-print purple pajamas) she crept to the doorway and spotted Emile and Lena Kibagami discussing in hushed tones next to a crackling fireplace.

"Do you think she knows who we are?" Lena whispered. "Should we tell her?"

"What choice do we have? You want to kick her out?" Emile responded. "She needs medical attention and rest, and she won't find that anywhere--"

Suddenly Lena spotted Emilena as she walked into the room. Both grew silent as their daughter regarded them for the first time.

Emilena spotted her sword on a drawing table. Picking it up, she held it in a defensive position.

"You don't know how long I've wanted to kill both of you..."

Nairda gripped his fist, overcome with temporary passion. "It will be hard to leash my untamed fervor for the Purifiers' coming destruction...but I will maintain my poker face...for the good of the coming revolution~" he chuckled softly to himself...

Nairda kissed Lily's hand like a true gentleman. "Fear not, dear lady~" he comforted her. "We shall go and slay this proverbial beast, and you needn't worry a hair on your..." He ran his hand down her hair and a sizable chunk of it fell out at his touch. "...errr, a scale on your...forehead..."

He took this opportunity to leap out of the car. "I shall be back posthumously!" he called.

Lily blinked, puzzled. Did he mean posthaste? she wrote for Axel.

Emilena shuddered weakly, looking left to right at her parents. Her father, a scrawny yet muscled man, didn't seem nervous in the slightest. His farmer's tan highlighted the grime he hadn't taken the time to wash off yet. Her mother, a lithe vulpine, looked alarmed but didn't even bother to wrap her open bathrobe around her nude form. Even while talking about Emilena, they'd appeared to have been engaged in less-than-innocent behavior.

Turning away in disgust, Emilena tossed the sword aside. "Goddammit," she seethed. "You two literally aren't worth killing! You aren't worth anything! You are two most pathetic beings I've ever met!"

She whirled around. "I don't know why I even bothered to come here! You couldn't take care of a child, you couldn't keep your genitals off each other long enough to pay for a good orphanage with your military pensions, and you couldn't find anyone but your biological sibling who'd even sleep with you!"

Her parents said nothing as she ranted and raved and used every insult she could think of to criticize them. Somehow, the topic slowly shifted to all the crap she'd been through in the last few days, and she told them everything. By the end, she was so weak she was on her knees, and finally when she couldn't think of anything else to say, her mother got up to help her to bed.

"Stay away from me!" Emilena snapped. "At least cinch your bathrobe first!"

Doing neither, her mother unflinchingly picked her up and carried her back to bed. She was stronger than she looked.

After that both of her parents brought her medicine and re-bandaged a few wounds that were opening up from her stomping around.

"Look..." Emile took a deep breath. "We're sorry. You're right. We weren't very good parents."

"As you've guessed, you were an accident," Lena couldn't meet her eye. "We were in mourning from a good friend's death, we weren't thinking clearly--"

"--But we actually did get you the best orphanage we could afford," Emile added. "And we also paid all of your fees from the Age Acceleration program and the Police Academy. We knew we weren't the kind of people who could care for a kid, so we tried to set things up so you'd be with those who could..."

"...But we recognize that wasn't what you'd expect of us, as parents," Lena chimed in.

"Could you stop finishing each other's sentences please?" Emilena cut in. "That's really unsettling."

Kozlov grunted and gasped as he saw the knife bury itself into his stomach. Luckily, his ample gut caused by his penchant for rich, fatty seal steaks and beer as well as vigorous exercise kept the knife from reaching any vitals.

The crowd roared in approval as Kojuuro landed the hit.

Kozlov roared, causing everyone to back away. "Wolf!" he roared. "When I through with you! They need plastic bag to bury you!"

He ripped out one of the heavy steel tables, held it in front of him and charged at Kojuuro, intending to crush him into the wall."

(Purifier Compound)

Heavy footsteps signaled Soren's arrival. He stepped out of the trailer with his helmet tucked under his metal clad arm. He smiled as he flexed his exoskeleton's powerful fingers. His HMD with its blue tracking laser shone over Axel and Tony. His shotgun and the rifle were attached to his back via magnetic plates. "Let's go rip up some Purifiers!"

Anne came out of the Pierce-Arrow with an automatic rifle in hand. "So now what?"

(Pelvanida)

The Iguana turned to Marcus. "This is a company affair," he said. "Now I suggest you let me do my job or I'll revoke your access to film the documentary on company property."

He then ushered Mr. Altyn into a closed, soundproof room that was indeed used for strip searches.

"Okay, Altyn. What are you hiding with those two?" he demanded.

Altyn looked around and wiped some sweat from his brow. "Those two Canines, they accosted me in the parking lot. They wanted me to go get something for them."

The Iguana nodded. "Go on."

Marcus stopped outside the door Altyn and the Iguana had disappeared through. From the glimpse he'd caught before the door swung shut, it looked like some form of interrogation room. Good chance it'll be soundproofed... He looked up and down the corridor. It was clear.

He reached back and wrapped his fingers around the grip of his revolver, keeping it under his jacket in case there were any hidden cameras in the corridor. Turning to Aaron, Marcus jerked his head towards the door. "Open it. I'll follow and take him out. We're running out of time."

Axel looked at the note Lily scribbled out and snorted. "You know, I don't think even he knows what he's going on about... You might want to clean that hand, too."

"Hey... count on it." Tony said, bringing up his paw to lightly slap Axel's arm. "We'll come back in hopefully a half hour." the ferret stated, then proceeded to slap the binders on Nairda and Anne, followed by Marita, Marie, and Rose. He took Anne's gun, grinning nervously. "Uh might want to put a clamp on that. We're sneaking our way in for the moment. I'll provide the guns once we're inside, don't worry." he held the rifle in his paws now and got them moving. "Soren... if you're gonna wear that, hang back and wait for our attack to commence. Also, wear this." he said, holding out an ear bud for him now. "I'll call that piece once I'm ready to start. All right... let's go!" he said.

His paws shook as he walked around the corner and started heading for the compound. He drew out a cigarette and jammed it in his mouth, lighting it up as they approached the base's gates. Up ahead, he could see Purifiers already starting to call out that he was returning, and with some prisoners to boot. "Hey guys!" he called, waving as they drew up towards the front gate. "I'm back!"

"Where ya been?" calmly asked a Gila monster that Tony knew as Cavenaugh. He stared suspiciously at the group, regarding each one darkly.

"Ugh... around. But I got these guys... including... Nairda!" he shoved the fox forward now, grinning. "I bet Marcus will be pleased! Where is he, anyway?"

"On an errand. Ever since that government guy's shown up, we've all been... angrier." Cavenaugh replied. "But what exactly happened to you?"

"I'll give my report to Rhaegson in person." Tony deflected the question and raised a brow. "Government? The hell do they want?"

"Who knows? Sooner he's out of here, the better." the Gila monster shrugged.

"Yeah... I actually ran into one last night... crazy fool even gave me his business card." Tony joked. "He was attacking the factory too. Agent Lupis he said his name was." Tony stated casually.

"Lupis? Yeah that's him!" Cavenaugh exclaimed.

Tony pulled the cigarette out of his mouth and exhaled, blowing out a long puff of smoke as Cavenaugh turned around. "Fascinating. I'd like to talk to him actually... in private. Know where I can find him?" the ferret inquired.

"Yup... hold on... I gotta clear you through." Cavenaugh said, and moved to open communications with Rhaegson. "Hey... Rhaegson! Tony's back. Here with a bunch of prisoners... including Nairda. Want them brought to the cell block?" he asked.

As the Gila monster was distracted, Tony muttered to Anne in a low voice. "When we get to the cell block, I'm going to be frisked. I obviously have stuff on me that'll raise a red flag... you got arguably the heaviest hands of all of us. You think you can be the one to attack the guard from behind while he's frisking me?" he asked softly.

Nairda held his hands behind him, leashed in the cruel bounds of captivity. Tears bitterly stung his cheek as he glared, defeated, at his captors. "Like all good vigilantes, I am now to die nobly for my cause..." he spoke with resonance, eyes facing the heavens. "I only hope that my death serves as motivation to others...to continue fighting..."

He was so good for a minute he convinced even himself.

Emile broke out in a smile. "You've grown up to be such a strong young woman. We're so proud of you."

Emilena rolled her eyes.

"You did have a big influence on our lives," Lena admitted. "After Karl's death and your birth, we realized just how fragile life is. We retired from the mercenary work and lived as simple farmers on our retirement stipends."

"We were ecstatically happy," grinned Emile. "We may have had another 'accident'..."

Emilena looked incredulous. "You had a second child?!"

"Oh, he was feisty," Lena chuckled. "Much louder than you ever were. I used to have to blow him to get him to stop crying."

"He ended up being too much to handle, so we had to let him go too," Emile reminisced, not noticing the scandalized expression on Emilena's face from what her mother had just said. "But we'd learned from a couple of mistakes we'd made with you; he went right back into the military, trained by a Scorched Earth veteran we both knew."

Emilena put her head in her hands. "Are you incapable of taking care of your own problems?..." she murmured, depressed. "You are the worst people I've ever met..."

Rhaegson rubbed his eyes and leaned back in his chair, balancing it on two legs. "Tony... Tony... Who the hell's Tony again?" he muttered. After a second, he let his hand fall away. "That's the skinny ferret, right? The kid? I thought he was missing? How the hell did he manage to bring back prisoners? Especially Nairda, that fruity bastard..."

He sighed, his cigarette trembling out of the corner of his mouth. Killing them all straight away would be easier... but Nairda had earned a slower death, and if he was handing out torture, he didn't want to deny the others their turn. Still, something didn't sit right. "Alright, let them through. But make sure his prisoners are actually tied up. Do that where you are, out front, where everyone else can see." Rhaegson cleared his throat and rubbed a hand over his jaw. "Then get another one of your little friends and go with Tony to the cells. If Tony tries anything, blow his fuckin' brains out, then kill the others. You got it?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on February 23, 2014, 12:12:47 AM

"Got it." Cavenaugh nodded, and approached Tony now. Checking the bindings, he nodded once more. "Right... well I'm accompanying you down to the cells."

Of course you are... Tony thought to himself. Riiiight. "OK... that's fine." he said, taking another drag on his cigarette.

Cavenaugh motioned for another guard, and the two began leading the group towards the cell blocks. Tony waited until they were substantially advanced, and about halfway through the complex. Glancing at his watch, he smiled. Perfect. The guards making their rounds wouldn't be in this particular hallway for another 15 minutes.

Tony shifted himself so he was next to the one guard. Cavenaugh walked slightly ahead with the prisoners. Suddenly slamming his body against the guard, Tony shoved him against the wall and then jammed the butt of his rifle hard against the guard's face, knocking him to the floor. As Cavenaugh turned around, he met the business end of the rifle right in his jaw. "Change of plans, old friend." Tony said seriously, reaching down and collecting Cavenaugh's side arm.

"You son of a bitch! Tony! What the hell!" he shouted.

"Shut up!" Tony snapped back. "Keep your voice down, or I'm knocking your teeth out! Free the others!"

"I can't do that..." Cavenaugh said.

"Then you die and they go free anyway." Tony replied simply. "It's your call."

Regarding the ferret darkly, Cavenaugh turned around, and reluctantly began to undo the bindings around their wrists. "Leave him be." Tony ordered the others. "I need him to report in to Rhaegson that everything is OK. We knock him out, he's useless. OK..." he tossed Nairda Cavenaugh's sidearm. "Anne, bind that unconscious guard with the binders. I'm gonna take you all to the armory, we'll help ourselves, Marita disables the security, and we head right to Lupis. Rhaegson just bought himself a ticket to hell for interfering with my plan, as far as I'm concerned." Tony stated angrily. "If he's with Lupis, we take them both out." He was really pissed his elaborate scheme had come undone... but oh well. He'd get Rhaegson for it.

Kozlov gasped as the second knife ended up in his back.

He roared again and rushed Kojuuro, backhanding him and sending the knife flying. The enraged Grizzly Bear picked him up with one hand and slammed him into the concrete bartop, cracking it some more. He then picked up a large piece of concrete broken loose from the fight and dropped it on Kojuuro.

The crowd roared its approval and several of the spectators were grumbling about losing their creds. He panted as the adrenaline rush wore off. Luckily, the nearest hospital wasn't too far. He staggered out of the bar to thunderous applause.

(Pelvanida)

Aaron looked around in case anyone was passing by. He tried the doorknob. "It's locked. No matter." He then lifted his leg and kicked the door as hard as possible. Not suprisingly, the reinforced door didn't budge.

The German Shepherd pondered his options. He then realized that welhen he was a construction worker, he was given nearly free reign of a building. "Fuck this. We don't need him."

He then turned around and made his way to the exit. "We'll disguise ourselves as construction workers."

(Purifier Compound)

Soren waited just outside the gates for the signal to attack. Even after thirty minutes, it never came.

"Fuck this!" he muttered. He set his exoskeleton to the highest power and casually strode to the front door of the compound. The steel door provided no resistance as he ripped it from its hinges and tossed it away like an empty beer can.

"Hey, halt!" a Purifier shouted at the armored humanoid striding into the base.

Soren ignored him. A bullet bounced off his chest plate to no effect. The frightened guard continued shooting – to no effect. Soren reached the guard, picked him up with one hand and crushed his neck with no effort. He dropped the dead guard and continued on his way.

Anne had rather large fingers but the pistol fit her well enough. Being caught in binders multiple times, she was familiar enough to use them. A press of the button activated small electromagnets that rendered the binders even more difficult to break.

"Now what?" she asked. She looked around to make sure there were no other guards or cameras.

An alarm rang out as Soren's rampage continued on the lower floors.

"Shit! We've been discovered!" Anne exclaimed as her ears suddenly laid themselves flat on her head. She looked around for potential hiding places. She found a small pipe closet and got in. It was times like this she was thankful for being a Shetland Pony instead of a Clydesdale.

Soren didn't seem to have much of a goal as he walked through the lower floor. Behind him was a trail of broken bodies and other debris from his metal fists.

A piece of rebar ripped from the wall flew through the air like a javelin as the enraged cyberneticist hurled it at one of the Rottweiler guards who had rushed to meet the disturbance.

"We head to the armory! As Marita just said, she'll drop the security when we get there, and we head straight for Lupis! You're gonna take us there, Cavenaugh... fast, or the last thing you'll be experiencing will be what it's like to get shot in the head... got it?" Tony said, pushing the barrel of his rifle against the back of the lizard's skull.

"You'll burn for this Tony! I thought you were one of us! How could you just betray us! You don't know how you're dealing with!" Cavenaugh protested as Tony shoved Cavenaugh out in front and none too gently prodded him every time he slowed down.

"Shut up and move!" Tony ordered, taking the group down a side corridor that bypassed the patrols (it was mostly used for maintenance). As they emerged from this corridor, Tony took them around a bend and stepped out from behind Cavenaugh. "Hands and paws in the air, gentlemen!" Tony called, leveling his rifle at the two guards on duty outside the armory.

"What the...?" one asked, seeing the situation. Tony shoved Cavenaugh forward towards them now.

"I said raise 'em high! Move up against the wall!" the ferret reiterated, pointing with a claw where he wanted them to stand. When one was particularly slow to move, Tony fired a single shot at his feet, causing him to scamper out of the way. "All right..." He glanced at his watch. "We've got five minutes till security discovers that guard we left bound behind us. Marita, if you would kindly take security down so that we can access the armory. You'll find a terminal over there on the left wall." He pointed to said terminal. "Pass code to access it is 'Shining Bright.' I say again, 'Shining Bright.' You should be able to do your magic from there. The rest of you... take what you want, grab me a sidearm and a non-projectile rifle if you would, and I'll cover our friends here! Hey! Don't think I didn't see you move!" Tony added, pointing at one of the guards.

As Tony covered them, Cavenaugh looked at him. "It's not too late, Tony. You can still rejoin us... kill your friends, and we'll forget this whole thing ever..."

"Not interested." Tony cut him off. "In less than five minutes you're gonna be showing us up to Lupis's quarters. If you don't move fast enough, there's gonna be pain, I guarantee you. Marie! Bind the two other guards' wrists on your way out!" he called into the armory and with his free paw tossed the binders her way. He then pushed the button on his headset to dial Soren. "Soren, do you read? It's Tony. Hit the place now! We're about on our way to Lupis!" he requested, unaware the human was already on his way inside.

It was then the alarm sounded...

"What... the hell?" Tony asked. "Marita, shut that thing off!" He shouted, getting a bit nervous now as he occasionally let his eyes dart down the other side of the corridor. Intruders in the base, huh? Did Soren actually jump the gun and almost get them all killed? Well... at least he hadn't... otherwise, Tony would have some serious issues with that, even if he was dead. But if it was Soren jumping the gun... this could work in their favor. It meant security would be swarming all over whatever was setting off the alarm... meaning the rest of the base would be undermanned, and they could move about relatively safely.

Marie went tp work tying up the guard, while rose looked. On it " Marita typed in the password, which was accepted, and began working on ways to shut down the security. her caws were a blur over the keys, and in less than a minute the armory doors opened. ' there you go Tony' Marita said and began working on shutting off the alarms. this was easier than opening the armory. and in a few seconds the alarms stopped screaming ' ok. they're off. lets move everyone.! "

Outside the Purifier base, Lily was growing restless. She sensed heightened alertness around her; whatever her allies were doing, it was attracting attention. The parasite within her was stirring; it knew it was in danger and wanted to flee.

She took some deep breaths. Calm down... she told herself and the parasite. We're safe in the van...we're not part of this...

Then she and the parasite realized something at the same time; there were Purifiers running towards the car. Pumped on adrenaline and prepared for a fight.

In her moment of shock, the parasite struck out. Lily felt herself get mentally assaulted in another grasp for power, and this time it won. Independent of her own desires, her body blew the door to the car open and sprinted out on all fours towards the back alleys of the Purifier base.

The guards, who were actually running to reinforce the ones that reported the breakin, didn't notice and continued to head for the base entrance, to surround the Exoskeleton-wearing intruder that was reported.

Nairda grinned as his shackles were removed. "Let us sound the bugles of war!" he crowed. Darting out a door and down a hallway, he leaped onto the ceiling and hid as guards ran underneath him. Chuckling softly to himself, he dropped down and combat-rolled into the nearest room, which turned out to be a broom closet.

He turned to leave when the guards from before kicked the door down. "I told you I heard something chuckle!" one told the other.

Five minutes later, Nairda left the broom closet with an incredibly bloodied broom handle and the equipment from both of the guards.

"I've got two p90s, two Glocks and pair of combat knives~" he reported gleefully. "First come first serve!"

Rhaegson stared up at the blinking light on the ceiling as the screeching alarm suddenly stopped, his ears ringing in its aftermath. The small light kept flashing, intermittently bathing the room in a soft red glow. After a few seconds, that stopped too. Rhaegson exhaled and pursed his lips. "Godammit, what now..."

From somewhere in the distance, he could hear faint rumbles. Standing up, he cocked his head to listen more closely. Sounded like it was coming from the northern side of the compound... Leaning over his computer, Rhaegson switched to CCTV, and flicked through the cameras in the north section. His finger froze over the keyboard when a hulking figure in a suit appeared on the screen, broken bodies and destruction behind it. "The fuck is this?" Was someone stupid enough to openly attack the compound like that? Rhaegson slammed his palm down on the button linked to the speakers. "Intruder in section B2. All members of security not with their thumbs currently up their ass, get over there and take him out! He's in an exo-skeleton, so engage from a distance!" Rhaegson paused. This attack, just when the ferret brat arrived with his prisoners... "Any security near the cells, search the area. If you see any one who isn't one of us, take them out."

Axel flinched when he heard the gunfire in the distance. He pulled the blinds aside slightly, peering through the window, but from this distance he couldn't see what was happening. "Ah, crap! Lily, you should..." He was interrupted by a loud crash, and he spun around to catch a glimpse of Lily tearing through the door and vanishing outside. "No! Nonono..." he spluttered, snatching up the snub-nose he'd picked from the Stracci mansion and dashing out after her.

Stepping outside, his eyes widened when he saw a couple of heavily armed men running past... but their attention seemed focused on the Purifier base and they didn't pay him any attention. A grey blur in the corner of his eye caught his attention, and his heart sank when he saw it was Lily heading straight for the base. "Oh jesus... Lily! Wait! STOP!" Clutching the pistol, he sprinted after her, trying desperately to catch up.

"Construction workers?!" Marcus snarled. He turned his head to look at the locked door, and reluctantly slipped his revolver back behind his jacket, grinding his teeth. I'll be seeing you later, Altyn.

"I said NON-projectile!" Tony said, sighing at Nairda's choice. "But fine, whatever, give me a Glock and one of the P90s." he ordered, slinging the P90 around his shoulder and holding it out in front of him while he stuck the Glock into his waistband. "All right, Cavenaugh! Let's go! Take us to Lupis! Good job on disabling the security." he complimented Marita as he once more pushed Cavenaugh out in front of him. That annoying alarm was now off, so good riddance.

It wasn't too long however before they ran into one of Rhaegson's patrols. The patrol rounded the corner ahead of them, and Cavenaugh immediately dove in front of them, hitting the deck. "Heads up!" he shouted.

Tony ground his teeth together, and raised the P90. Time once more seemed to slow as he fired off a burst from the personal defense weapon. One of the goons immediately dropped with several bullets in his chest, his arms splaying up in the air as he cried out and fell hard upon the floor behind him in a disheveled state. Tony suddenly froze gawking at what he'd just done. He'd never... never killed anyone before... and for a few seconds, all the ferret could do was stare at the prone body on the floor in front of him. The guy was dead... dead by his paw, his limbs twisted and arrayed in a strange fashion as he lay like a broken pile of jacks in front of the ferret.

Staring aghast at the corpse, the ferret was snapped out of his reverie by the return fire of the small squad. Bullets whizzed by his head, buzzing the fur on his left cheek, and he was yanked out of his trance and back into reality. Squeezing off another burst, he shot another one ahead of them. "Let's take these guys out!" he commanded, throwing himself against the wall and trying to present as narrow a profile as he could as he recommenced firing on the patrol.

What the hell had happened to him? Why had he frozen up like that? Come on, Tony! It's kill or be killed! You know that!

Up ahead and in the crossfire, Cavenaugh kept close to the ground and began crawling forward slightly towards his compatriots, knowing this was most likely futile, as he risked taking a bullet more than reaching his friends, as there was a greater chance they'd be dead in a matter of seconds anyway.

Marita had in the meantime grabbed a few weapons for herself, marie and Rose. marie took a MP7, while Rose and Marita had p90s. Marie's weapons had 40 rounds of ammo, Marita's and Rose's 50, so they would cover her if she ran out. the three of them hurried after Tony, and provided cover fire after he shot one of the guards. none of the girls were particularly well-trained in forearms, but their accuracy was good enough to hold the guards from advancing on them.

(Purifier Compound)

Anne's heart hammered in her chest. Swallowing, she opened the door – and caught one of the Purifiers with the door. Taking advantage of the shock, she crushed the man's skull with a piece of pipe that a repairman had left behind.

Grabbing the dropped Skorpian SMG, she joined Tony and the other two in returning fire.

Soren's suit was nearly bulletproof but with his fingers too large to operate the triggers on his two firearms and the guards exploiting their greater agility, he had no choice but to try and flee the group of guards. As he ran, he trampled one of them underfoot and his arm smashed another against a wall.

"Tony," he said into the headset as he ran. "Yeah, about my suit. I can't use any of my guns. Can you get me something like a gatling gun or something heavy that you could mount to my suit?"

He lowered his shoulder and crashed through a bathroom door, startling two Purifiers who were on the toilet. They reached for their sidearms but the cyberneticist simply picked them up and smashed them against the toilets, killing them.

"Fuck. Now what?" He then noticed a large water pipe linking all the sinks' taps.

(Pelvanida)

Aaron nodded. "Well first off, we need some props. Toolboxes, uniforms and all that shit. Once that's done, we pretty much have free reign of the complex."

"Luckily, there's a construction site nearby." He pointed to a crane erecting a new section of an elevated highway just a few blocks from Pelvanida.

Tony heard Soren in his ear as he downed the last Purifier. It was only now he noticed his paws shaking horrendously. The adrenaline high he was currently on was not helping his current disposition. "Get up!" he ordered unsteadily to Cavenaugh. "NOW!" He yelled, causing the Gila monster to rise slowly to his feet.

"Soren... I can't get you a gatling gun myself because there's no way I could carry it, our-their units are so huge, but... the heavy ordinance is stored in unit 319 across the compound. If you could break in there, you'll have all the heavy vehicular weaponry you could dream of, and then some!" the ferret informed him. "Unit 319!"

Running forward, he tried to avoid stumbling, and probably looked incredibly clumsy as he pushed Cavenaugh out in front of him. "Let's go! We're going to Lupis! We got some minutes before their security system recycles, so let's go! And keep in mind... I know this place... if I even sense you aren't leading us remotely in the direction of the guest quarters or the administration block, you die!" Tony said, feeling like he could collapse from the rush. He hated these adrenaline highs; they did nothing but hype him up and make him ridiculously nervous and ready to fight or flee, and right now, he either needed to shoot something or hide himself until this passed... and he knew it wasn't really a choice at all.

Marcus looked at the construction site in the distance and scowled. "This was meant to be fast..." Playing dress up didn't appeal to him either. Still, if it meant they could find what they needed and get out quick, it was worth a try.

He nodded brusquely at Aaron. "Let's get this over with," he muttered.

Nairda flipped over the hail of gunfire, having been left only a single combat knife from the arsenal he'd returned. Dodging fluidly through the gunfire, he sliced one assailant's throat and dodged a bayonet thrusted by another. "You'll have to do better than that~" he smirked, sending the knife spinning into the assailant's eye. "I'm the devil of five floors deep..."

Lily was at a breakneck sprint, racing on all fours through the back alleys of the Purifier base. Run faster her body screamed at her, they're gonna catch us! Run!

They're not chasing us! she thought back frantically, Stop! We're heading deeper into the Purifier base!

But her direction and her actions were out of her hands. Vaulting over a chainlink fence, she rolled out the shock and came to a snarling bear on a group of Augments who were startled to see her.

"What the hell is that?" gasped one, before Lily sent a psionic pulse echoing out of her body like a sonic boom, sending all of them flying backwards. Some of them had started shooting before their heart stopped working, and suddenly host and parasite were in agreement as they ran through the open door into the Purifier backrooms.

Axel slowed his pace as he entered the alleyways, completely aware of the fact that if he stumbled into a group of Purifiers, chances of him surviving were slim to none. Though from the rumbles and gunfire in the distance, it sounded like the Purifiers had their hands full. What happened to doing this stealthy...

Jogging lightly down the twisting passageways, Axel's ears were pointed out, trying to catch the sound of footsteps, voices, anything that could tell him where Lily was. Nothing. The hand holding the pistol trembled, and he tightened his grip, using his other hand to steady the weapon. All of a sudden, there was a dull boom from somewhere up ahead, accompanied by shrieks and the sound of gunfire. He jolted in shock then quickened his steps, trying to fight the panic from rising. Nearing the corner where the noise had come from, he hesitated, then stepped out, raising the gun... and gasping at the group of bodies sprawled in front of him. "What the hell..." Did she do this? From the expressions on their faces, it looked like their deaths hadn't been pleasant.

Axel looked up, past the corpses, and felt a wave of fear wash over him when he saw the open door leading into the main building itself. He glanced around, but knew he was trying to fool himself. She's gone inside... Trying and failing to control his panicked breathing, Axel nervously followed her into the compound.

Nairda spun and beheaded the last guard. "Let's move~!" he warned the others.

Leading the way down the hall, he noticed Lupis' office. Smirking, he jammed the knife into the lock and picked it with the skill of a professional.

After hearing a light click, he kicked the door down and combat-rolled into the room. "Hands up government spook!" he announced bravely, knife held out menacingly.

But Lupis wasn't in his office. A few seconds later Nairda was hit by over a dozen incredibly painful traps involving electricity, acid, fire ants, razor blades, razor blades that are on fire, and lemon juice.

Lily darted down hallways, miraculously alone. Most of the personnel had apparently headed to reinforce more active sections of the base.

where are we going? she begged of the conscience controlling her body at the moment. Why aren't we running AWAY from here? But the parasite had no reason to bother speaking with her.

After a few minutes, she approached a heavily barricaded titanium-reinforced steel blast door. A mere glance would reveal that there was no possible way inside. Pressing her body up against it, she tried and failed to pry the doors open; even her psionic abilities wouldn't work here. She could sense it.

She could feel the parasite's mind reeling. It desperately needed to get inside...

Lena smiled and brought Emilena another plate of cookies. "Enough about us. We haven't seen you in over seven years. We want to hear about you."

"You heard about me," Emilena grumbled. "I've burnt all my bridges. My allies don't trust me. The police are after me. It took a literal act of god to save my corpse from rotting in the torture dungeon of a mafia interrogator."

"Is that where all the wounds came from?" wondered Emile. "Some of those were remarkably unlikely, especially the sphinter being--"

"I have a habit of murdering men who tell me medical diagnoses," Emilena cautioned. "Don't add yourself to the list."

Lena mopped Emilena's forehead with gauze. "Well, none of your past matters. You're safe with us now. We'll protect you, we have more than enough to eat and survive out here. And its very remote, nobody will find you."

Emilena tried to force herself out of bed. "Oh no. Oh no no no no. I'm not staying here. You two will probably sell me to some slavers when you realize what awful caretakers you're destined to always be."

"At least stay the night," pleaded Emile. "Where have you to go? It'll let your body rest."

Emilena looked at him suspiciously. She literally could not think of anything they wouldn't conceivably do to her in her sleep. But she conceded to herself that she had little choice "...on second thought, I spoke too soon. I should stay here indefinitely." If they believed it, they wouldn't try to impose the decision on her through their own devices. She hoped... "I've never let anyone take care of me. Perhaps that's been my main mistake my whole life."

Her parents beamed. "That's wonderful to hear!" Lena hugged her, causing Emilena to stiffen up and grumble in protest. "We'll make up for all the years we abandoned you," she whispered softly. "We promise."

Emile nodded. "We'll tell you everything you missed out on. Make up for the huge gap in your life. I'll grab the picture books; we've got video evidence of any 'firsts' that happened in two months before we gave you away, including crawling, temper tantrum, and bowel movement."

I've got to get out of here.... Emilena thought to herself in equal parts horror and despair.

Axel crept his way along the tight corridors, uncomfortably aware of how his trainers scuffed slightly on the floor, the sound bouncing off the thick walls. Occasionally he'd come across a metal door leading off from the main path, but since they were all closed, he ignored them.

Eventually, he came to a crossroads in the corridor, the hallway branching off in three different directions. Axel stood indecisively in the middle, clutching his pistol with both hands. Chewing his lip hard enough to break the skin, he glanced up and down the possible routes, then tried calling out softly. "Lily, where are you?! Li-" He was interrupted by the sound of raised voices and heavy footsteps coming from the corridor to the left, heading directly towards him. A small moan escaped him, his legs suddenly feeling as though they were made of rubber. Stumbling forwards, he impulsively chose the path that led straight on. Reaching a right hand turn, he rounded the corner and pressed his back to the wall, holding his breath as he listened intently to where the group of Purifiers was heading.

"... enough bullets, that son of a bitch'll go down eventually!"

"Are you kidding? Have you seen how much shit we've thrown at him?!" The voices grew louder as the group moved past where Axel had been standing seconds before.

"Yeah, well, you know what they say. Bigger they are, the... uh... The..."

"Harder they fall, moron."

"Whatever, I didn't ask for your shit, Xander..." The noise of the argument began fading as the Purifiers drew further away from him, the clumping of their feet growing quieter.

Axel released his breath in a shudder. Thank you... thank you... After taking a second to wrestle his nerves into submission, he looked slowly to the side and continued on.

Rhaegson paced his office, dragging on his cigarettes like a drowning man sucking for air. Whoever the hell these people were, they were proving a bigger problem than he'd first thought. He paused mid step. This douchebag in the suit... Nairda... There was a good chance more of them were using electronics too...

He sat back down and snatched up his phone, dialing to a separate part of the compound. After a few seconds, a nervous sounding voice answered. "Yes sir?"

"Get it heated up. We're going to give these sons of bitches something to think about."

The voice on the other end paused. "Um, well, it's not exactly ready... we're still waiting for the amplifiers and..."

"Well, shit, you think I don't know that?!" Rhaegson snapped. "Just shut up and..." His voice trailed off when he glanced up at the monitor. He grinned to himself. "Holy... Just get it ready. Don't set it off before I tell you."

Hanging up, Rhaegson dialed Lupis, still staring at the screen. "Hey, big bad... Guess what I have my beautiful blues set on? I'll give you a clue - it's ugly as shit, and you've been chasing it for who the hell knows how long. And, this is the best bit. It's waiting right outside the labs..." He slouched back in his chair, his grin broadening. "I guess good things come to those who wait, huh?"

(Elevated highway construction site)

The construction site was an utter cacophony of noises as workers continued their arduous task of constructing the elevated highway. Flying frame equipped laborers flitted about with high powered welding lasers or rivet guns as they secured the steel beams in place.

Aaron led Marcus into the portable dressing room and opened the door. He curled his lips at the odor of unwashed manual workers that permeated the grungy room. Dirty laundry was tossed haphazardly on the floor. For obvious reasons, those clothes were not an option.

"Fuckin' nasty. My supervisor would rip us a new asshole if we shit up the locker room like this," he muttered.

He opened a locker and grabbed two blue jumpsuits emblazoned with the company's name (Syberis Road Works) and tossed one to Marcus.

The German Shepherd quickly donned the suit. "Okay, let's get out of here and back to Pelvanida!"

(Purifier Base)

Soren heard Tony's transmission. Smirking, he backed up and charged straight through the thin wall of the bathroom. Only to stumble upon a group of armed Purifiers.

"There's the fucker! Get him!" A hail of gunfire went his way.

Soren felt his sphincter tighten as he heard the bullets ping off his armored suit. A sharp sting in his arm made him swear. They were using mag-guns, which fired a solid metal dart at velocities high enough to pierce armor. This one was just a glancing hit but a perfect shot could kill. He sprinted back into the base with the irate Purifiers charging after him.

"Tony! Where are we going!?" Anne asked as she rounded a corner and found a surprised Purifier. Thinking quickly, she exploited her short height and shoved her horn into the Percheron's throat, causing him to clutch the wound and fall to the floor with a series of wet gurgles. A short burst from her SMG silenced him.

Lena was doubled over on the carpet laughing, Emile was clutching the support of the couch and tears were running down his face. Both were busting a gut watching a shaky-cam of a diapered baby Emilena trying desperately to climb down from a very tall tree.

"So we had, like, no clue how you got up there!" Lena wheezed, "And you're like, halfway to the top--"

"Oh, here's the best part!" Choked Emile on his own saliva, struggling for breath. "You knock down this nest of eggs, that's what that was, and here a fucking hawk shows up and starts--!"

Emilena clicked the TV off. "That was hilarious, really it was. I always wanted to know where my fear of heights and birds came from. But I really must be going to sleep."

Lena wiped a tear from her eye, grinning. "We understand, sweetheart..." she chuckled. "We're so glad to have you back."

"I'm glad I came back," Emilena answered honestly. "I learned a lot I hadn't realized."

"Well, you'll learn more tomorrow," smiled Emile. "We've got at least a hundred hours more of footage to show you. And then we have stories we didn't capture on tape--"

"--certainly something to do tomorrow..." Emilena plastered a smile on her face. "Let me go to sleep now..."

She had indeed learned something very important. If this was the life she could expect by running away, then she had to return. She didn't want to face her comrades after being outed as a spy in front of them, but if the alternative was a life with the two least-likeable people she'd ever encountered, she could swallow her pride.

Lily shivered as she glanced at the retinal recognition scanner. Hardly understanding why she was even trying it, or whether she hoped it would even work, she placed her eye on the scanner. It beeped and the door opened.

In the next room, she walked into a whitewashed room. She immediately recognized it as the site of her dream from when she was in Soren's house. Large chambers housed green liquid, computers were running, and a single chamber at the end housed a lifeless being looking remarkably similar to her. It was missing its hair, was more hunched over and muscular, and had lost all remaining human features, but its slumped-over polydactyl form was a familiar face she'd never even considered could exist.

"Hey! You!"

A voice cut through the gunfire around Soren, and a hulking rhino agent lumbered out of the ranks. He had triple-reinforced armor and carried a huge circular saw with a cannon strapped to it.

"What the hell do you think you're doing in here?" He growled angrily, revving the saw to life. "You shut that suit down and I MIGHT let your sorry ass live!"

Tony slapped his paw hard on the wall as he noticed Lupis wasn't in his office. "Dammit! We were supposed to nab him!" He shouted, realizing the plan was rapidly falling apart. Without Lupis, this whole attack was meaningless! "Soren! Lupis ain't here! We're gonna get overwhelmed if we stay here any longer... suggest we withdraw and regroup... hey!" Tony shouted, noticing Cavenaugh dart quickly into Lupis's office now, the ferret having taken his eyes from him for too long a period of time.

Chasing after him, Tony was met with a flash of steel in front of him as the Gila monster had retrieved a sword that had been mounted on the wall of the office. More specifically, it was a katana. Tony felt his shoulder erupt in pain as his paw immediately shot up to it, clenching down as blood droplets sprayed onto the floor. "Dammit!" Tony uttered, backing away as the air whistled in front of him as Cavenaugh sliced towards the mustelid's neck, which Tony just barely avoided.

"You really shouldn't have betrayed us, Tony! Now you'll pay!"

Tony lifted the P90, but it was batted down by another swipe of the sword, yanking Tony's arm in an unpleasant fashion as he continued backing up down the hallway. "Oh no you don't! I'm not giving you that chance!" Cavenaugh exclaimed as he continued to advance on the ferret and violently swung the katana mere inches from his flesh.

Anne charged into the office. She snatched the katana from the floor and a pointed both her SMG and the katana at Cavenaugh. "Where's Lupis!?" She didn't seem to notice or care that there was dried blood visible on her metal horn.

She then noticed Nairda and Marita. "Someone watch Tony and this fuckwad"óshe pointed at Cavenaughó"I'll go get a first aid kit."

The mare looked around the room. Bland minimalistic style with lots of stainless steel. The one incongruous thing was the "wall hanger" katana that just now proved itself to be no mere decoration.

She opened a drawer in the desk and found a pack of moziafil. Anne smiled as she pocketed the drugs. Papers, pens and even keepsakes were tossed on the group as she searched for a first aid kit.

"A little busy!" Soren said as he ran away from the Rhino. His suit was tough but testing it against someone armed with a a diamond coated saw and large caliber cannon was not something he fancied.

Thinking quickly, he ripped a set of lockers off the wall and threw them in the path of the pursuing Purifiers.

"Shit! I'm fucked now!" He considered sacrificing his suit to throw them off his trail but if they caught him without the suit, the hail of bullets would have most certainly killed him by now. A hole suddenly appeared in the concrete wall by his head as a Purifier with a mag-rifle took a shot at him. The pursuers either shot at him from behind the barrier or they vaulted and climbed over in an attempt to catch him

Soren got up and continued running away. He was thankful for the mag-rifle's slow rate of fire due to its need to charge its capaciters.

"Damn it, I can't keep running forever!" he muttered. He stopped for a moment to catch his breath.

A tinny beeping from further up the corridor caused Axel's ears to twitch, and he picked up his pace. Rounding the corner, he was met with large blast door. It was already open. Apart from the door, the corridor was a dead end.

Axel stopped at the threshold, his heart pounding in his chest. It looked like the entrance to a tomb, and everything inside him told the rat that going inside was a bad idea. Suddenly, there was a metallic creak, and Axel realised with a jolt that the door was closing again. "Aw, crap..." Swearing under his breath, he quickly ducked through... and found himself in a bright white room with Lily.

"Lily! Come on, we've got to..." Axel's voice trailed off when he noticed what the room contained. Gazing around, his mouth gaped open in confusion. When he saw the lone chamber at the end, his face twitched and the hand holding the gun tightened involuntarily. "What... what the hell is this..."

Marcus' face was even grimmer than usual as he pulled on the jumpsuit. "My one isn't washed," he grumbled. Bending down to pick up a toolbox that had been left behind, he nodded at Aaron. "Let's go."

Arriving back at Pelvanida, Marcus led them to the public entrance this time. A human guard at the end of the room stirred at the sight of them, and approached. "Hold it! What's the problem?"

Marcus cleared his throat. "Repairs."

"Repairs?" The guard looked at the company name on their jumpsuits. "Then how come that says road works? There's no roads in here."

"Syberis is branching out. We now provide more services so as to further assist the community, and our esteemed customers."

The guard blinked. "Oh. Alright then." He stepped aside.

As they walked past, Marcus spoke lowly to Aaron. "We should use these suits more often."

Tony could only back away slightly as Cavenaugh's left shoulder was hit by Marita's shot, causing the Gila monster to bellow in pain, and even more so when the knife struck it. The ferret was breathing heavy now, knowing he was losing blood. Cavenaugh soon had a gun and the katana pointed at him, though Anne quickly moved into the office herself, leaving Tony to raise his P90 once more to cover the lizard.

"What are you gonna do?" the reptile challenged. "Kill me? And I don't know where Lupis is! This is where he was last I saw him!" he shouted back.

Tony's paw trembled a little, and he narrowed his eyes. He couldn't shoot someone in cold blood like this... it just wasn't in him, despite how much he wanted to. His stomach was doing flips and turns, churning violently as his mind battled with his heart over the proper course to take.

"We-we need to get out of here!" he stammered breathlessly. "This isn't going to work! Soren's in trouble, Lupis isn't here, I'm wounded... we gotta go! We'll regroup, get some supplies, and... rethink this!" he said, started to back down the corridor now, but keeping his gun trained on Cavenaugh as he waited for Anne to rejoin them. The easy way out would be the service tunnels under the compound. He knew the code to access them, and it would take them straight out and onto the street. Once outside, they could pick up the car and trailer, and get the hell out of here!

"Ugly as hell, isn't it?" asked Lupis softly, as the blast door whirred shut behind them. "Is it a Pelvanida experiment gone wrong, from their bio-augmenting in the 2010s? Is it a horrible mutated being? The government thinks its an extraterrestrial life form. Me, I don't waste breath guessing."

Lily bared her teeth in a feeble display of fright at the sight of Lupis. Even though she didn't recognize him, the parasite did and was hyperventilating with fear. Before she could run or do anything else, Lupis flicked a switch on the wall and an ultrasonic frequency rang through the room. To Axel (and most others) it would only be a faint buzz; to Lily it sent random pulses shooting throughout her nervous system, and she collapsed in a heap, twitching and struggling to collect her thoughts.

"I wouldn't go near her if I were you," Lupis warned Axel. He didn't appear to be armed, but he showed no fear of Axel's firearm. "I don't know who you are, but I can add 2 and 2; you must care about Ms. North to possibly follow her this far. I think you've earned the right to know the truth."

On Rhaegson's security monitor, Lupis entered the subterranean laboratory and sealed the blast door behind him. He (and anyone inside the laboratory) would be immune to the pulse. While Lupis could not inform him directly, it was all-but assured Lupis wouldn't mind if Rhaegson fired when ready.

Her parents having finally left her alone, Emilena debated going to sleep. She half expected to wake up chained up in the basement, or worse, if they didn't want to risk her leaving. Wouldn't be unusual behavior for someone to do to me at this point...

But her exhaustion finally won out and soon she'd settled back into a fitful sleep.

Immediately, she found herself balanced precariously in a tree. For a second, she thought that the family video was coming back to haunt her, until she registered Axel on top of her. Seconds later, she realized what they were up to, and in disgust and confusion could only look him in the eyes until he ejaculated inside her.

Then she was outside Soren's house, with a German Shepherd guard tensely watching the road. Then she saw a Vulpine police officer, a very familiar one, jump at her companion with drawn blade. Before she could call a warning the Vulpine had decapitated her ally. Seconds later a high-caliber bullet embedded in the back of her skull.

The Rhino set his chainsaw whirring and plowed effortlessly through a wall. "You aren't getting away that easily!" he roared, pursuing the exoskeletoned man. "You can't run forever!"

Axel whirled at the voice behind him, and when he saw the wolf standing there his eyes narrowed with hatred. "You..." He could hear Lily struggling on the floor, and he moved in front to block her from Lupis. "The truth?! I think I've got a pretty good picture," he spat. "You did this to her, you son of a bitch..." He brought the gun up to level it at the wolf. The barrel shook, but this time it wasn't from fear. "And you're going to turn her back. Now."

Rhaegson watched as Lupis followed the skinny rodent into the lab, rolling his eyes as the door swung shut. You always were melodramatic... At least that's one problem dealt with. He tapped the keyboard, switched the view between the group retreating from Lupis' office, and the lone man in the exoskeleton. The way things were going, the pulse probably wasn't necessary... but they were going to have to test it sooner or later. And it never hurt to have a little fun.

He leaned into the speaker. "Everyone trying to take these clowns out, your job's about to get a lot easier. Lucky you." Rhaegson snapped his phone open. "Hit it."

A few moments later, a low hum started to reverberate around the compound. It built up, getting louder and louder, enough to set teeth on edge... and then, abruptly, it stopped. From the center of the base, a light blue haze spread out, spilling into the corridors. Within moments, it had washed through most of the building, rushing towards the intruders even as it started to lose its intensity.

"Can't exactly follow while I'm bleeding out!" Tony exclaimed through gritted teeth. "And what are you leading for? Do you even know the way out of here?" he chided Rose. "Ugh... never mind... we gotta get moving." he said, breathing heavy as the alarms went off. He was hoping for some more time, but he kept his gun trained on Cavenaugh as he backed up towards a door in the hall. "There's an easy exit out but you're gonna have to..." He broke off, hearing a noise that jarred him a bit, leaving him just a tad shaken as it died down.

He paused now, seeing a blue mist driving right towards them. Blinking the ferret shook his head. Was he hallucinating from blood loss? No... he wasn't that weak just yet... the mist flooded down the hall like an incoming tide, and was soon enveloping them and then moving beyond, like a brief blanket that didn't have to time to stay. "What the... hell?" Tony asked, noticing he felt... no different. "What was that?" he asked, looking as it moved on down the hall. Cavenaugh was just as surprised to see it as Tony, getting a little nervous as it moved about his scaled body, but neither really showed any ill effects.

Down below, his eyes opened. Blinking a few times, he could tell he was in some sort of fluid... but not water. A noise had awoken him... a humming, which had rattled his brain and forced him into alertness. His long sleep was finally over. He could hear voices now.

The orange eyes gazed out of the film that was around them and studied the three in the room. One was a stony like creature, more a living rock than an organic being, but organic it was. The second was a white-furred rat with odd metal limbs. Injury of some sort? He was rather angry... he was threatening the third, a wolf, who appeared calm and confident. Hmmm... what was this about?

He slowly felt his strength returning to him, but decided to listen in for the moment until it fully returned. He was in one of the numerous tanks in the room, and while most of them were empty, his was not. Damn white light... at least it made him blend in well, given his body's coloring. Strangely, he now noticed he was capable of breathing in this aqueous environment. Curiouser and curiouser...

"We did nothing of the sort." Lupis narrowed his eyes. "To be honest, I can only guess at how Ms. North became wrapped up in all this. Here in the psionically sealed labs, my top scientists had been studying that creature in that tank, hoping to learn more about its psionic powers. We underestimated its abilities, and in a moment of weakness it possessed one of my agents and used him to break the laboratory seal. Its conscience then escaped our labs, and we've been trying to get it back here ever since. Your girlfriend was just the unlucky person it happened across first, I'd wager."

He stepped forward. "I harbor no ill will towards Ms. North, and I'd like just as much as you to free her from her bondage. It's as simple as forcing the rogue conscience from her mind. And we'll never have a chance like right here, right now in this sealed laboratory. If you would be willing to work with me...we could save her."

"We can't retreat now~!" Nairda let out a rallying cry. "We've got to persevere! The eve of the Purifiers is upon us! The sunshine patriot and the summer soldier may shy from hardship and inhospitality, but it is the true hero that--"

At that the pulse hit him and shut off all his augments, including the ones in his brain. Luckily, his body was still capable of keeping alive, but he blacked out and crumbled in a heap.

The pulse rippled through the Purifiers, who all cheered; being Purifiers, they had no internal augments and so could quickly resume the chase of Soren Almaya.

Axel hurriedly took a step back as Lupis approached, a side of his mouth bared. He glanced quickly down at Lily, at the figure in the chamber behind her, then swung his eyes back up. He didn't lower the gun. "That thing's consciousness? You actually expect me to..." Suddenly, what Lily had said before came back to him - Every time my mind leaves my body, it takes a little longer to come back... Axel's ears flattened, his breath hissing between his teeth as he tried to think clearly. He didn't trust Lupis for one second, and part of him was screaming not to listen... but Axel knew he had no idea how to help Lily, and if there was a chance the wolf was telling the truth... Fuck, what do I do?

He started to lower the pistol, though not relaxing his arm completely. "How... how the hell am I supposed to trust you? You could just be making it worse!"

Soren fell face first as his suit's electronics were scrambled by the pulse. His HMD shut down as well.

He struggled to free himself from his now useless suit. Luckily, a quick release feature allowed the suit to easily fall away from him in pieces.

Footsteps and shouting got louder as the enraged Purifiers closed in on him. Grabbing his shotgun, he took aim and shot out a large pipe that carried live steam for the steam washers (hinting at the base's former life as a heavy equipment factory).

He followed an emergency exit sign as the hallway began to fill with scalding steam.

"Great, what else could goó" Anne never finished her sentence as the EMP hit. Her eyes rolled into the back of her head and she collapsed, her horn sparking with induced electrical currents.

The duo finally entered the warehouse. Two armed guards stopped them.

"You must be the repair crew the front desk told us about. Anyways, credentials please."

Aaron fished out an ID from the pocket of his uniform. The ID was one of a Belgian Malenois but to the average person, they looked close enough to German Shephards that they could pass.

"I see, well, you may pass," the guard said, nodding as she looked at the ID and Aaron.

"We need to get the conscience to leave Lily's body," explained Lupis. "The best way to do that is to make it think the current host is about to die. But it can read minds, so when you shoot at Lily, you'll have to convince it that you're aiming for a lethal shot. Once it flees Ms. North, it'll be looking for a new body to possess. If it picks its old body, it'll be trapped again inside the pod."

He stepped forward. "Of course, first its going to try to possess your mind. Or mine. I have years of training, I'll be able to fight it off. Will you? You could wind up just like her. If you don't think you can handle it, give me the gun and get out. I have no motivation to kill Ms. North; its in my best interest to keep her alive and that creature back in its own mind."

"We can't go back the way we came in." Tony shook his head here. "That's out the front gate, and they would've locked it down by now. We have to... dammit!" Tony said, noticing Anne collapse, as well as Nairda. "What the hell is this?" he asked, shocked as he looked around at the pulse's effects. "What did it... the augments!" he exclaimed now, his mind making the connection. "Crap! We gotta get them out of here!" Tony said, biting down as the tourniquet was applied. "Agh! I'll take Anne... try to take Anne... you three help Nairda!" Tony ordered. "And thanks for the patch up!" he grunted as he took Anne's armpits and tried to hoist her up. Pony weighed some...

"Anne! You gotta get up!" he groaned as pain shot through his arm, the strain not good on his shoulder wound. "Ugh! Dammit! Come on Anne!" He said, slapping her face lightly to try and bring her around as they made for the stairs. "We have to get down to the service tunnels!" he ordered the girls as he pulled Anne into the stairwell now and began making his painful way down the steps, trying not to drop Anne and hoping she'd come around soon. It would take a long time to exit like this...

He felt at this point he'd heard enough. It was clear the rat didn't trust the wolf, and why should he? The wolf was not trustworthy, no matter how you sliced it. This he knew... inherently. He wasn't sure how... but it was there. This exchange wouldn't end well for the rat... perhaps it was time to do something.

Concentrating on the barrier in front of him, he began focusing... focusing what he wasn't sure, but focusing all the same. The tube he was in suddenly started shaking violently, and without much further warning, shattered in a cacophony of exploding glass and cascading fluid as it blew outward. The creature tumbled out onto the floor, and rolled up to standing.

A creature he was, for he was very unusual. Pure white skinned, he was mostly gecko in appearance, but his eyes were wide, and brightly orange in color. Two rows of white feathers stuck out the back of his head, forming parallel rows that swept back and then curled up slightly at the end, almost like a headdress of sorts. He was short... only about four feet in height, but he was possessed of a very serious countenance.

"Surrendering your sidearm would not be wise." he spoke, his voice deep and resonant. If a cave could perhaps speak, this would be it. "You are correct... you can't trust him." Of course, his explosive exit and speaking probably provided just the right amount of distraction needed that Lupis had been looking for...

"Don't come any closer!" Axel warned, stepping to the side so he could see both Lupis and Lily. "There's no way I'm leaving you alone with her, and I'm sure as hell not gonna give you the gun." He looked to the left at Lily. What Lupis said made a horrible amount of sense... Every time she'd been in danger, Lily had been able to see things she shouldn't... He bit his lip, and was about to say something when the glass of one of the tanks across the room exploded outwards.

Axel recoiled in shock. He started to swivel the pistol in the small creature's direction, barely registering that it had just spoken, when his trainers skidded in the green fluid that was pooling across the floor. He lost his balance, falling back and landing painfully, the small of his back slamming against the lower metal rim of the tank behind him. The pistol fell out of his grip and skittered across the floor.

The guards turned to look at Marcus. "And your credentials, please?"

"Of course." Marcus reached into the pocket of his jumpsuit, grabbed the ID card nestled in there and pulled it out. His mouth tightened as he saw the face on the picture. It was a poodle.

"Well? Come on," one of the guards urged, reaching out a hand and snatching it from Marcus' fingers. He cocked his head as he looked at it. "Uh... this isn't going to..."

The toolbox swung in the air and slammed down solidly on the top of the guard's head, dropping him to the floor. Startled, his companion started to raise his gun, but Marcus heaved the heavy metal box to the side. It connected with a dull clunk across his face, sending him spinning to join the other on the floor. Bending down and grabbing the front of their uniforms, Marcus heaved them to the side and packed them on one of the shelves storing various cybernetic equipment. He pulled a large crate in front of them so they were more hidden, then tossed the guns they'd dropped up to a higher shelf. Straightening, he looked at Aaron. "Come on. We need to move it."

Crossing the warehouse, Marcus looked up and down the aisles, finally turning right and stopping in front of a crate with 18-G12VX printed on it. He pried open the top to reveal a number of rod like objects stored inside, each about 12 cm long. Emptying the contents of the toolbox, Marcus reached in, took several of the amplifiers and put them inside the metal container. He turned back to Aaron. "Let's get out of here."

Well, it wasn't the opportunity Lupis was expecting, but he'll take what he can get.

Darting forward, Lupis grabbed the pistol and whipped it across Axel's face. He aimed for the eye; partially-blind opponents are half as threatening as they used to be. He'd kicked his shoe off at the same time, and now his lower left paw was slashing across Axel's stomach, deep enough to draw blood if not openly expose internal organs.

He levied the pistol at the newcomer. "Get back in your pod, or get out of here," he narrowed his eyes. "You never worked out anyway, though I can thank you for how patient and cooperative you were. You earned one chance to walk away."

At the same time Lupis tried to kick Axel to the side and approach Lily, who had curled into a shivering ball and was pressed against the wall furthest away from the trio.

Tony gladly let Rose and Marie carry the unconscious Anne for him, as his shoulder wasn't doing him any favors right now. "Thank you!" he gratefully told the girls. "OK... we're going out via the service tunnels! They'll take us right out to the street, and we'll head back to the car!" he explained. He led them down the stairs, and out into another corridor. Poking his head around the corner, he looked both ways to see the area clear, and then darted down the hallway, motioning for them to follow while he covered them with his P90.

"It's out here!" he said, inputting the code to override the lock on the door, and let it slide open while he waved them on. The door led to a concrete staircase, which in turn led downward into a concrete tunnel. It led under the base, and had been used by maintenance back when this place was a factory to quickly transit from one side of the base to the other. Tony knew about it because it was one of the Purifiers' escape routes, as well as sneakier methods of attack. "All right... we're almost out of here! Just straight down this tunnel, and we're out on the streets and home free!" he exclaimed. "I don't think that pulse fried the car... it's all analog after all, and no real circuitry, so I think we're good, plus I parked it a block or two away, and I'm glad I did!"

The creature was surprised at the result of his intrusion. The rat was swiftly attacked and downed by the wolf, who then proceeded to call him a... failure? Brief flashes of something played through his mind, and he narrowed his eyes now. Failure? That couldn't be so... last he remembered... but he couldn't remember anything before this. There were a few memories... bu they weren't connected to this place at all.

Without saying another word, the creature concentrated on the gun the wolf held at him. "I've got a third option." he replied, and suddenly, Lupis would've found it insanely difficult to move his arm, much less squeeze his trigger finger. His whole arm began to shake in fact, and the lupine agent would soon find himself lifted clean off the floor and up into the air, hovering and completely immobile as the strange reptile held him bound with seemingly just his mind. "How's this for not working out?" he asked as Lupis was flung hard against the far wall, smacking into it with enough force to do some pretty serious damage. He had been thrown as easily as if he were a doll, but the creature had no idea how he'd accomplished that. He felt a tad weaker, but not to the point where he couldn't do that again if needs be.

Breaking his concentration, he moved over to Axel now. "I don't think we should remain here." he said. "I didn't want to hurt him, but I didn't see much other choice." He held his hand out for the rat to take now. "Are you hurt? I'm afraid I can't do anything about that if you are, but perhaps I can assist you in getting out of here.

Axel propped himself up on his side, dazed from the pistol-whip, and tried to look at the short white creature standing over him. The gun had struck him directly over the eye, and the skin above was torn open and bleeding, making it virtually impossible to see out of his right side. He managed to focus on the hand the creature was holding out and hesitantly reached up to take it. At least it's not me he's throwing around... "I'm doing great," Axel wheezed as he was pulled up, hissing in pain as he straightened. His stomach felt like it was on fire, blood seeping through the ragged strips of his shirt. "Jesus..." He sucked in a breath and looked down at the reptile-type animal that he now towered over. He thought about asking who... what he was, but that could wait for later.

Nodding, Axel limped across the floor to where Lupis had dropped the gun, his trainers splashing in the liquid. "I'd appreciate the help. This whole thing's gone to shit..." Wincing, he bent to pick the weapon up then called over to Lily. "Come on, we're getting out of here, Lily." He looked at where Lupis had been thrown. "You're coming with us," Axel snarled.

Aaron looked around to make sure there were no cameras. He swallowed. The noise that Marcus's assault had made was masked by the sound of laborers stacking crates and other goods.

"A bit more violent than I would have preferred but hey, it works. Now let's scram before someone sees us!"

As the duo made their way to the parking lot, they were unaware that the assault and theft had been caught on camera and some guards were already en route.

Soren took a deep breath of the grimy Lanthae air as he burst through an emergency exit with his shotgun in hand.

Seeing as he had a little bit of time, he shoved a small piece of metal into the doorjamb. He smiled at his handiwork but the shouting and curses of the enraged Purifiers reminded him that he needed to keep running. A bullet ripping through the door narrowly missed him as he ran towards the front gate.

After a full-out sprint, he met the others in a deserted roadway. Bits of industrial detritus lay along the disused factory road. He bent over, hands on knees as he tried to catch his breath.

Lupis hit the wall with a crack and the sound of breaking bone rang out sharply in the air. He hit the ground in a pool of his own blood. He wasn't moving.

Lily darted to her feet in fear. The orange gecko had demonstrated extreme power but little loyalty, and for once parasite and host were in agreement that they wanted nothing to do with this creature. Hissing and baring their teeth in a show of force completely ruined by uncontrollable shivering and unmistakable panic, Lily skittered backwards into the furthest corner of the room to get as far away from the surprise guest as possible, retracted claws feebly bared in front of her face.

As they exited the tunnels, Tony could see much to his relief that the security detail usually posted outside wasn't present, most likely because they had been recalled to deal with the threats at the base. He moved out onto the street, and headed for his parked car and trailer. Reaching the Pierce-Arrow shortly after, Tony threw open the door to the trailer. "Axel!" he called to within. "Axel?" Looking around, the ferret could see the Travelodge trailer was completely empty. "What?" he asked, looking around. "Where are they? Why would they leave? Have... have we been betrayed?" he asked, glancing around the small space.

"Dammit! They aren't here! Neither of them!" he said, stepping out of the trailer now and slapping the side of it hard. "Dammit!" Leaning his back against the Travelodge, he closed his eyes, feeling tears welling up within them. Where were they? Anguish crossed his features as his arms pulled in close against his chest, the torment evident as the ferret tried to hold himself together. "Get Anne and Nairda into the trailer..." he ordered the others sadly. "Dammit..." he breathed again, attempting to get a grip on the situation. "Where the hell could they have gone to?"

The white gecko could tell the creature was irrationally afraid of him, but most non-sentient creatures probably would be, after seeing a display like that. After all, irrationality was why it was here in the first place, but of course the mutant gecko had no idea about that. Giving Lily a sad look now, he didn't approach her, but instead took a knee, bowed his head, and closed his eyes, making himself vulnerable to her.

"Apologies for the force I had to exert." he said softly. "I didn't kill him... and I'm still trying to figure out what I am... and why I'm here. I don't... understand this situation. I don't even know how I did what I did. I can only hope to learn as time passes. Forgive me. I let my emotions run away with me there, and it shouldn't have happened." he said, his tone even and calm, though there was sorrow in it as well. "You two should probably go." he said, not directly addressing Axel or Lily. "The wolf is in no condition to move. I can open the door for you if you want, but security will be swarming this place soon anyway, so I would make up my mind quickly if I were you." he stated.

Marita pushed Nairda inside the trailer then helped marie and rose get anne in as well. ' calm yourself tony'' marita said coming up to him. ''Axel would do anything to protect lily, you know that, i know that. the guys in love with her. i dont think he betrayed us, in fact i think he'd rather die than do that.. just a girls hunch' she said to him.

Marcus walked briskly back through the corridors leading away from the warehouse. Before they reached the main lobby, he saw a green sign above a door to their left - a fire exit. He gestured to Aaron and led them through it.

The pair stepped out into an alleyway, stretching along the side of Pelvanida. Marcus started to head off to the right, the direction that would bring them back to the parking lot. "Wish I could say that went easier than I expected, but..." Marcus' grumbling was interrupted by the sound of the fire exit door slamming open behind them, and footsteps sprinting up. "Hold it!" someone shouted.

Marcus stopped, a scowl plastered across his face, and turned slowly. Three security guards stood in the alley behind them, aiming taser pistols. "Put the toolbox on the floor, then kneel down and put your hands behind your head!" The one in the middle, a fox, commanded.

Marcus sighed then nodded at Aaron to do so. Kneeling down, he dropped the box on the floor then positioned his hands as instructed. The two guards on the left and right moved forwards, the one in the middle remaining where he was, training his taser on the two Purifiers. Marcus waited for the guard heading for him to get closer... then shot out a hand and grabbed his wrist. The guard squeezed the trigger, but Marcus forced his hand up and the electric dart sailed off somewhere above. In a fluid motion, he twisted the guard's wrist, feeling the snap as he broke it, then stood up and slammed an elbow into the nose of the man apprehending Aaron.

Turning his attention back to his guard, he grabbed him around the neck as a human shield and seized his taser pistol, bringing it up to aim at his hostage's eye. "Drop it!" Marcus shouted out to the fox. After a pause, the fox did as he was told, letting his pistol fall to the floor with bared teeth. Marcus shot him in the face with the taser, then snapped the neck of his hostage.

Axel stared down at Lupis for a few more moments, but the gecko was right - it didn't look like he was in any condition to move, and dragging him out was impossible. We could have used him as the new host for whatever's in Lily... "Goddamn it!" he spat, then turned around, leaving him to bleed. He crossed slowly to the door and ran his fingers along its edge. There was no way he'd be able to force it open. Axel turned to face the gecko uncertainly, blinking as blood ran from the gash on his head into his eye. "Alright, if... if you think you can get this open, do it," he said, wiping a hand across his face.

Passing the gecko, he headed over to the corner of the room where Lily was cowering, then knelt down to her level, grunting in pain. "Look, Lily... and.... and whatever else is in there," he started, feeling sick as he said it, "If we stay here, we will die. He's the only way we can get out of this room before they find us, so we're going to have to trust him. Okay?" He held out a bloodied hand to her.

Lily was not convinced; for one, she had no reason to trust this creature, and the only two things she knew about it were it's powers and its hair-trigger temper. To be honest, he reminded her of Kojurro, and she couldn't bear to travel with somebody that reminded her of him. The parasite wasn't helping; having followed it homing instinct back to this room, it held an irrational sense of security having reached it, and was not keen to leave or relinquish control of Lily's body.

At that moment, the door blew off its hinges, and Exstasis roared into the room. "Lupis!" He gasped in horror. "I'm sorry, I got distracted!"

"That's...quite all right John..." Lupis got to his hands and knees wincing. Miraculously, his back appeared to be only sprained now, and in real time the crack in his skull was slowly sealing shut, the flowing blood stopping of its own accord. "Make up for your tardiness by teaching Mr. Speicher what happens when he passes up a free chance to walk away."

Exstasis revved his saw to life. "You!" He roared. "Don't you dare think of harming Lupis! You'll pay for this!" Firing the cannon strapped onto the front of the saw, he bounded forward and swung the spinning blade in a wide arc at his foe.

(Purifier Compound)

Soren looked around the industrial road. "Hey, where's Lily and Axel?"

He then noticed Anne passed out on the trailer's floor. "Is she...dead?"

A groan and some faint movement from the unconscious mare indicated she was still alive.

(Pelvanida)

The elbow merely stunned the man apprehending him. But that was all it took for Aaron to throw a vicious uppercut that knocked the man unconscious.

The German Shepherd shook his head. "Well, let's get out of here!"

He kicked the remaining guard in the head to silence him and then bolted for where they had parked the truck.

"And what if I don't believe you?" Tony asked, glaring at her now. "What if this was all just a big trap? They could be coming for us next!" he pushed off from the trailer now, the pain he was experiencing worse than any he'd felt in a long time. "This was a mistake coming here... I never should've gotten involved in this!" He walked around the front of the car and opened the driver side door. "I'll drop you all off at a safer part of the city, and after that..." He was trying hard not to completely break down here. "I'm going back to my family. I never should've left them!" he insisted, sliding behind the wheel and turning the key in the ignition, bringing the big V-12 to life. Good! It hadn't been fried! Revving up, he snapped the Pierce-Arrow's headlights on. "Well? Are you coming?" he asked Marita.

Tony noticed Soren approaching, and shook his head. "I don't know! I was hoping maybe you had run into them at some point, but I guess not. I'm all for getting out of here right now! I don't know where they are, or if Axel was even trustworthy to begin with!" the ferret added, fighting back the tears. "Anne's alive... that pulse did something to her though... her augmentation." he sighed.

The gecko was snapped back into awareness by the bursting of the door behind him. His eyes widened as Lupis began to get back up. Impossible! But he didn't have time to contemplate it. The rhino attacked him immediately, and it was all the gecko could do to avoid it, making use of agility as he flipped to the side, turning in the air and landing back on his feet. "I have no quarrel with you!" he insisted. "I reacted to save lives! I have no intention of taking any today!" he ground his teeth. He was defenseless, with no weapons. A quick scan of the room indicated there was nothing he could use to remedy that. The cables from the ceiling would only stretch so far after all... and there was nothing on the floor that was of any use.

Pursing his mouth shut, the gecko thought fast as he dodged another attack by spinning away. He could only keep this up for so long before he'd start to tire out... he could escape, but that would mean leaving these two, and for some reason... something in him told him not to do that... but not like he really had a choice. He was trapped in this room for the moment anyway, and his life was now being measured in seconds as opposed to years, and there was barely any time to think on his feet as opposed to just reacting now.

its a little too late to back out now Tony' Marita said coolly. ' its too late for any of us to back out now.we're all involved in this, for better or worse.. if both of them are dead in there, thats one thing. we mourn their loss and get out to fight another day. but if they are alive, thats another thing entirely. reverse the roles for a moment. suppose it was you in there and me behind the wheel of that car. do you really think i'd drive off and leave you to your fate? what kind of a friend does that?' she asked.

Marcus snatched up the toolbox then followed close behind Aaron as they tore down the alleyway and into the parking lot. As they wound their way through the maze of cars, he looked back at the building and couldn't see anyone else following.

Aaron had the keys - when they reached the truck Marcus swung into the passenger seat and waited for him to start the engine, tossing the toolbox into the back.

Axel scrambled back as Exstasis barreled into the lab, the door flying across the room to slam into the wall. His eyes widened. He's the one who broke into Soren's home... how is he still alive?! A familiar voice from the side drew his attention back, and he gaped in horror as Lupis picked himself back up, the wolf's injuries healing before him. "What... what the hell..."

The mechanical scream as Exstasis started the saw snapped him out of his shock. The rhino seemed fixed on the gecko, so Axel scrambled to his feet and fired a shot at Lupis - but with his vision compromised, the bullet went wide and smashed into one of the empty tanks. The glass exploded, showering the lab with more green liquid.

Exstasis fired the cannon again, narrowly missing the geckos head. With no regard for tact he stomped forward, using offense as his preferred defense. With every step he swung the giant saw again.

The green liquid from the broken chambers stained the floor. The shot from the plasma cannon flew right at Lily. She screamed and tried to get out of the way, but slipped on the fluid...

And suddenly she was free. The plasma charge singed her upper body yet only collided with the wall above her. But it had fooled the parasite, who fled her body in horror.

Blinking and coming to her senses for the first time since Stracci manor, she staggered to her feet and stumbled towards Axel. She tried to call his name but a twisted squeak was all she could manage. I have to get Axel to safety...

The parasite, meanwhile, assaulted Lupis' mind, who reacted quickly and expelled it with his training. Shooting across the room, it attempted to implant and take over what it thought was the most powerful creature in the room...the orange gecko.

(Pelvanida Outskirts)

Aaron started the engine and drove off. He seamlessly merged with the dozens of other cars that milled about this ground level industrial zone.

"Well, let's hope everything goes better from now on." He noticed his pistol sitting in the center console. He chuckled. It was a miracle that his truck hadn't been broken into or a cop waiting by the vehicle to bust him.

(Purifier Base)

"Axel's my best friend. He would never do anything like that." Soren picked up his shotgun. "I'm going back in there and getting him out."

He then turned around and marched back into the base.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on March 06, 2014, 12:18:28 PM

Tony looked down as Marita spoke to him, and he sighed. "But we don't know... anything." he said now, shaking his head. "I don't even... but yeah... you're right. He really did care about her. And... he is my friend..."

It was then Soren decided to grab a shotgun and head back for the base. But why? How did he even know Axel and Lily were in there? "Uh... what the hell are you doing?" Tony asked, stepping out of the car now and calling over its roof. "You don't even know if they're in there! Last we saw them they were in this trailer! What if they're somewhere on the streets?" but Soren was already heading down the road to the base it seemed. "What the hell is he doing? He's going to get himself killed!" Tony said, shaking his head and sitting back down in the driver's seat. "For all we know, Axel and Lily could be on their way to Timbuktu!"

Shaking his head, he thought about what they could do, but what could they do? Going back into that base was suicide at this point. It was on high alert, and the Purifiers would be swarming anyone who would come back in. He sat behind the wheel of his car, then got an idea. "I'm gonna start circling the blocks!" the ferret suggested. "Maybe Axel and Lily are outside, and in trouble. If they are, I'm gonna look for them. I advise you get in if you want the ride!" Tony said before throwing the car into gear.

The Pierce-Arrow moved forward, and Tony turned onto the street that went around the perimeter of the base, hoping to find some trace of his friends...

Cavenaugh was patching his shattered shoulder up. He was gonna need extensive care, but for right now, he was all about killing these intruders. He was supposed to be the gatekeeper after all, and Tony had completely humiliated him! Hearing a report over his radio, he grasped it with his good hand and brought it up to his mouth. "What?" he demanded.

"Sir, it looks like that human who was in the exoskeleton is coming back!"

Growling, the Gila monster picked up an MP7. "Urrgggh I'm so sick of these assholes! All right boys! Let's go kill ourselves some trespassers! Head him off!" he shouted, heading for Soren's reported entry point.

Deep down below in the bowels of the facility, the gecko narrowly dodged another shot aimed at his head, starting to pant as he tried to think of something. Suddenly, something entered his mind... foreign and invasive, and definitely not indigenous. "What?" he asked, but there was another presence in his mind as well... the parasite would quickly find that Vergil's (the gecko's) mind, despite being mostly empty, was in fact a very crowded place. There were things that simply didn't belong in there, and how they'd ended up there was a mystery.

Vergil had to focus though, and suddenly, an idea struck him. He had no idea where this inspiration came from, but time seemed to slow as he noticed Exstasis sloshing through the fluids on the floor. That was it! Leaping up onto the tube he'd broken out of, he yanked off one of the wires that led into its base. A single thought later, and Axel and Lily would've found themselves thrown off their feet and out of the puddle of fluids as they slid across the floor. It wasn't a hard landing, nor a particularly hard push, but it would save their lives.

Once the two were out of harm's way, the gecko tossed the now live-wire down into the fluids, and electric bolts were soon shooting all across Exstasis's body, frying every internal augment he had, and thoroughly cooking him as his flesh seared and even caught on fire in several places, his thick hide being no match for the amps coursing through it. As the rhino screamed and collapsed into a burning heap on the ground, Vergil gave him a sad look. "Forgive me... I'm so sorry..." He said softly, looking with regret down at the charred rhino. If only he'd listened to him... and where had he gotten that idea from, anyway?

Looking over to Axel and Lily now, Vergil nodded. "Are you two all right? I'm sorry I had to do that, but it was the only thing I could think of in that time." He halted his speech to see if that foreign presence was still there in his mind... it didn't feel like it... so perhaps it had fled?

"Where else would they be!?" Soren snapped as he paused mid stride. "This area's a deserted industrial zone!"

He then decided to route around the perimeter, hoping that the loading docks were unsecured and still open.

At this time, sirens rang out across the base as the Purifiers armed themselves and got ready for action.

Anne regained consciousness and rolled out of the couch she had been placed on. "Ugh, what happened? And why the fuck are my pants wet!?

She pulled herself to her feet and noticed a strong metallic taste in her mouth. Pouring herself a cup of water to rinse her mouth out, she examined her horn. No damage.

Axel groaned as he sat up, leaning on one arm to support his weight. He stared across at Exstasis' smoking corpse, then nodded at the gecko. "Don't... don't be sorry," he panted. "He had it coming. Thanks for not... letting us get fried."

He quickly looked over at Lily. "Are you..." Axel paused when he looked into her eyes and saw that they seemed different, clearer than at the Stracci mansion - more like the eyes of the girl he'd met only a few days ago. "Lily? Are you alright?" He got to his knees and clasped her shoulders, hardly daring to believe it. "Is it you? Just you?!"

Rhaegson's monitor flickered back to life, and he cracked his knuckles. He flicked the button for the announcer. "And we're back, ladies and gentlemen! I hope you all got some killing done..." One of the cameras situated on the outside picked up Soren as he wandered around the perimeter of the compound.

Exhaling, Rhaegson rested his chin on his hand as he realised it was the same man who'd sported the exoskeleton. Least he's man enough to stop using his little toy... "Looks like one of our friends is going on an easter egg hunt around the eastern side of our grounds. He's not in his suit anymore, so all of you take your balls outta your purses and kill him already." His voice echoed around the compound. As an afterthought, he added, "Why isn't he dead already?"

Lily panted as she got to her knees. The sudden knockback was unexpected...but she couldn't help but smile when she saw Axel standing before her. If only she could reply and tell him how happy she was...

Then she saw the wolf sneaking up behind Axel and her eyes went wide with horror. Before she could even cry a warning Lupis struck, raking his claws across the left side of Axel's head, aiming for the ear. At the same time, his knee dug into the rat's back; had his own back not been partially sprained it could have snapped his spine. His remaining fist buried itself in Axel's neck.

At that moment, Lily jumped to help, but she suddenly felt the all-too-familiar sensation of sharing a body; the parasite, unable to find a conquerable opponent elsewhere in the room, had returned to whence it came. Gagging for a moment as it remembered how to breathe, Lily could only watch as Lupis kicked Axel to the ground a second time and bum-rushed her.

Grimly Lupis turned to Lily, socking her in the face and grabbing her by the leg as he dragged himself towards the door. With his other hand, he held the long-abandoned pistol and fired a salvo at the gecko, though his aim was hampered by his many injuries. As he staggered out of the room, he shot out the security camera in order to trigger the silent alarm that would alert all guards in the area to check the laboratory. "I've had quite enough of this..." he muttered, though only Lily could hear him.

Tony nodded as he turned down a side street, keeping well enough away from the base's walls but close enough to see if anyone was moving about. "Yeah, of course All dad's cars are modified for great protection and resistance against attacks. We're relatively safe inside the Berline as is." he explained as he turned again, moving around the back of the Purifiers' base.

"With pleasure, boss!" Cavenaugh responded, and reached the loading docks, where Soren was heading. "Open up on him! Kill him!" Cavenaugh yelled, and soon, his team's fire was barking out, bullets whizzing in Soren's direction as the Gila monster lift his MP7 and painfully fired at the approaching human. His shoulder was protesting, but he quickly injected himself with a shot of an adrenaline booster, and felt the power pumping through his veins. "Yes... yes... YES! DIE HAHAHAHA!" he laughed maniacally, his pain subsiding as the drug coursed through him and sent him into overdrive.

His team were mostly covered behind large metal containers and crates, showing themselves sparingly as they popped out to fire bursts in Soren's direction.

Vergil was going to react, but suddenly, memories came flooding into his brain, threatening to overwhelm it as his mind was brought back... back...

He was standing on what looked like the bridge of a naval vessel. Big glass windows looked out onto the sea, and control stations with sickly green and orange lights abounded everywhere. In front of him, two creatures violently fought. One resembled him, but was different... this gecko had fiery red skin, and golden eyes, as well as feathers running completely down his backside. He was considerably bulkier than Vergil as well. Battling him was a lithe green female frilled lizard, and both appeared capable of the very talents Vergil possessed. Various bodies lay strewn around them. Some looked like the bridge crew, and others looked different entirely, wearing strange garb the gecko wasn't familiar with.

As the fight continued, explosions suddenly erupted all around him as the bridge began taking external fire from large caliber guns. The explosions began engulfing everything as the red gecko appeared to become very angry about something, screaming as the bridge became awash in flames. The hull of the ship shook as torpedoes slammed into her side, her innards groaning in protest as they were torn apart... and as the explosions moved to envelop him, Vergil's mind went black...

Blinking, Vergil came out of his reverie to see that Lupis was making off with Lily now. A shot was fired at him, but missed pretty badly. The gecko started concentrating, suddenly seeing something up above them as the silent alarm was triggered. Flipping off the platform he'd been standing on, he raced over to Axel now. "I don't know how I know this, but there's a car circling around the back of this base. It will pass a side entrance in approximately ten minutes. Your friends are in this car. If we hurry, we can make it! I know the way out... once again, I have no idea how, but if we don't hurry, security will be here soon! Can you walk?" he asked, helping the rat up as best he could.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on March 06, 2014, 04:12:50 PM

Axel coughed, choking as he tried to suck in a breath. Under the fur where Lupis had punched his neck, an ugly purple bruise was forming. The left side of his face was in agony, and as the small gecko helped him up he caught a glimpse of his reflection in the glass of one of the tanks. Lupis' claws had sliced deeply into the side of his head, blood pouring from the wounds. His left ear had been cut apart, leaving behind a torn, ragged mess.

He brought his attention dully back to the gecko, his eyes glazed with shock... then let a whistling gasp out as he realised Lily wasn't there. "No! Lily... where..." he managed, pulling away and trying to rush towards the lab entrance. Axel's back screamed in protest and he stumbled, falling back to his knees. From somewhere further up, there came the faint sound of shouting, boots rushing towards their direction.

"You're in no condition to go after her. I'm sorry. We're getting out of here!" Vergil replied, steadying Axel as he gazed at the wall. "Hmmmm..." he could hear security heading their way, so narrowed his eyes, and soon, the wall in front of them was being crushed, and crumpled inward. On the other side of it, there was a service tube that led straight up to the street, and a convenient staircase nestled inside the tube. "It's the fastest way out: if we go out the main door, we'll run into security. Come on! I'll help you!" the gecko moved at Axel's pace, starting up the staircase to the street. He could hear the Purifiers behind them, shouting things like "they went this way! Hurry!"

Huffing, the gecko was surprisingly strong for his size, and while not able to outright carry Axel, he was at least able to support him and kind of drag him along every so many feet. Shots rang out behind them, but Vergil quickly moved them up to a landing where they were covered before ascending the next flight. "Come on! We're almost there!" he urged Axel, steadying him and holding him up as they began the final ascent. The guards were pretty much firing blindly at this point, and their shots hit the concrete of the stairwell on the landing below them, doing no harm.

Vergil focused intently on the service exit ahead at the top of the stairs, and the door flew off its hinges, its lock snapped like a piece of bread. Panting, the gecko hauled Axel out onto the street, and just in time, too. Headlights played over the both of them, and the sound of an analog engine could be heard rapidly approaching.

Tony saw the rat and some strange gecko like creature in his headlights, and he honked and excitedly exclaimed "It's Axel! He's alive! Yes!" Breaking the car to a halt with a slight squeak, Tony reach over and opened the passenger side door. "Get him in!" he ordered. "Where's Lily?"

"We don't have time." Vergil calmly informed him, pushing Axel into the middle seat as he slid onto the passenger side. "She's been taken, security is right behind us... I suggest you go and go fast."

'Uh... wait... who are you?" Tony asked, confused as Vergil shut the door.

"Vergil... Vergil Speicher... I'd press that accelerator if I were you." he said, still calm as Purifiers began pouring out the service entrance.

"There! In the car!" one yelled, and raised his weapon to begin firing.

"Oh, shit! Hold on!" Tony yelled, and slammed his footpaw down, the massive V-12 of the Pierce-Arrow roaring to life with a throaty rev that echoed off the abandoned buildings all around them like an exploding firework as the car rapidly took off. A few bullets hit the side, but they did no more than bounce off the beautiful exterior as the Pierce-Arrow accelerated like a drag-racer and zoomed down the street, the ferret quickly able to push the car up to over 100 mph, even with the trailer. It rocketed past the buildings at blurring speed, the Pierce-Arrow quite literally having the best V-12 out of any in existence from its competitors at Packard, Lincoln, and Cadillac. They left their pursuers behind in the literal dust, and while Tony slowed the car down to take the corners, he didn't lift much from the accelerator at all. He was in pure fight or flight mode now... and flight had taken over.

Soren cursed as a bullet nicked his head. There were just too many Purifiers for him to fight. He cursed himself for being so rash.

The metal dumpster he was using for cover wouldn't hold forever. In desperation, he shot a large tank over the loading dock, praying it was filled with something flammable or toxic. Or at the least, it was part of the factory's steam system.

He was in luck, it was the steam drum for the factory's plumbing. As hot steam roared out of the hole, he quickly bolted for the road, hoping that the huge white cloud covered his escape. Nevertheless, several of the guards fired through the cloud. Most of the shots went wide, but one grazed his ear.

Hopefully, Tony and the others had not left him.

Lupis dragged Lily down the corridor, repeatedly kicking her in the face to prevent her from coming to her senses in time to use her powers or even get a grip what was happening.

"Sir!" yelled one of a pair of guards rushing his way.

"Get to the lab!" Lupis snapped, "Figure out what scientists are on the clock and get them over here! Tell them its an 808, they'll know what to do!"

"Sir, don't you need help with-?"

"Now, goddammit! I don't have time to explain!" Lupis knew that in an unshielded section like this hallway, the alien conscience needed only a split second to catch its senses and make another escape. With the puncturing of the shielded laboratory, he was the only thing stopping them from losing the beast they'd fought so hard to capture.

Lily meanwhile, who was unable to even shield her face as it skidded along the floor, was sobbing openly as Lupis kicked her broken nose over and over. Various debris littering the ground was lacerating her side as she slid on top of it, leaving a trail of her own blood staining the laminated tiles.

As the guards double-timed it, Lupis flung open the door to a regular laboratory and threw Lily onto the table. Flicking all the lights off and slamming the door shut in order to startle her yet again, it had the side effect of hiding the disgust on his face from what he was about to do. But while studying the creature in its natural body, its brain waves seemed to associate a particular human emotion with mortal danger, and the best way to keep it contained was to trap it in his own mind until the scientists could come with the sedation...

Strapping her onto the experimenting table, Lupis jammed two fingers between her legs. Lily howled in pain and thrashed wildly. He rammed her most sensitive orifice again, and again. As he suspected would happen, he soon felt the parasite probing his mind, attempting to warn its host of what was happening to her. He allowed it. For as long as he kept this up, it wouldn't think to flee the premises entirely.

But it might be best to kill her after this... he thought grimly. It would be more merciful than letting her live...

Below him, Lily was thinking same thing.

Axel jerked as Marita held the handkerchief against his head, breath hissing between his teeth. The pain wrenched his attention back to the situation. He looked around at the others in the car desperately. "Lupis, he... he jumped us... he's got her, he's got Lily! Oh god..." Axel moaned, his voice breaking. He suddenly punched the dashboard. "Goddammit!"

In his distressed state, he didn't notice that Soren wasn't with them.

Cavenaugh cursed as the steam enveloped much of his team. Pretty lucky shot to pull off with just a shotgun! "Boss! That human's beating a retreat! Want us to pursue? I think he's on foot!" the Gila monster radioed in.

Another report reached Cavenaugh that on the opposite side of the base, two intruders had escaped in some kind of vintage car, but the car had roared on out of there at high speed, and security hadn't had time to scramble out their own vehicles in pursuit. "Well whatever! They're gone is the important thing!" Cavenaugh radioed to the team on the other side of the compound. They were at least dispatching some patrol vehicles to scour the surrounding area for the car, so that would take care of that.

Tony didn't slow the Pierce-Arrow yet, just in case they were being pursued. It didn't look like it, but he wasn't taking any chances; he was ensuring the car lived up to its name. The moment he slowed the car down, he knew he risked being overtaken by potential pursuers. The Purifiers weren't stupid... they'd be sending out vehicles after all; it was standard protocol. They needed to put some distance between themselves and the base before they could relax.

It was thus that Tony brought the Pierce-Arrow onto the highway, and eased off the gas just a tad, bringing the car back down to its more comfortable cruising speed of 80 mph. "OK... we'll get to the city... find a safer part of town, and regroup." he said, sighing with a modicum of relief. He knew they weren't out of the woods yet, and every second he expected to glance out the side-view mirrors and see Purifier vehicles behind him. His heart was still racing, and he turned to look at Axel as he squirmed, then punched the dashboard. "Hey!" the ferret exclaimed. "Watch it! The interior isn't armored, after all! But... I'm glad you're alive." the ferret concluded gratefully. "I'm sorry that they got Lily... what happened, anyway? Why didn't you stay in the trailer? Look we just need to calm down, OK? And yes, stop moving; let them look you over." Tony advised. "We have a med kit in the trailer, but I can't stop right now. You're gonna have to wait till we get back to Lanthae proper. I figure we could head to Soho or something, it's much safer. Anyway... what happened? Who's... that guy?" he asked, looking at Vergil briefly.

"I can't fully answer your question, I'm afraid. But I'll let the rat explain first. His story's longer, after all." Vergil replied, looking out the window at the bright city lights as they approached the city center.

Rhaegson grimaced. "No, I want you to throw him a party. I'm thinking cake and balloons," he said, his voice pure sarcasm. "Of course I want you to kill the son of a bitch! Make it quick, we don't want to draw any more attention that we have already." He sighed and rubbed his jaw. "But if he gets to the main road, forget about him. I don't want a shootout on the highway."

Axel fought to control his breathing. "It... we were doing what we said we'd do, just waiting in the trailer when all this shooting started. Lily got scared and ran out... right into the Purifier's place. I tried to catch up with her but I was too slow, I... I screwed up..." He looked at the others in the car helplessly. "Why was there shooting? I thought we were meant to do this quietly?!" As Tony overtook a car in front, the vehicle jolted slightly and Marita's hand pressed painfully against his ear. Axel cried out, and his elbow knocked into Marie.

He straightened back up in the seat. "Sorry... I'm sorry," he apologised to Marie, then carried on. "I managed to follow her in and found her in some kind of... a lab, or something. At the end there was... jesus, I don't what the hell it was. A monster in a glass tank. Lupis found us there. He told me that monster's mind had managed to get inside Lily - that's why she's...

she's changing." He sucked in a breath. "Lupis attacked us. This..." Axel looked down at the Gecko. "...Vergil was in one of the other tanks. He broke out and helped us but Lupis managed to get away with Lily. I only got away because of Vergil."

Axel's hands tightened into fists, a faint whirring coming from them. He gritted his teeth and nodded at Marita. "I'm going to get her back. I don't know what the hell they're going to do with her, but they need her alive, at least for the moment. Gotta just... just think of a new plan..." Axel grimaced. "I know this all went to shit, so if I'm on my own I'll... I'll understand."

As he slowly looked around the car, he noticed Soren wasn't there. "Where's Soren? He in the trailer?"

first things first, you need to get patched up' Marita said kindly. ' you're not saving anyone with your ear in pieces and a huge gash over one eye.. we'll help you get lily back, but we need to be much smarter about it.' marie gave Axel a few tissues to wipe his eyes and hold against the gash over his left eye ' no need to apologize Axel. we know you mean well' she said.

"Well the plan fell apart the moment Soren jumped the gun and busted in through the front door. I thought we could use it as a distraction, but it didn't work out that way, because noisy never works out that way." Tony said with some disgust. He listened to Axel's explanation, and groaned. "Ugh... so that's what happened? Damn... I'm sorry... and hey! No! You aren't on your own in this! Hell no!" the ferret shook his head. "We're in this together, remember? You aren't fighting this fight alone! We'll get her back! We will!" Tony said with determination, glad he finally understood the mystery behind Lily North. Turns out Lupis had been all bullshit after all.

He heard about Soren being mentioned, and Tony suddenly realized they'd left without him. "Oh... shit! You're right! I wasn't really thinking if we had everyone back when they were shooting at us! Well... then again he did blow me off and try and run back into the base with nothing but a shotgun to save you." Tony couldn't help but laugh here, but realized it was probably a serious situation, so he quickly stifled it. "I knew such a plan was suicide, but... like I said, he wouldn't listen to me. And my phone's fried so... I can't exactly call him." Tony pointed out. "Chances are he's dead but... if he's alive... ugh! Why did he go off like that?" Tony snapped in frustration, slapping his paw against the steering wheel.

"So what's your story, anyway?" he asked Vergil now, trying to work things out in his head.

"Not much to tell, as said. I don't know how I ended up in that tank, who I am aside from my name, or how I acquired these... powers." Vergil stated, not demonstrating right now. "I must've been a naval officer at some point though... I have a distinct memory of witnessing a fight aboard the bridge of some ship. Wish I knew more than that." he sighed.

"So you basically have no memories at all?" Tony asked, incredulous.

"Barely, yes." Vergil confirmed with a murmur.

Tony let out a long exhale as he exited into the Soho district of Lanthae, and bright lights once again flooded the car's interior as there was neon everywhere. "So we're missing two of our own... our mission failed... Lupis alive... and we've gained an amnesiac... what are you, anyway?" he asked Vergil.

"A mutant, apparently. I've apparently seen another one of my kind in the past, but other than that, I can't tell you just what I am, or whether they did this to me to make me look this way."

he shrugged.

Tony pulled over into a parking spot on the street, and was thankful they were away from all that mess. This was a much safer area of town, where the rich played day and night. "OK... let's get that med kit out of the trailer and get you at least patched up." Tony said softly, shutting the engine down and exiting the Pierce-Arrow to head for the trailer. Opening the door, he noticed Anne was up and moving about. "Oh, hey Anne! Glad to see you're awake! We had to get you out of there really quick, but we did it!" Foraging around in one of the cabinets, the ferret retrieved the med kit, and hopped out of the trailer, holding it out for Marita to take. "You seemed like you knew what you were doing, so knock yourself out!" he suggested, resting his back against the side of the Berline and folding his arms across his chest, looking out both ways at the traffic on the street. "We gotta regroup..." he said now. "See if Soren's still alive... and get Lily back." he commented softly to no one in particular as he studied the lively city.

He had parked in front of one of his favorite malls, knowing it was a safe place to lie low until they could figure out where to go from here.

"Yeah, yeah!" Cavenaugh muttered back, a bit pissed his boss was such an ingrate, but oh well. Time to get this show on the road! "Bring out the APC!" he ordered, and within a minute or two, the armored vehicle was rolling towards the loading dock's gate. "You better run little man!" Cavenaugh shouted after Soren, and climbed aboard as the APC rumbled off and onto the street Soren was retreating down. Cavenaugh was mindful of his orders... only pursue as far as the highway... yeah, yeah. Plenty of road until then.

"Open fire! Let's shred this guy!" Cavenaugh ordered, and the big .50 cals on top of the APC opened up now, spraying bullets in Soren's direction, though the human had gotten a head start, so he was a bit of a ways ahead of them.

once we patch up axel here we head back to pick up soren.. yes its dangerous, but heyy, we dont leave anyone behind.. use my phone and call him' marita said handuing it to Tony.. then pulling out the gauze and padding in the first aid kit. this wasnt an ordinary first aid kit ether, it was a mini surgery kit. there was stitches and thread and sterile utensils ' Remind me to thank your dad' marita said to tony as she got out the stitches and thread. ' now grit your teeth Axel because we dont have much sedative, and i'm going to be sewing your ear back together. it will have to do until we can get you to a hospital' she said. marita began the slow bloody process of repairing axel's ear.

"I think you forgot." Tony said, pushing Marita's phone away. "You were right next to me when that pulse went off. Your phone's just as fried as mine is." the ferret stated. "I'm gonna have to buy a burner one for now I guess." he said, looking up at the mall. "I bet I could find one in there." he pointed.

He listened to her comment, but shook his head. "I'm not going back on a hunch. We need to know he's alive. Right now that base is on high alert. Going back... we all die. I'll think of something." he sighed. "As said, might go inside the mall... see about getting a phone. Give my dad a call... have him send me one... I dunno. Let's get Axel taken care of first." he said. "We aren't going anywhere if he risks reopening his wounds."

Axel ground his teeth as the needle pulled the ragged strips of his ear together. "I don't have time to go to a hospital. Lily doesn't have time. We need to come up with a plan, get ready, and act."

He stared down at the floor. "If we're going to go back, we need firepower. Guns. I didn't see as much of the fighting as you guys, but I could tell they were stocked up. They already have the numbers on us, the least we can do is start to level the playing field in that area." Axel paused and moved his head slightly, glancing at Tony. "Unless we can make up for the numbers too... Tony, I know your dad said he didn't want to get his people involved in a fight with the Purifiers, but what about if he knew how much danger you'd be in?"

Soren flicked some blood out of his eyes as he made his way to an access road.

He then felt the ground rumble. "Fuck me, what now!?" It was then he heard the distant chatter of .50 caliber machine guns - and they were coming closer.

He looked around for a car. It was then he noticed a 2026 Fisker Karma parked on the side of the road next to an abandoned electronics factory. The fact that it was rocking gave a pretty good hint as to what the occupants were up to.

He dashed for the car and noticed that a Ferret and a Wolverine were having sex in the passenger's side.

He tried the door. It was locked and the couple were oblivious to him. Heart pounding, he smashed the driver's window with the butt of his shotgun.

"Get the fuck out now!" he ordered, leveling his shotgun at the two.

The couple disentagled themselves and raised their arms up as they tumbled out the passenger's side.

"Give me the keys! Now!" The Ferret tossed him the keys, which he pocketed.

He pointed to the direction which he had previously run. "Run that way! If you look back, I'll fucking kill you!"

The couple obeyed and ran. The Human stashed the shotgun on the passenger's side as he reached over and closed the door. He started the motor and sped down the access road, hoping that he was heading towards a highway.

Tony couldn't help but smile at Axel now. "Heheh... I don't think my dad works that way, Axel. He's testing me... he wants to see if I can do this on my own. But sure... it wouldn't hurt to ask... but I'm 90% certain I know what his answer's going to be." He pushed off from the car now, and looked up at the large shopping mall. "Anyway... I'm gonna go shopping for a phone, and grab a bit to eat. I'm starving. Anyone up to joining me?" he asked. "We all need new phones after all."

Vergil slid out of the car, narrowing his eyes at the shopping center. "I guess... it couldn't hurt to see what this world is like." he said hesitantly.

"Don't worry... you won't stick out that much... even with your current disposition." Tony smirked.

Soren outran his pursuers, who halted once he started getting close to a highway. Screeching to a halt, the APC withdrew to the base without further incident.

(Lanthae Highways)

Soren sighed as he wiped his forehead. He had just committed a crime. His heart pounded as he merged onto an elevated highway and continued driving with the flow of traffic.

He silently prayed that the cops were too busy dealing with other things as he had nowhere enough creds to bribe a cop and a failed bribe was worse than no bribe at all.

He then browsed through the car's stored memory. On a whim, he pressed Lanthae Heights Mall. He leaned back as the car's autopilot took over.

(Lanthae Heights Mall)

Anne nodded as she followed the group. She was uncharacteristically wearing a rather sensual looking orange cocktail dress. Granted, it was something that she had found in the trailer but was better than the stained pants she previously had on. She sent a mental command to her horn to see if she could eavesdrop on any interesting radio waves.

She gasped as nothing happened. "Great, I need to go see a internal cyberneticist. My implant's fried!"

Her stomach growled. "On second thought, let's eat first." She looked at the map. "Anyone for takeout noodles?" The mare pointed to a small takeout place on the map labeled "Mizuho Noodles".

All around her, various well-to-do people milled about, flaunting jewelry or the latest in personal electronics and cybernetics.

Axel paused, then nudged Tony on the shoulder. "I'll catch up with you." Limping back to the trailer, he climbed up and made his way over to the notepad that lay on the table. He swallowed as he looked down at the message Lily had written for him before, then gently tore it out and picked up the pencil. He scribbled out a new message, then tore that page out too.

Soren - in shopping center. Looking for new phones. Find us.

Stepping out of the trailer and closing the door, he slipped the paper under the windscreen wiper of the car. It was a long shot, but if Soren was still alive and had managed to escape, the vehicle was distinctive enough to be easily spotted across the car park. He exhaled, praying that his friend was okay but suspecting that he'd never see him again, then made to catch up with the rest of the group. Getting something to eat was the last thing on his mind, but he knew they needed to clear their heads and refocus.

Axel approached Tony and Vergil and looked down at the gecko. With all the damage he can do, we're going to need him with us... "So you... you were just kept in that lab?" He looked at Tony. "You never knew anything about him?"

Title: Into the Black

Tony saw Anne exit the trailer, and had to admit... with that dress on, she didn't look half-bad. He never really thought he'd go for equines, but she was looking pretty good in that dress. Damn...

Smiling, he turned and led the way into the mall, looking at the directory and nodding at their suggestions. "Yeah... I'm gonna get some Indian myself... chicken makhani's one of my faves, after all." the ferret said, licking his lips as he thought about it.

Vergil nodded at Axel's question. "Yes... I was in that tube... I don't know for how long, or where I came from before that... but the resonance of that pulse woke me up. I think they may be responsible for why I look the way I do." he stated, shaking his head. "I'm too bizarre to be natural."

"Nope." Tony shook his head. "That room was for the higher-ups and science guys only... constantly sealed, and not for the likes of a newbie like me." he commented in regards to Axel's question. "I never knew they had... live subjects in there." Tony said. "If I had... I guess solving Lily's mystery would've been easier."

They had descended into the food court now via a moving walkway, and were surrounded by food stands everywhere for those customers who couldn't be bothered to sit down for a two-hour meal. "Oh... right." Tony said now, remembering something. He dug around in his pocket for his wallet, and pulled out some credits. "You uh... probably don't have a lot of creds on you right now... so here." he offered a few to Anne, and gave a few to Vergil as well. "You don't have to worry about paying me back." he said sincerely. "It's the least I can do."

Looking at the Indian place, Tony went over, placed his order, and found a table that was big enough for the others. He poured the chicken makhani over his rice, and let it cool off for a only a few seconds before eagerly digging in.

Vergil was a bit slower, wandering around and looking at all the choices. He didn't even know what he liked in terms of food, so finally settled on some Vietnamese pho, a rice noodle soup. One dish sounded as exotic as the next to him, so he figured why not? Sitting down quietly, the white gecko began sampling the dish, finding it spicy but rather delicious at the same time.

Axel started to walk over to the others, then stopped when he saw the looks he was getting. He glanced down at his torn shirt and grimaced. Axel could see there was a cheap clothing store just outside the food court. Signalling to the others that he'd be back, the rat made his way over, looking for something to hide his bedraggled appearance. Grabbing the cheapest thing he could see, a plain grey hoodie, he handed over the credits and noticed the alarmed look the cashier was giving him. "I, ah... fell off my bike," he explained weakly. The cashier cocked an eyebrow.

Leaving the shop, he pulled it on and zipped up the front to hide the bloodied shirt, then headed back to the group. Sliding into a seat at their table, Axel hunched over the surface and drummed his fingers, trying to think what their next move should be.

Can always heat it up and have it later, heheh." he suggested. Noticing Axel wasn't eating and instead seemed to be lost in thought, the ferret looked over at him.

"Aren't you gonna have anything?" he inquired. "I can treat you if you don't have any credits." the mustelid offered. "We don't know when we'll eat again, so maybe you should get this out of the way while we're stopped."

"Yeah, you're right," he said, accepting the plate from Marita. "Thanks."

Axel took a bite, not really tasting it. He looked around at the others. "What happened to all your phones?"

"The pulse also fried all augments." Tony stated, waving his fork a bit. "Meaning Nairda's out cold, and Anne must've only just recently woken up." Thinking back on what Axel had said, Tony gulped down some more chicken.

"One thing you mentioned Lupis having said has got me thinking." Tony added thoughtfully. "All we have to do to save Lily is try to kill her, and that'll force the consciousness out of her, right? But it'll flee to another host so... who's going to be the host?" he asked now, looking around. "We can exactly force this into someone innocent, after all. I don't remember if you said this, but is there a way to force it back into its own body without it moving into anyone around it? I was a bit more focused on the road at the time when we were driving to the mall." Standing up as he finished his meal, the ferret stretched out, pulling his arms up above his head and uncurling his tail behind him. "I guess we'll buy some phones and talk on the way to doing so."

marita finished her slice and packed away the leftover pepperoni and cheese pizzas. 'alright everyone lets go get those phones' she said as she carried the pizza boxes. 'i dont think its as simple as trying to kill her tony, we'd need a host ready to replace Lily. easier said than done imo."

Axel took a last bite of his pizza slice and let it drop back on the plate, then stood up, glad to be moving. "I don't know," he said, keeping pace with Tony. "From what I could tell, this thing inside her is like some kind of wild animal backed into a corner. You can't tell what it's going to do." He shook his head. "Lupis said something about him being able to resist it and... I think he was probably telling the truth. If it wasn't for that, we could have forced him to do it and hope it went into that bastard, but..." Axel sighed. "We could try and force it back into its own body but whoever did that would be in danger of the thing just going into them. Forcing Lupis to do that somehow would be the best case scenario, but I don't know how we could get him to do it... or even if getting close to him again is a good idea," he said, indicating his face. "We'll just... We'll deal with that when the time comes," Axel exhaled quietly, already knowing what he'd do if it came to it.

The group took the walkway up out of the food court, and in the distance a shop sign poked out above the heads of the shoppers milling around, screaming the name Cyber Cell in bright neon blue. As they started to make their way over, a huge, round man eating a hotdog barged his way through them. "Watch it, morons!" the behemoth yelled over his shoulder.

Axel looked down at Vergil. "Here's where your weird superhero powers could come in useful," he said lightly.

Emilena breathed under her breath, feasting her eyes on the scared young woman whose hand was trapped by her meaty fist.

"If you don't scream, I'll kill you afterward rather than before..." she whispered throatily into her prey's ear. She could already feel herself getting hard in anticipation.

As Lily's cries were muffled in Emilena's ham-sized palm, they were interrupted by someone leaping onto Emilena's back and whacking her in both temples simultaneously.

Sparks erupting in her vision, she threw the intruder over her back and stumbled. Before she could even get a good look at the scrawny white rat, pain erupted through her abdomen as Lily blasted her at point blank with her own shotgun.

Emilena was abruptly in a white-walled laboratory, standing at attention by the door. A heavy shotgun, much more advanced and high-tech than the last one, rested on her shoulder and in the butt of her hand.

"This'll only be a minute, John," her partner Lupis said apologetically.

"Don't worry about it," she smiled. "Always happy to help you out."

"If only these blasted scientists held a similar attitude..." Lupis muttered acidly. Without further ado he marched over to a group of whitecoats staring at clipboards in front of an unsettling creature in a tank.

Emilena didn't like to look at it; it looked like it was asleep or dead, but even from here she could tell its muscles were primed. It seemed to be masking incredible agitation.

Emilena shuddered and looked away. At least she was safely over here, not being involved. Lupis always handled the unknown better than she did.

But something in her mind wouldn't stop thinking about that creature. She tried to focus on Lupis, who was aggressively demanding information on the security features of the room. She liked to look at Lupis when he worked, it calmed her. But right now her thoughts of him kept getting pushed aside.

Maybe I can convince him to relax tonight with some beer, she thought, idly swiping her security card to open the laboratory door. He needs some stress relief, he hasn't spent a night in our bed for over a week...

Abruptly Lupis snapped his gaze over to her with a speed that made her jump. "John. What are you doing?"

Emilena looked with surprise at the security card in her hand. "I--? I don't know? I was just..."

"Close the door. Now!" Lupis snapped.

Emilena made to shut the door, but hesitated. The thought of the creature made her pause. Why couldn't she stop picturing it?

Lupis was by her side in the blink of an eye. Faster then the human eye could track, he made a swipe for her security card, but she flipped it into her sleeve. He drew his own, but she moved to block him.

"Get that door shut!" Lupis yelled at the scientists, but they were frozen with fear.

"Lupis...what's happening?" Emilena asked, worry crossing her face. She couldn't control her body.

"It's in your head!" Lupis said urgently. "You've got to fight it! Don't let it control you!"

"Oh, god..." Emilena cocked her shotgun and fired it at the tank housing the creature. As the scientists ran for cover, the body tumbled to the floor. "Lupis! Make it stop!"

Emilena tried to run, but Lupis tripped her and slid her into a wall. Swiping his security card, he closed the laboratory door. "Activate the hazard frequency!" he snapped at the scientists. Only one found the courage to move, but he soon lost it when Emilena fired clumsily at him. Her head was spinning. Where was another way out?

She and Lupis spotted her ticket to salvation at the same time; the computer terminal. Leading through that wall were the wires connecting the computer to the network. Integrity will be weakest there.

Lupis blocked her. "Fight it John!" he snapped again. "You're a government agent you fucking idiot!"

She smacked Lupis upside the head with a ham-sized left hook. "I--I'm not you Lupis!" she cried. "You were always--"

A gunshot cracked out; Lupis had assumed a crouching stance and shot her in the thigh. The gun quavered slightly and aimed at her other thigh, a crippling blow. But the hesitation gave her the chance she needed. Not even understanding how, she sent Lupis flying away from her, hitting the wall with a sickening thud.

As the scientists cowered in the corner, she ripped the computer from the wall and found the origin of the cord. Outside, she heard guards attempting to batter down the door.

"Stop!" Lupis shouted into his radio, staggering to his feet and stumbling forward. "Don't break down the door! That's an order!"

He shot her again. And again. She staggered, but the intruder in her mind gave her the strength to keep standing. Raising her fist, she punched the wall repeatedly until her bloodied and broken fist had cracked it.

She felt hot fangs sink into her neck; Lupis was attempting to sever her spine. He knew where the weakest and most sensitive part of her neck was...

Emilena collapsed to the ground obligingly. Her breathing didn't come easily. But it was gone, she could tell. It had abandoned her. "Lupey..." she whispered weakly.

Lupis surveyed the extensive damage to her body with intense alarm. "You worthless fucks get me a medical kit or I swear to god I'll kill you where you're cowering!" he shouted at the scientists, who collectively found the sudden motivation to follow orders.

Emilena could feel it; this was the fight she couldn't win. "You were always better than me, Lupey..." she saw blackness cloud over her vision. "...better...at hiding your thoughts..."

"Don't talk," he commanded sternly. But her last sight was his worried face. He was crying. He never cried...

She tried to raise her arms, to touch him, but it was too late. At least she tried...

Abruptly Emilena woke up in a cold sweat. Breathing heavily, she staggered out of bed, mind reeling. In the bathroom she splashed cold water on her face, but no amount of shock could wipe the dozens of deaths she'd just experienced from her memory.

She smelled the unmistakable aroma of bacon and eggs coming from the kitchen, but she locked her bedroom door instead and sat silently on the edge of the bed. She needed to think about everything she'd just seen, digest it. She needed it all to make sense...

Vergil merely looked up at Axel now as he suggested he do something as mundane as trip up the large man using his... powers. He frowned here. "To use my powers for something so petty and self-centered... no... it wouldn't be right." he shook his head here. "Ugh... I don't even know why I feel that way... I just do." he sighed, shrugging. "Where did this honor come from? I-I remember... I remember..." He closed his eyes, stopping in his tracks as he tried to focus, the bustle and din of the shoppers around him making it difficult. "Being a soldier... of some sort. I don't think it was too long ago." he said, reopening his eyes and moving to catch up with the group. "For some reason, I feel I've been told by someone that my powers make me no better or worse than anyone else... and they're not something to use lightly like that."

"Odd.. you think it was your military training?" Tony asked. "I can't imagine they'd teach something like that after all, given how the previous wars have gone." he shook his head here, entering the shop. Walking up to one of the many kiosks, the ferret selected the model he wanted, scanned his card, then headed to the front desk to pick it up. The system was very efficient, and Tony was even able to choose his old number to be transferred to this new phone, along with all of his previous data. Picking up his new phone from the guy at the front desk a few moments later, the ferret took it out of the box and inspected it after he turned it on.

"OK... well looks good. Good thing my previous phone was still under warranty; I only had to pay a replacement fee. That's all sorted. Guess I'll call my dad to give him an update, and we can get out of here. Any thoughts on where to go? I highly doubt you want to just approach the Purifier Base again without a more solid plan." Tony commented.

Vergil marveled at this rather speedy technology at how one could order a phone. He didn't pick one up for himself because he didn't see the need, nor have the funds. He thought about what Tony had said... about how previous wars wouldn't have fostered such a mentality as he suggested. They must have been rather brutal conflicts, in that case. Closing his eyes again, he tried to focus. Flashes entered his mind now, some glimpses of childhood... parents... enlisting in a military... joining the 'good' fight... yes... it was all coming back now. He had been in training... but how had he ended up in that tube? But then... there was war... a war they weren't winning...

Suddenly, his thoughts were jarred by flashes of that red gecko again, the wicked looking one with the golden eyes. He was standing before this creature, who was addressing a body of troops... but his eyes were different. They weren't quite so wicked looking. They were arrogant perhaps, but confident as well. "I don't care how controversial it is! We have to resort to merciless tactics because our enemy is just as merciless! You've all seen it! We won't win this war unless we play by their rules! We're losing this war because we're being too predictable and too honorable! I say the hell with honor! We fight to end this war now! There's nothing wrong with 'moral shortcuts' if it means we'll bring an end to this damn conflict! I'm fed up with the tactics of the past! If you follow me, I promise you... victory will be swift and decisive. They will remember us as the greatest warriors of all time, and we will avoid extinction! Follow me, and your samples of victory will turn into permanent tastes, I promise you this!"

"Mmmm..." Vergil opened his eyes now, his brow furrowed. This red gecko was clearly key to his past... but who was he? And more importantly... was he still alive?

Axel was chewing his lip thoughtfully. "Well, for a start, Tony, you could tell us everything you know about the base. All the ways in, how well guarded they are, any secret ways into that building that they think we don't know about." He looked at the ferret. "We've got to use the knowledge you have of that place as much as we can, and come up with a strategy that way. If they're holed up there, it's not like we can just charge in, we'll be cut to pieces... Even if we have one of the X-Men with us," Axel said, glancing down at Vergil.

"We'd also need to find a way to get some better weapons. From what I saw, the Purifiers were packing some heavy duty guns - We need to try and match them there as best as we can. But I, ah... I don't actually know where we could get those." He turned his attention to Anne. "I... don't suppose you'd know someone who'd supply us? I mean, you're, uh..." Axel picked his words carefully. "...Streetwise, right? Or I guess we could see if your dad would help us out there, Tony, but from what you've told me that'd probably be a dead end."

"Finding more people to help us is probably a good idea too, like I said. Even if we have the best guns in the world and solid plan, there's still only a few of us and a whole army of them." Axel shook his head, frustrated. "But I have no idea how we'd deal with that, either."

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on March 10, 2014, 08:38:00 AM

"The guns are already covered, remember?" Tony asked. "We're packing serious firepower in the trunk of my car and my trailer, since my dad already provided us with kind of the 'standard package' in addition to everyone's personal requests. So we're good on that front. Now then... in terms of the base itself... there are some entry and access points that are typically not well guarded... but now that we just attacked them, security's going to be tight everywhere. The best modes of entry are the service tunnels and hatches, since that place used to be a factory and is chock full of them. They're always kept open as evacuation routes should anything happen to the base." the ferret explained.

"In terms of more numbers... my father wouldn't commit to something like this unless he was certain of victory. Sparking a drawn-out war with a group that has nothing to do with his family is both unwise and not financially sound. He would want it to be over swiftly because otherwise, it'd just turn into a drain on manpower, finances, and resources. The Purifiers haven't exactly crossed him either, so he has no reason to wage war on them; my father is a very retaliatory kind of guy. You leave him alone, he leaves you alone." Tony outlined.

"So if we're gonna do this... we're gonna have to make sure we take out the Purifiers as a whole, including Rhaegson, if possible. A good way of destroying the entire base is restarting those old reactors that powered the whole place. The Purifiers use a different power source now, but if you overload those things, they have the potential of leveling the whole location."

"You're talking about wholesale slaughter?" Vergil piped up here.

"Well... yeah, probably." Tony nodded. "They're terrorists who kill innocents all the time. Only real way to get rid of them is to kind of wipe them out." He shrugged here.

Vergil had to admit, these tactics sounded like the ones the red gecko would use, and he wasn't entirely comfortable with it, but he saw no clear alternative at the moment either.

"So yeah, our weapons are covered, I can take you to some entrances which will probably be less heavily guarded if guarded at all, and the numbers issue well... I doubt I'm gonna get my dad to agree to any support, so we'll probably have to look for alternatives on that front, but I suppose I could pitch it when I speak to him." Tony concluded.

"I'm not sure we'll need the numbers." Vergil spoke up now. "The careful application of superior tactics can ensure victory against any foe. One must only look for openings, opportunities, and weak points, and capitalize on them." He noticed the others looking at him now, and he looked down shyly and shuffled his feet. "Yes, well it was... just a thought. But I feel with a carefully planned approach, victory is not impossible. One thought that occurred to me was that this place is large, and a former factory. That means their manpower is stretched, and they won't be watching places that are no longer in use. You mentioned the reactors... I doubt these are guarded, yes?" Vergil inquired, and Tony shook his head to indicate they weren't. "Well this factory must be full of such places. It's like any base that's not tailor-made as a base, really. You man only the posts that are worth manning, and ignore the ones that aren't." the white gecko pointed out. "Right there you have your first weakness."

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on March 10, 2014, 11:33:42 AM

Axel nodded. "Alright. The reactors sound like the best... or, so far, the only way to get rid of that place for good." He glanced down at Vergil. "Trust me... these guys have it coming. But we'd only start it when we know we can get Lily out of there. Not before." Scratching his bandage, Axel looked back at Tony. "Are you sure they wouldn't be guarded though?" he asked. "If they're really that powerful, there's a good chance they know it too. And if we manage to turn them on, I'm guessing they wouldn't exactly be quiet... which is where some extra man power could come in useful, keep them from swarming us..."

Axel shrugged and shook his head. "But, I don't know... I mean, I'm not exactly a tactician. You two have more experience with this kind of thing, so I'll trust you." He paused. "We should probably think about whatever it was that got Anne and Nairda and messed up your tech. What did you call it? A... a pulse? Whatever it was, we don't want them to throw that at us again."

guys, this sounds .. well nuts' marie said ' we have to be practical about this. we would have to get lilly out then blow up the reactors, which would well likely result in a chain or explosions destroying the compound and most likely everyone in it.. we would need to be well away from there by the time they blow up..how exactly ae wwe going to pull this all off.. ' i could try and hack into thier defenses and turn them against them' Marita said," that would buy us some time..

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on March 10, 2014, 04:10:33 PM

"That's easy." Tony responded to Marie. "As I already said... we overload them. That requires them building up to their critical point first... which takes time. Once we turn them on, it's not like they just explode as soon as that happens. We set them to past their critical point, and have plenty of time while they build up to that. Of course, we should do that probably around the same time we plan to free Lily. To answer your questions, Axel..."

Tony looked at Vergil. "I think he's on to something here. No, it's not very heavily guarded, because no one ever goes in there, and it's in a relatively deserted part of their base. If we destroy all the controls for it, it'll prevent them from shutting it down, meaning we don't even have to be in that room anymore to watch the reactors. We can be off doing our own thing and rescuing Lily."

Vergil's eyes widened at this. "And on top of that, what are they going to be doing when they discover the reactors are on and building up? To add even further to what you said, Axel, they'll be running for their lives. Evacuating... creating the perfect cover for us to get uh... Lily" he said, remembering her name "out of there. It'll also mean minimal opposition, for every guard that tries to waste time stopping us will be thinking in the back of their minds... 'if I don't leave soon, I'm dead.' The power of self-preservation trumps menial guard duties every time." He chortled here, folding his arms across his chest.

Tony smiled, snapping his claws. "Exactly! It's perfect! We sow panic throughout the base, giving us the cover to withdraw without interference, and we're out of there, no problems! Only problem I see..." Tony began. "Is getting past the more heavily guarded parts to the more lightly guarded deserted areas. Also avoiding that pulse again and locating Lily... those are the only real challenges we face, in my opinion. We have to find a way in without tipping them off... which I can sort of do, find a way to negate or outright stop that pulse from going off, and then ensure we can find Lily as well."

"I... might be able to help with the latter. I found I was able to glimpse a few minutes into the future... while I still don't fully understand how I can do this or if it's controllable or not... I'm just saying might." Vergil put in.

"Yeah kind of a long shot if you don't fully understand it yet, but hey, it's something to keep on the back-burner, for sure." Tony nodded here. "Anyway, how's that sound so far to you, Axel?" the ferret asked.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on March 10, 2014, 06:08:51 PM

"I think it sounds crazy," Axel said, shaking his head. "If a couple of days ago you'd told me I'd be having these kinds of conversations, I'd have called you insane." He looked up at them and, for the first time in a long while, grinned. "But then again, a few days ago all I did was sit on my ass and fix computers."

Axel stood up a little straighter. "It's a plan and... I think it could work. I mean, as long as those reactors give us enough time to get the hell out of there before they blow us into next week." He already felt better knowing they were starting to come up with a plan of action... and a way of getting to Lily. Axel knew he'd either find her, or die trying.

"Getting access to where Lily's being kept could be a problem too," he considered. "The lab they were keeping her in before was pretty... heavy duty." He looked at Vergil. "You can back me up on that. They'll have moved her, and I doubt it'll be to a place we can get into easily. If worst came to worst Vergil could probably take a few walls down, but... I mean, that would bring us all kinds of attention."

Axel crossed his arms thoughtfully. "Maybe we could get our hands on a guard while we're there... find out if he knows anything." He looked at the others. "But we'll cross that bridge when we get to it. Nothing we can do for the moment." He looked down at Vergil. "It's a long shot, but you can't remember anything about... I don't know, any other labs in there?"

(Lanthae Heights Mall)

Anne was walking along with Tony and Axel. She said nothing, the silence inside her head from her disabled implant was making her profoundly uncomfortable.

"Why not lure them somewhere with a fake tip or something? I used it a few times to fuck with the cops," she piped up as she noticed a Lanthae Police Department repulsorcar landing in the parking lot. At the same time, she moved a bit faster to get out of the window so the cops didn't see her.

Soren parked his car and carefully hid his shotgun in the compartment under the rear seat. He looked around for the distinctive Pierce Arrow and the trailer. He soon found it near the front of the mall and approached the vehicle. He knocked on the door.

"Hey guys?"

(Purifier Base)

Aaron's truck pulled up to the completely mangled front gates of the base. Bullet holes and spent casings littered the ground.

"The fuck did we miss?" Aaron asked as he got out of the truck.

Nairda, unconscious in the back of the truck, lolled his head against Soren's window, jostled from Soren's knocking.

The scientists finally arrived, over fifteen minutes after Lupis had called them.

"What in god's name took you all so long?" he snarled angrily. He looked on the verge of pouncing them.

"We were in the reinforced bomb shelter for our own safety!" one of them explained hastily. The scientists quickly sedated Lily, who relaxed unnaturally into a fitful sleep.

The scientist grew silent as Lupis withdrew his bloodied fingers from Lily's crotch.

"Let's get her in a tank..." Lupis muttered, making eye contact with nobody.

A few minutes later, the two guards from before leaped to attention as Lupis and his scientists entered the room. "Sir, we reset the blast doors in place, but their mechanisms and locks were completely demolished," one started. "It can fully seal shut though."

"--That's not structurally sound enough," one scientist said. "We need a full construction team immediately to fix them to flawless perfection!" added another.

"Belay that," Lupis cut them off. He was looking elsewhere; at the mangled body of Exstasis in the center of the room. "I'll need a few minutes to debrief my science team. Please assemble the construction team, but do not return until I order you."

After the guards left, Lupis walked over to the sealed blast doors and made sure they couldn't be opened. "At a brisk run, it takes five minutes to reach this lab from the bomb shelter..." he muttered.

No reply.

Lupis shed his bloodied outer coat. "It takes five minutes! Four minutes-and thirty seconds less than the time it takes to activate the hazard frequency, I might add..."

"We were...scared!" one of the scientists blurted out. "We heard shooting! We passed bodies!"

The scientists were beginning to get nervous. Lupis walked to the security system monitoring the room and turned it off. Then he removed his pants and shoes, revealing sharpened claws retracting from the pads of his feet.

Then he struck. The scientists' screamed and most got the chance to run, but the room was only so big. Savagely, Lupis tore into exposed flesh and quickly-exposed bone, systematically murdering them one-by-one, herding them like sheep away from the intercom or security system monitor. In minutes, the bloodbath was over, and the panting, feral wolf was the only man standing.

Panting, Lupis slowly returned his breath to normal. Straightening up, he replaced his outer clothing and walked to the intercom. "Bring in the construction team," he sent to the guards, and then contacted Rhaegson. "We've got her. I'm sorry to report she relapsed after we got her into the laboratory, and murdered the science team. But I'm more than capable of doing the tests myself. The hardest part is finally over."

"Oh there's also a bomb shelter." Tony stated, remembering now. "But it was meant to protect against a nuclear strike somewhere else in the city. A direct explosion right on top of it from the reactors and it'd be gone, cause those things would leave a crater probably a mile wide. As for our time window... I'd say it'd take about 30-40 minutes to reach the critical point, so that gives us time."

They were starting to wander back to the car now, but Tony didn't feel like leaving the mall just yet. He noticed Anne shying away from a window, and saw the cop car outside. "Hmm..." He moved more towards the shops now, pretending to browse so as to stay away from the windows.

"I... do know there are other labs in the facility." Vergil said slowly. "I got some brief flashes of them when I sensed your friends driving around the perimeter in their car. Must be what they call 'remote viewing.'" Vergil added.

"Pretty impressive, but yes, there are standard laboratories that I know about." Tony commented. "They're relatively easy to find, so she's either going to be in one of those, and that's convenient cause they're all clustered together, or that secret one you escaped from, if she's not in the cell block. Worst case is they moved her out of the base but... let's hope that hasn't happened." He listened to Anne's idea here. "Well it's worth a shot. Could give them an anonymous tip and see how they react. Might lure some away at least." Shoving his paws in his pockets, he acted like a casual shopper as they made their slow way back to the street the car was on.

"I might be able to detect if they've moved her. She was a psionic, like myself, and I was able to get a good read on her. I should be able to detect her again if I'm in proximity. Not sure how close, but it's there on the table now." Vergil put in.

"Then that's that problem solved." Tony replied in a relaxed fashion.

Marcus looked around as he climbed out of the truck, eyes narrowing as he focused on the spent casings lying on the ground. A engine rumbled behind him, and he turned to see Cavenaugh driving up in a truck loaded with a 50 Cal. gun. "What the hell happened here?" he shouted across to him.

Rhaegson frowned. "She wiped out the science crew? There's no survivors? Damn, that's..." He stopped as Lupis confirmed that he could finish their work. "Yeah? Well, that's alright, no harm done. You had me worried there for a second," he said, relaxing visibly. "Make sure our little mutant freakshow doesn't try anything else. I've already lost a few men just earlier, I don't want to lose any more. 'S bad for business."

He glanced down at his watch. "Well, well, would you look at the time," he said, stretching his arms above his head, the movement causing his joints to pop. "I'd say it's about time for me to show my lovely face. Just get on with your part. I want that bitch prepped as soon as you can."

"You... you can sense that kind of stuff?" Axel asked Vergil. "Alright... Alright! I think this could actually work!" he grinned, starting to feel hopeful again. We're coming Lily... Above the group, a huge screen was suspended from the ceiling, hanging over the bustling crowd. On the screen, a cheerful animated squirrel was advertising a new brand of hazelnut cookies. "If we just..."

He trailed off when he noticed the image on the screen start to flicker, static playing across, the sound of the advert cutting out. At first, through the grey fuzz of the interference, Axel could just about make out a shape moving around. Then, all of a sudden, the static vanished.

In place of the advert, a small, unkempt man was standing in a grey room, the image grainy. Hanging on the wall behind him, a black piece of cloth was hung up, with a red cracked gear symbol printed on it. Axel's heart skipped a beat. The Purifiers... The man's hands were shoved casually into the pockets of his denim jacket, and beneath dirty blonde hair that hung over his face, his eyes glinted savagely. Axel's own eyes widened in confusion. A few shoppers had noticed the change as well, and, like him, were pausing to look up. Axel heard a raised voice, and he glanced across the mall to a television shop on the other end. The same image was on the screen of all the TV sets he could see. His tail curling nervously, the rat returned his gaze to the big screen above them.

The man grinned. "Hello, Lanthae," he said, his voice booming through the mall. "I hope you're all having a pleasant day. You don't know me, but I know all about you... I know that the city is full to the brim of so called 'citizens' who've decided to pollute their bodies with machinery, with bits of metal, circuits..." The man's smile vanished, his expression twisting. "Turning yourselves into freaks of nature..." He paused, and after a second his jovial expression returned. "Well, let's not get ahead of ourselves."

By now, most of the shoppers were looking up at the huge screen, or the smaller monitors dotted around the mall. A few feet away from Axel, the obese man who'd barged through them was staring up, a half eaten burger now hanging from his hands. "Who's this guy? What's he playing at?" he demanded.

"If you don't know who... or, what I represent by now," the Purifier continued, indicating the cloth behind him, "Then... well, you're a fuckin' moron."

The fat man looked down dejectedly at the ground.

"The reason I'm here now is to offer a heads up to some, and a warning to others. There's going to be a few changes coming up. Some... most of you probably won't like them. Unfortunately, that doesn't really mean a damn. The Purifiers have spent the last few years cooking something up. A weapon. Most of you will have heard of something called an EMP, or an electromagnetic pulse. Fries all computer circuits, electronics... you get the idea." The Purifier paused, his predatory smile spreading even further across his face. "You all probably get where I'm going with this."

"In exactly 24 hours, we'll be launching an EMP bomb with an... extra ingredient to give it a little more oomph. Believe me when I say it's radius'll be... impressive. Any augmented who are watching this, don't bother trying to run. You won't be able to escape. Any augmentations you have will be destroyed, and you'll be left significantly worse for wear. We have agents planted everywhere, waiting for the countdown to reach zero. And once it does, they have orders to execute every single augmented they come across." He chuckled. "And therein lies the warning. You're all fucked. But nobody can accuse me of not playing fair. Now, then, for the rest of you. As long as you stay out of our way, you won't be harmed. As long as you don't fuck with us, we won't fuck with you. Hell, go ahead and take out a few augmented yourselves. We'd sure appreciate it."

The man lowered his voice. "And you're going to want to earn some brownie point with us. Because while some of our forces are dealing with that, more of us are going after Lanthae's government. The government which just so happens to place so much importance on augmentations for their defense." He cackled. "Bad move, boys. And once we've accomplished that, any who've tried to get in our way will be dealt with. Just a little something for all you normal, pure folks to think about."

He leaned closer to the camera, brushing aside the hair from his eyes. "Well, that about concludes our time together. For now. Take care! And remember, it's open season on those freaks!" The expression on his face darkened suddenly, and the pitch of his voice lowered. "Have yourselves a ball," he growled. The image on the screen suddenly flickered off, and was replaced by the tail end of the cookie advert. "They're the nuttiest!" the squirrel exclaimed.

The crowd gathered around started looking amongst each other, suddenly speaking again, a cacophony of confusion and fear. Axel looked at the group, suddenly aware of his augments. "Was... he couldn't be serious?"

Cavenaugh sighed. "It's a long story... we were attacked by a bunch of augment freaks, and Tony was helping them! They were after... well who knows? Lupis I guess. But we beat them back and well... couldn't get any of 'em, except that monster freak that wolf has been after, so I guess that's pretty big." Cavenaugh grumbled. "The hell you been doin?" he asked now.

Tony looked up, his face contorted into a frown as he watched the broadcast of Rhaegson, his old boss. "Ugh... can't believe I used to work for this jackass..." Tony muttered, his eyes going wide as the announcement was made about the EMP being used to fry the entire city... and about the hunt that would begin afterward. "Of course he's serious!" Tony snapped when the broadcast ended, clenching his paws at his sides. "He doesn't screw around, you know that! But he's going after the government too? What kind of..."

Suddenly, his new phone rang. "Ugh! What now?" the ferret demanded angrily as he pulled it out and saw his father's name on the screen. "Oh... uh..." He hit the answer button. "Dad?" he asked.

"First off... thank god you're alive. Second... did you see that moronic broadcast just now?" his father asked.

"Uh... yes, sir." Tony nodded.

"Wonderful people you decided to join, son." his father growled. "But we'll talk about that later. Listen... this is a serious crisis, and I'm not standing for it. Two reasons why: Threatening the government is seriously stupid. You fuck with them, you fuck with the mob, because the government pays us... all of us... protection. All five families have their hands in this pie. Two, it would destabilize the city and cause economic chaos... which would be bad for business. Most of the families also invest in the augment business, so perpetrating mass murder and government unrest is simply not tolerable. I'm going to give Emilio Barzini a call here after I'm done with you, and suggest an emergency meeting of the Five Families. We almost never agree on anything, but this... I think we can agree on. We'll crush those fuckin' Purifiers like the bugs they are. Launch a combined assault... the government may be relatively impotent to do anything about this, but we aren't. I wasn't originally going to help you... but this changes things." Don Stracci stated. "They just made this personal."

"Oh!" Tony stammered. "W-well... that's great!"

"No it's not great... I don't like having my paw forced... but what choice do any of us really have? By the way... you find out more about Ms. North?" he asked.

"Well... yes, we did." Tony added. "Lupis, dad... he's even worse than I thought."

"Figured. He's helping these whackjobs. Do me a favor... kill that stupid son-of-a-bitch, will ya? Any business prospects I had with that moron are now out the window. A Purifier body will be discovered within the hour in a very public place... and what we do to him won't be pretty, trust me. Too bad I don't have any higher-up Purifiers on my payroll... otherwise, Rhaegson would be getting a bullet in the back of his head within the hour as well, but don't worry about that. War is messy... dirty... should only be resorted to as a final push but... this is that final push. Where are you now?" his father inquired.

"Uh... L-Lanthae Heights Mall, in Soho." Tony responded quickly.

"That's Don Cuneo's territory. All right... I'm sure he'd provide you protection for now if you need it... you didn't ding my Berline, did ya?" was the next question.

"No! Of course not, dad! It's fine." Tony said softly.

"Good. I take it you failed your first try, eh? Well the thing about a Stracci is that he never quits. You get back out there when you're ready, and try again. This time... you'll have five armies at your back if I have a say in it." Tony felt himself smile at his father's words. "Anyway, I gotta give Don Barzini a call. I'll talk to you later." His father hung up now and Tony lowered the phone from his ear as if in a daze.

"Uhhh... well... I think we just solved our manpower issue... or rather, the Purifiers solved it for us. They just pissed off the mob by threatening the government... and you don't just piss off the mob and get away with it. My father's calling an emergency meeting of the Five Families, and he plans to publicly execute a Purifier within the hour in a... gory fashion I'm sure." he said, still not letting that smile die, suddenly feeling giddy all of a sudden. "This is... this is great!" he exclaimed, his smile turning into a happy grin as he looked at the others.

"Such an injustice will not be permitted to stand. Wholesale slaughter of innocents is the mark of cowards." Vergil stated, narrowing his eyes now.

"Yeah well... they made the wrong move in this chess game, I guess. Great news, eh?" Tony reiterated.

A refined British gentleman in a crisp suit and a blonde mustache walked up to the group in the mall. "My good sirs, would you be interested in a free shoe shining from Cockfosters Curios?" he handed Tony a gift certificate. "Free on this glorious birthday of Dr. Dorothea Wilmut, rest her legacy!"

The certificate had a logo of an O bisected by a claymore, and the motto "Caveat Astrum." Both would be familiar to Tony as the calling cards of Don Cuneo, Stracci's ally in this part of town.

"If you're interested, you need only follow me..." the gentleman added.

After much pondering, Emilena had pieced enough of what she'd witnessed in her dreams together to start drawing conclusions. Lily was clearly the linking factor; it appeared to have been every person who died in her vicinity since...a completely unrelated experiment escaped the Purifier base. She was capable of putting two and two together.

And that last flashback, as unpleasant as it had been, made her realize something. Something huge.

She unlocked her bedroom door and saw her parents fornicating on the couch.

"Oh! Hehe, sorry..." Emile blushed as Lena darted off of him and snatched her bathrobe off the floor. Emilena sighed heavily. "Hi honey! We saved you some bacon--"

"I've got to go," Emilena said tersely. "I'll need an outfit and my katana. If you have small arms I could use those as well."

Both of her parents were silent.

"I thought you said..." started Lena, bathrobe hanging forgotten from her hand.

"This is more important than me or you two," Emilena cut her off. "It's about a woman in trouble who deserves a second chance far more than I ever did."

She strode past them into her parent's bedroom, ignoring the dozens and dozens of every conceivable sex toy in existence, and scrounged for a clean set of Emile's farming coveralls and tool belt (she tried not to think about the complete lack of locatable clothing for Lena.) She helped herself to a flashlight, M1911 pistol, and a trowel for a makeshift bludgeoning weapon. When she returned to the living room, her parents had a backpack packed for her, with food, survival gear, and her retractable katana clipped to the strap.

"We Kibagamis can't resist being the heroes, can we?" chuckled Emile.

Emilena donned the backpack. "Trust me, I'm anything but."

Lena ran her paw along Emilena's face. "We're both so proud of how you've grown up," she smiled, tear running down her cheek. "And we're so glad we got to see you. Please come visit us again, when you can..."

Emilena stifled a recoil from her touch. "I...If the chance presents itself, maybe..." She regarded her parents one last time. For all their flaws, it was clear they loved each other. "This trip went...differently from how I expected, I'll admit."

She turned and started walking away.

"Oh, Emilena!" her mother called after her. "Last night, you occasionally mentioned a friend named Nairda...could you tell us a little more about him?"

Emilena paused and looked back. "I...he's just this fox who thinks too highly of himself. Has a flair for the dramatic, and too touchy-feely for his own good. I've wanted to stab him multiple times, but unfortunately he helps me in some...less than public ways I occasionally need."

She couldn't grasp what part of her description warranted the fitful chuckling bursts her parents were both stifling.

"He...sounds like a keeper!" grinned Emile, and then couldn't manage to force another word out.

Puzzled, Emilena continued her trek towards the city, until her parents and their farm was a blip on the horizon.

Back in the mansion, the Doktor jumped up and started waving his arms when he heard who the don was speaking too.

"Gutendag freiulein, vould it bee possible for me to conwerse vis Nairda? I haff urgent beezness to deescuss vis him!!!"

Anne stared at the screen in shock. She ran her finger over her horn. "I...I...I'm gonna die," she whispered.

Her head suddenly swam as she flopped down on a nearby bench. "Fucking hell, I need a pill – or a few!"

Soren shoved his way through the crowd until he recognized Axel and his group. "Hey, Axel, Tony, what's going on?"

"The Purifiers," Anne said. "Wait, how'd you get here?"

"I carjacked someone," he replied. "Anyways, mind bringing me up to speed?" He sat down on the bench next to Anne.

"Soren!" Axel cried, "I thought you were... ah, well, you know. It's good to see you back," he said, clasping his friend's shoulder. Straightening, a worried expression returned to his face. "You... you didn't hear it? The Purifiers, they just announced that tomorrow they're going to launch some kind of... EMP bomb. Every augment in Lanthae's gonna get fried and then they're going to send their guys in to finish the job..."

He crossed his arms over his chest. "But now we have Tony's dad on our side. We can stop them, Soren. We can stop them and get Lily back!" Gritting his teeth, he added, "We've got to..."

Axel heard a posh British voice, and turned to see a well dressed man addressing the group and handing something over. "Ah..." he started, puzzled, looking uncertainly at Tony, who the man seemed to be focusing his attention on.

"Tony attacked us?!" Marcus snarled, feeling his blood boiling. If there was something he hated more than the augmented, it was traitors. On the phone he'd said he was with Kibagami... had he thrown his lot in with him?! For a moment, Marcus didn't say anything. Then he growled, "We'll deal with him later."

Holding up the toolbox, he continued. "We were finding the last parts for the weapon. Took longer than expected." He brushed past Cavenaugh, heading into the base, then turned. "Have your men sweep the perimeter, make sure there aren't any breaches in our defense, then increase the number of sentries on patrol," Marcus commanded. "If we've had a break in, and they didn't get what they came for, we have to assume they'll be back."

Marita turned as Soren joined then ' Soren! You made it out.. Next time, dont go rambo on us and charge headlong into a well-fortified building..that only works in movies..' she said. 'so now that we're all together, whats our first move? she asked.

Tony noticed Anne seemed spooked by the announcement, and he sat down on the bench next to her "Hey... hey no... you're not gonna die." he said softly, trying to reassure her. "My dad's getting involved now... as are the Five Families. We'll crush these guys before they have a chance to use that bomb... OK?"

He looked up as Soren shoved his way through the crowd. Well, well... how had he managed to locate them? Brightening up upon seeing him, Tony remained seated next to Anne for the moment. "Hey, Soren! Glad you're alive! Sorry we had to leave you... but when I picked up Axel, we were getting shot at, and you'd kind of walked off on your own so... we had to put the pedal to the metal." he stated. "Still... glad to see you made it."

It was then that one of Don Cuneo's men arrived and handed Tony his card, which Tony recognized immediately. "Oh! Well sure, we'd love the d... uh... his hospitality." Tony said, remaining purposely vague. "But I have a rather expensive car of my father's outside see, so I'd need to bring that, along with some hardware we're carrying." Tony said, knowing the man would understand.

He looked at the others now. "I was thinking maybe head towards Don Cuneo's, see what the meeting produces, and go from there?" he asked, looking from one to the other.

Axel shoved his hands in his jeans. "Yeah... I mean, if they'd actually, you know, let the rest of us sit in on a meeting like that..." He nodded and looked at the others. "Knowing what their plan's going to be would definitely help."

Around them, the crowd had started growing increasingly agitated, pushing and shoving one another, voices raised in panic. Axel glanced around, shifting nervously. "Maybe we should, ah, get out of here, guys... It's looking like things could get kind of dicey..."

The gentleman nodded. "Walk this way, please," he motioned them.

After a few pathways, he led them into the backrooms of the mall, away from the rapidly agitating crowds. "My apologies, but Don Cuneo cannot meet with you personally," he explained. "I am Hastings Bitparte, one of his most trusted agents. Follow me; there are known Purifier agents in the crowd, who no doubt recognized you."

(OOC: Anyone who wants to play Hastings Bitparte can; I'm releasing him into the public domain.)

Soren scowled but he realized that he more or less deserved it. "Yeah, I fucked up big time."

He then drank in the news of their ultimatum. "Great, what was once a simple arson turns into a city wide hostage situation."

Soren rubbed his eyes as he flopped down on a chair. Hastings had led the group insde the mall's staff room. A plain meeting room with grey walls, nasty looking upholstered chairs and bland motivational posters. A disgusting looking coffee pot amd a stained table rounded out the whole room.

He then turned to Tony. "That's good idea but I don't think us non-Family members will be allowed."

"Hey, Anne, what do you think?"

The mare was drinking some beer filched from the refrigerator. "I'll go look around the Night Market in Lanthae Square and see how people are reacting."

marita warmed up some of the leftover pizza in the microwave. the lightbulb in the microwave flickered on and off but the machine did its job otherwise and warmed the pizza. the pizza was tasty, and marita figured she would need all the energy she could get. " want some pizza Soren? We've got lots left. the girls and I ordered a large cheese." She offered as she sat down in a chair. Marie and Rose warmed up slices as well, being jostled by panicking shoppers gave one a fresh appetite.

Tony looked around at the small break room, and sighed, also shoving his paws into his pockets. "Well I don't mean sit in on the meeting. I could attend of course, but I just meant go to his place until some of the panic subsides, find out the meeting's results, and get on back to the Purifier base once the families start moving. Oh yeah, Soren, this is Vergil Speicher." Tony introduced Soren to the white gecko. "He was a lab experiment back at the base and helped Axel escape. He's got some pretty serious abilities, from what Axel's told me."

"Oh it's... nothing really." Vergil said humbly, giving a small wave.

"Anyway... I can't imagine we were being watched in the mall... but if we were, best get to the car and head to Don Cuneo's place. We have our overall plan for assaulting the Purifier base, and I think we should see that public execution soon of a Purifier as well." the ferret commented.

Poking his head out the door, Tony saw no staff in the corridor, and the way to the exit was clear. "OK... let's go!" he said, waving them on as he stepped out into the employee hallway. Walking casually down to the exit, the ferret popped the door open, looked around again to make sure they were in the clear, and exited out onto the street. He could see the Pierce-Arrow a little ways up the block, and he began heading for it.

"So this... Don Cuneo... he a rival or ally?" Vergil inquired.

"He's closer to my dad than the other dons, I'd say. He's on the level, from what I know. We don't implicitly trust him but... we should be OK." Tony explained as he reached the car, and got in behind the wheel now. Vergil waited for some of the others to choose their seats in either the car or the trailer before he entered.

At the Heights, Don Stracci was about to start the video conference with the other dons when that mechanical Doktor thing approached him. Narrowing his eyes, the ferret glared darkly at it. "You call me fraulein again... I'm gonna rip that head off and use it was a toaster for my daughter... understand?" he asked. "What the hell do you want, anyway? Talk to Nairda? I don't care what you want to do with that horny fox. I don't have his number, so you're on your own, I'm afraid. Now if you'll excuse me... I have an important meeting to attend." Don Stracci informed the robot, adjusting the cufflinks on his suit a tad.

It wasn't the don's job to contact others in Tony's group. If the Doktor didn't have their information that wasn't his problem. He paused before entering the conference room though, and turned around. "Look if you don't have his number, call my son, all right?" he asked, then slid him a card with Tony's number on it.

Cavenaugh watched Marcus head back inside. "Coming back? Yeah right... they wouldn't do that..." he murmured as he turned back around. "Ridiculous... he should know we can't possibly watch every access point. This place is too damn big." Sighing, he knew he'd just have to do the best he could. "All right you jerks! Spread out! We have to cover as much ground as we can! Those assholes might be back after all!" the Gila monster called.

"I phoned him but eet doesn't vork!" the Doktor admitted, tears welling in his German cybernetic eyes. "And 'Freuiein' means Friend, doesn't eet? Zat's how I've been using eet zis entire time!"

He jumped for joy when the don gave him the business card with Ton'y name. "Oh zank you freulein! Zis makes me wery happy!" He checked the time; right in the middle of dinnertime. Perfect time to call, and he quickly dialed the number and waited for the ring.

Emilena was just getting out of the woods when she heard rustling in a nearby abandoned farmhouse. Investigating, she stumbled across a naked couple shivering and looking spooked.

"Please, can you give us a blanket or something?" the male asked.

"The city is less than a mile east of here," Emilena looked scandalized. "What in the hell happened to you?"

"We were minding our own business driving along, when Soren Almaya held us up at a stoplight and commandeered our vehicle!" he explained

"How did you know it was Soren Almaya?" asked Emilena, alarmed.

He paused. "...I don't know. Lucky guess."

"Where are your clothes then?"

"We, uh...Soren wanted those too," the female shifted her eyes. "He admitted he was into cross-dressing."

"Does not surprise me in the slightest." Emilena threw them her blanket and whatever clothes she wasn't currently wearing. "There, but I'd appreciate if you tell me everything you can about where he went."

"Oh, the car's GPS is hooked up to a chip in my brain that lets me track it," the female explained. "I work at the Zwings Car Dealership, and was taking this man out for a test drive."

She rattled off the latitude and longitude of the car's current location. Emilena frowned. "I have no way of tabulating coordinates right now, but thank you for the information. I wish you both well."

She kept hiking. By sheer utter coincidence, she hiked all the way to the shopping mall where Soren and the others were! Then she hiked right into the parking lot where the car was parked!

But before she could notice the car, she quickly picked up the atmosphere was not that of friendly Saturday shopping. Yells and screams were breaking out as tensions rose, and some thugs had shoplifted items that doubled as bludgeoning weapons and were itching for a fight.

"Hey Girly, you an Augment?" sneered a particularly large one, brandishing the severed arm of a mannequin.

"No, but compared to you I could be Deep Blue, get out of my face," Emilena threatened. When he approached her personal space and opened his mouth to speak again, Emilena shot him in the stomach. "And never bring a bell sleeve to a gunfight," she spat on his writhing corpse, but the damage had been done. At the sound of gunfire, everyone in the vicinity went into "fight-or-flight" mode, and it quickly spread into the mall and beyond.

Hastings looked up at the increased sound of fighting and shooting. "Oh dear. It appears I got you out of there in the nick of time." He stood up. "I apologize, but all I had to say was that Don Cuneo has his own problems at the moment and can not help you in any fashion other than assisting your escape. However, he is prepared to offer you two of your father's spies, who he has graciously let live and are holed up in a safehouse just north of here, at 1002 Brady Shanty. A backalley doctor and a Chinese Triad enforcer, both good men when they're not reporting on your every move. If you wish to contact them, the safehouse is programmed to allow Tony and his friends access."

He led them down a set of stone stairs to a locked double door. "This leads to the parking lot; I wish you luck in reaching the car." He passed out Lugers to those who needed firearms, and unlocked the door. "And Tony; let your father know that Don Cuneo will not be able to attend the Council of Five Families either." This would be a major blow; Cuneo was Don Stracci's staunchest supporter. "We're sorry, but our current problems necessitate it."

Tony could see the mall was starting to break out in some sort of disturbance, so he sighed, and slid out of the car for the moment. "What problems?" he asked acidly. "What's more important than this?" he snapped, raising a paw. "Are you saying the Cuneos are having problems that's more important than the government collapsing and economic chaos about to erupt? I don't need that!" he angrily pushed the Luger away from him. "I already said I got hardware in the car. What are you trying to do, get me busted for accepting a weapon on the street? You should know better!" He had to raise his voice due to the increased noise breaking out around the mall.

He felt his phone vibrating in his pocket, and gave an exasperated grunt as he pulled it out. He didn't recognize the number, so he hit ignore and pushed it back down into his pocket. "Look, buddy!" he said, raising a claw to Hastings's chest. "Your don doesn't support this move, how good do you think that's gonna make him look if he turns down a request for aid from the other four families? Just what's this about, anyway?" he demanded. "And no... you don't get me to tell my father Don Cuneo's not attending... you can do that!" he exclaimed, pushing his claw into Hastings's chest now. "I'm sure my father's gonna be very interested to hear this... along with the other dons he's meeting with at this point in time."

Axel looked down at the luger in his hands, then nodded his thanks to Bitparte, shoving the weapon in the waist of his jeans and pulling his hoodie over it. Following Tony, he pulled level with him.

"So... these guys know what they're doing, right?" he asked anxiously. "I mean, if we do this wrong, I... I just don't want anything bad to happen to her. Lily won't be in any danger from them?" He stopped talking when he saw Tony and Bitparte were exchanging tense words.

Marcus stalked into the compound, and wound his way to Rhaegson's office, pounding on the door when he reached it. There was a pause, then Rhaegson called through. "Hey, take it easy on the door!"

The doberman narrowed his eyes in irritation and pushed the door open. Inside, Rhaegson was reclining in his chair, holding up a phone to his ear. He held up a finger and continued to speak into the receiver. "Yep. Good." Rhaegson eyed the metal box Marcus was holding. "I think the rest of it's here, so you're good to go. Get ready, the delivery boy's on the way." He hung up, and then turned to Marcus. "Those the amplifiers?"

Marcus nodded. "Took a few extra, just in case."

"Well, isn't that helpful of you," Rhaegson drawled. "Good work. Take them down. They'll know what to do with them."

A small smile played across Hasting's face. "Don Cuneo is...not in any position to be speaking to anybody. But I suppose his silence will be all the answer your father gets."

He backed away from the door and held the Luger in a more threatening position. "Consider your survival right now a repayment for my years of dedicated comradeship to the Stracci Family. Your father can call me, but if he holds the same attitude as you, this section of the city may be allying with the Purifiers..."

Tony's eyes widened at this. "I don't... believe this. What did you do to him you bastard!?" he demanded, grinding his teeth down. "You don't make threats like that idly..." He said, taking a few steps forward away from the car now before feeling something pressing into his backside. There was a hand on his shoulder as another human stood behind him, dressed in a long raincoat that seemed older in style. From the feel of it, Tony could tell it was the muzzle of a gun pressed into his backside. Glancing over his shoulder, he could see the man held the gun inside his coat pocket, concealing it from those around him.

"Tony Stracci." The man said in his ear. "You and I are going for a walk. Start moving down the sidewalk... in about 15 yards, a car is going to pull up, and you're going to get in. Say anything or talk to anybody and I'll kill ya, Stracci, ya got that?" he asked softly.

Tony was rooted to the spot at first, starting to tremble as he wasn't sure just what the hell was going on. "I'm insured against kidnapping... for a very large sum. This doesn't have to go this way." he said quietly in response.

"Shut up and move!" the man hissed, and Tony felt a jab in his back, and from this angle, he had a poor view of the car. He'd have to turn his head to look at it, and he wasn't sure he should be doing that. Being pushed forward, the man dropped his hand from the ferret's shoulder and simply walked behind him now, still holding the gun to his back. Tony's jaw trembled, but he noticed Bitparte seemed in no way to be part of this. In fact, the man didn't seem familiar from the brief glimpse he'd gotten of him, and Tony wasn't sure who this was.

"Don't want to wreck your raincoat... do ya?" Tony asked quietly as he counted the steps. He was probably about 8 yards or so from where the guy had said the car would pull up, and sure enough, there it was: a black, unmarked sedan that pulled in to the curb at an oblique angle, so that the black tinted windows were uncomfortably facing him. He tried to signal someway to the others, but the man was between him and the Pierce-Arrow now, and blocked off view in that direction.

Axel stared as Tony walked off with the man. He glanced at Bitparte in confusion, but he didn't seem to know any more about what was going on than he did. Turning, he took a few steps towards where the pair was walking, then froze as a black car pulled up suddenly by them. "Tony! What's... what's going on?" he called after them. "Tony?!"

Tony paused in mid-stride as he heard Axel, but was shoved forward once more by the man behind him. "Keep walking!" he ordered, and the ferret closed his eyes momentarily, wondering what he could do. He didn't have any further time to think, however. The door opened, and a man in a black suit motioned for him to get in.

"Tony Stracci... we have some business to conduct." he said, waving his fingers forward.

"What's this abo-" Tony began, but then cried out in pain as he was pistol whipped from behind, the butt of the gun smacking hard against the back of his skull, and causing his eyes to close and his body to crumple forward. Taking hold of him as he tottered, the gunman shoved him towards the door of the car, and hands began pulling the ferret in to their interiors.

"Go!" the man in the black suit ordered, and the sedan's tires burned rubber as the car shot backward away from the curb, pulled into the street, and started screeching off.

Axel stopped dead as he saw the man behind Tony strike him in the back of the head, and someone else drag him into the waiting car. His hands jerked up involuntarily. "Holy shit!" he gasped, started to reach back for the luger he'd been handed... but the car was already speeding away, and it wasn't like he could shoot out the tires.

Swearing under his breath, his voice shaking, he turned when he heard Marita call out his name. Seeing the Pierce-Arrow's headlights spring to life, he forced his trembling legs to start moving, heading back towards the car.

The sedan wasn't driving particularly fast, and instead, they proceeded at a leisurely 45 mph or so before turning into a large parking lot for a nearby office building about three blocks from the mall. The red brake lights came on, and the door opened as they rolled to a stop. Tony sailed out of the door and landed hard on the asphalt. He didn't appear to be very conscious. The man in the business suit stepped out behind the prone ferret, and grabbed the scruff of his neck, yanking him upward to a more or less kneeling position. "Get up!" He yelled, shoving his gun into the back of Tony's skull.

He then waited for his pursuers to catch up, and held the gun to Tony's head with steely determination. Time to end this game.

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron had a mag-rifle dangling from a sling as he stood in one of the watchtowers that ringed the complex. He also wore a HMD that looked like a set of glasses, giving him night vision, infrared, UV and telescopic vision.

(Lanthae Streets)

Soren hastily stuffed the pizza down his throat as he ran after Maria and the others. He leapt into the Pierce-Arrow's trailer.

"Fucking hell, I lost my shotgun at the mall," he said.

Anne drank a bottle of beer. "Knowing the shitstorm that's brewing, someone's probably already used it."

Soren drew the Luger from his pants pocket. Anne did the same, pulling it from a pocket in her dress.

"So what's our plan?" the mare asked.

"Full throttle action movie didn't work last time, so I'm thinking something more subtle. Like say, sniping the guys?" Soren replied as he sat on the couch and crossed his legs.

Anne's ears gently splayed to the side. "Okay, who's skilled enough with a rifle to shoot their target from about 300 meters away, kill them with one shot and not accidentally shoot Tony?"

Eyes widening as he saw Tony collapse out of the vehicle, Axel gasped when he saw the man drag Tony up and put a gun to his head. He turned to Marita and the others desperately. "Oh shit... shit!" He bit his lip, heart pounding. "Look, there's a... an intercom on the dash, use it to talk to Soren, come up with some... some sort of plan. Someone needs to go out there and talk to them, maybe I can... distract them or something..."

Swallowing, Axel cautiously opened the car door and stepped out slowly, keeping his hands in the air. "Wait! Please just... just stop!" He waited a second for his breath to steady, then called across. "What do you want?! We can talk about this!"

The abductor didn't flinch when Axel exited the car with his automated hands in the air. "Keep back, augment! One step closer and I blow his brains out! What do I want? Nothing you can possibly offer me, rest assured of that!" was his response to Axel's question as he dug the gun against Tony's head. The ferret's eyes were fluttering a bit as he struggled to regain consciousness and fight the painful swimming sensation in his head.

"Axel?" he asked weakly, hearing his friend's voice.

"Quiet!" the man shouted down at Tony. "There's nothing to talk about aside from this: get back in your car, turn around, and head on out of here. Forget your friend ever existed, and stop pursuing us. Failure to comply will result in me torturing him in front of you, and possibly even putting a bullet into his brain, got it?" he asked threateningly. "Don't test me!" he snapped.

Axel froze, the colour draining from his face. "Alright! I get it! Just... just please, don't hurt him!" His mouth opened and closed as he searched for something to say. "Look, the... the Purifier's just announced that tomorrow they're going to try and take over Lanthae... thousands of innocent people are going to be slaughtered! We're going to try and stop them, but we need him with us to do it! Whatever this is, just... just please stop..."

Axel's eyes darted around desperately, trying to find a way he could save his friend, but there was nothing... and if he made a move he had no doubt it wouldn't end well for Tony.

Emilena stumbled out of the melee in the parking lot in time to see her old friends driving away. At the very least, she recognized Axel, who she hoped to speak to.

Sprinting through the parking lot and leaping through hedges and anything else in her way, she came huffing and puffing up to the scene in time to witness the standoff.

Keeping her presence secret from the others, she circled around the back and slinked into the best position for the shot, hidden in the bushes beside the road. The man holding Tony was facing the opposite direction, towards the street and Axel.

Taking careful aim with her pistol, she sighted the man's head and fired.

marita clutched the wheel hard, her mind racing, trying to think off a way out of this situation. the car was parked 30 yards from where the man and tony were. ' trying to drive at him would be a death sentence for tony' she thought ' he'd blow him away before i moved 10 feet' marita hated being stuck in a situation like this. She could try and shoot at the man holding tony hostage, but she wasn't a very good shot with a gun, and in order to save tony, shes have to get off a very very good shot. she shook her head, and continued to watch the drama playing out in front of her.

"That's the idea!" the man shouted back. "Moving against the Purifiers is not beneficial to us! We hold him... and then kill him, we've removed a major threat to their plan! So just back off, ya hear? Otherwise, I guarantee I kill him right now!" He pressed his gun tightly against Tony's head to demonstrate he was serious.

Vergil too had been left behind when Marita roared off in the car, and had ran down the streets trying to catch up. He'd been distracted by looters advancing towards the car, and had had to defend the trailer as they had seen the flashy wheels and wanted a piece of it. After flipping over them and then mentally picking them up to slam them back down into the street, he was off, racing down the sidewalks to catch up with his new comrades. Shorter legs meant longer transit time though, so he huffed along, his cheeks inflating and then deflating with every so many feet he sprinted. He kept an eye on the vehicles as they seemed to pull into a parking lot up ahead... great... hopefully they wouldn't be gone by the time he'd get up there.

As Emilena fired, the man heard the gunshot, and reacted... but whether for being shot at or as a reflex couldn't be determined. As her bullet struck his head his gun went off, and as blood sprayed out of his skull, blood sprayed out of Tony too, and the ferret fell forward, a look of anguish on his face as the man fell on top of him. Where he'd been shot was impossible to say for now, as it had all happened so quickly and the man was now on top of Tony, masking him from view.

Almost immediately, another man stepped out of the car and opened fire on Emilena's position with an MP7, his back to Axel. The driver of the sedan rolled down the window and opened up on Emilena with a pistol he stuck out the car as well. "Get Stracci back in the car!" shouted the driver.

"Working on it!" the guy outside yelled as he began sidling over to Tony's position, which was already beginning to grow moist as Tony's and the man's blood pooled around the two of them.

Vergil finally managed to reach the parking lot, and his eyes got even wider than they already were upon witnessing the scene. "Oh shit!" he breathed, and steeled himself for another dash as he ran on, trying to reach the scene in time.

Axel flinched back when he heard the gunshot, seeing the blood and brain spray out from the man's head... then, gut-wrenchingly, he realised that Tony had been hit too. Horrified, he stood motionless for a split second, time seeming to pass in slow motion before the shouting from up ahead snapped him out of it. "Fuck! Tony!" he yelled, darting around the car door and starting to sprint across the parking lot towards Tony's position.

Gunfire exploded from the car up ahead, and Axel's teeth bared in a snarl as he saw another man exit the car and start heading towards where the injured ferret lay. He didn't register that the man was shooting at someone else, that someone else was helping them. The rat only saw that the man's back was to him, and he seized his opportunity. Wrenching the Luger from the back of his jeans, Axel raised the barrel and charged towards him, screaming as he tugged back on the trigger.

The first two bullets missed their mark, but the next two slammed into the man's back, the force spinning him around to face Axel. The fifth tore through his throat, exploding out the back of his neck. As the man fell, Axel slid on the floor to where Tony lay sprawled under the first body, the rough asphalt tearing through the knees of his jeans and skinning him. Grunting, he heaved the corpse off him as machine gun fire continued to rattle from the car. "Tony, come on! Talk to me!" Shifting to the side, he wrapped his arms around the ferret's torso and started to drag him away from the gunfire. With so much blood spilled, it was impossible to tell how badly he was injured. "Shit!" he gasped as he continued to try and move Tony to safety.

Tony coughed as he was hauled up into the car, the leaking blood coming from his neck, where he'd been hit by the man as he'd gone down. It looked like the shot had also grazed the side of his head, creating a lot of blood, but only a superficial injury there. His neck had been hit close to where the shoulder connected to it, and it was hard to tell if either his carotid or jugular had been sliced, but from the lack of arterial spray, it didn't seem like it... but that could be because he'd lain on the ground for a bit of time too.

Cracking his eyes open, Tony seemed to be struggling with recognizing even where he was. "Axel..." he sputtered, reaching up for the rat's face now. "H-help me!" he exclaimed weakly, and it was clear that wound in his neck would need to be patched, and from how he could barely move, it was also clear the blood loss meant they had mere minutes to help the ferret.

Vergil heard Marita yelling, and raced over to the car. "Wait!" He shouted, holding his hand out, then skidded to a stop, and focused on the black sedan ahead of them, and prepared to flip the car end over end. Focusing with narrowed eyes, the sedan was suddenly tossed into the air and landed hard on its room, its horn blaring for a moment and then going silent as the air left it.

Running up to the car now, Vergil stopped beside the driver-side door. "Is Tony all right? Who shot the guy holding him hostage? One of you guys? I couldn't see clearly from this angle!" he said, practically out of breath.

"Ugh... let's just go!" Vergil said, throwing the door open when it became apparent whoever was in the bushes wasn't coming out. Besides... he was starting to see black sedans everywhere, and he didn't like it. Sliding into the front seat (there was precious little room in the back after all), he glimpsed another black sedan heading down the road and driving slowly past the parking lot, as if scanning it. "I'd go." Vergil murmured, trying to look as inconspicuous as a mutant white-skinned gecko with feathers could look.

Tony gripped Axel's hand as firmly as he could, which wasn't very firmly at all, but his fluttering eyes were starting to focus at least, and he was coming back to his senses after the trauma of being clubbed and shot. "What happened?" he asked, trying to relax as best he could. "Damn this hurts... was I... shot?" he asked with some confusion, trying to make sense of it all. He was trembling, the adrenaline coursing through his body to tell him something was wrong... he was in danger... but he tried to focus instead on Axel's calming influence, and not panic.

While it was true some backalley doctors were little more than talentless hacks with a scalpel or completely insane, some – like Thomas Jiang – were fully qualified doctors and cybernetic surgeons who decided to go rogue, implanting augmentations without regard to the law, caring only if the would-be Augment could afford the surgery and implants.

The Pierce-Arrow roared through the streets. The combustion powered vehicle was a dramatic contrast to the electric vehicles that plied the streets. Then again, most of the output of the algal oil farms went to making plastics, military vehicles, heavy ships, airplanes (try as they might, electrically powered airplanes and heavy cargo ships couldn't compete with the old combustion powered vehicles).

What was leftover was sold to classic car enthusiasts or those who simply wanted the status symbol or nostalgia of driving an old combustion vehicle.

Soren peeked out the window of the trailer. It was starting to grow dark and the LED streetlights began to turn on. He sighed. By the time they got to the Night Market, it would be busy. He only hoped there was some way to smuggle Tony to Doctor Jiang without attracting unwanted attention.

"No can do, he doesn't have a phone. It's word of mouth," Anne replied.

The car pulled into an empty lot near an alleyway.

Soren opened the door and Anne got out.

The mare knocked on a door that was battered and scarred. A camera on an arm aimed at her. "Password?"

Anne looked around. "Blue Screen," she whispered.

With a hiss, the magnetic locks disengaged and the biting odor of disinfectant wafted out from a white hallway.

"Hurry!" Anne barked.

Soren stood by Axel with his rifle at the ready in case someone wanted to finish the job on Tony.

Opening the car door, Axel looked uncertainly down the hallway that had been revealed, but Soren's presence with his rifle made him feel more at ease. He looked down at Tony. "Alright, we're here... we have to move you, okay? Just... just lean all your weight on me and Marie, we'll do the all the work..."

Shifting his position, he gently put Tony's arm around his neck and waited for Marie to do the same. "Okay, I'm going to lift you up," Axel cautioned. "Remember what I said, just lean on us. Three... two... one!" He heaved him up, one hand around Tony's waist, the other keeping hold of the arm around his neck, keeping him steady. Grunting, Axel climbed out of the car and staggered with Tony towards the white corridor.

Doctor Tsing "Thomas" Jiang had been alerted to the recent arrival. Room 13 had been prepped and cleaned for surgery and Doctor Jiang had scrubbed up and gotten himself ready to perform the operation.

He turned to the group entering. "I presume he is the patient?" he asked, pointing to Tony with his stainless steel hands. Despite the blue glow coming from his cybernetic eyes, his gaze was businesslike. His voice had the soft, faint accent of one native to Hong Kong and had learned English as an adult.

Anne watched as the door slid shut and locked itself. Soren was looking around. His rifle dangled from its sling as he watched Axel and the others hustled Tony down the sterile hallway. A Vulpine orderly was wheeling a Wolverine who had just had his augmentation surgery down to the recovery room.

Axel nodded at what the nurse said, then looked down at Tony. "I guess you won't be the pretty boy anymore," he said with an awkward grin. Then he gently touched the ferret's shoulder. "We'll be here for you when you get out alright? Just... you'll be fine. Trust me."

Tony was led out of the car, and then practically picked up and carried (which he didn't think he needed, but he didn't protest against either) into the clinic. He tried to hold back his tears, but he couldn't. He started to cry a bit, sobbing as he was dumped onto the gurney. "I don't know... I just don't know..." he said now, then nodded as Marita practically spoke for him. "Yes... no augments...unless... unless it's needed." he said softly here, not ruling out the possibility that the bullet had paralyzed his left arm... he didn't think so, but he couldn't tell. He could move it at least, but due to the pain, couldn't give it full mobility.

He looked up at Axel, almost pleadingly, and nodded. "I hope so. I just... I'm holding you guys up... you should go on... go fight your fight." Tony said, blinking away more tears. "I'm sorry this happened... I'm really sorry." he whispered. He wasn't being completely logical about his own situation, but the guilt was his strongest emotion right now, and it was winning out over everything else.

"Just uh... yeah... I know you'll be close by." the ferret nodded here, setting his jaw firmly to try and get ready for this. "Guess I always fear being knocked out and operated on..." he offered a small smile here. "Take care and... see you soon." He patted Axel's hand on his shoulder, and let him go.

Axel watched anxiously as Tony was wheeled away. Once he disappeared from sight, he let out a trembling breath, finally allowing his features to show how scared he was. Turning, he made his was slowly back to the others in the waiting room.

"Jesus, how did everything go so wrong..." he muttered to Soren, brittle-voiced, rubbing a hand over his eyes in exhaustion. Having to wait while Tony was taken care of was making him nervous. We need to go back for Lily as soon as we can... After a second, he paused and looked up at the others. "Hey, didn't you guys say Nairda was messed up from that... pulse thing? Maybe they could help him here..."

"I think he's got more than a few problems..." Axel muttered, struggling to hold Nairda up by the legs - his armour weighed a tonne. "But right now, something happened to his augments... Look, could we maybe put him on a stretcher? He's really heavy..." Axel motioned for Marita to help carry him over to another stretcher in the corner, and dumped him in it.

Axel turned back to the nurse as he struggled to get his breath back. "Is... is there any way he could get... checked out now? It looks pretty bad..."

A internal cyberneticist had gotten her tools ready and scrubbed up in preparation for surgery.

The surgical suite looked like a cross between an electronics workshop and an operating room. Which made perfect sense since this was a room for operating on Augments.

Before the operation, a nurse-cybernetician plugged in some wires to some ports on his armor. He examined the results of the scan from his laptop.

"The implants in his head have been completely fried," he said. He then turned to Marita. "Exactly what was he doing to damage his implants so severely?

Doctor Jiang had his eyes zoom in on Tony's neck wound. The bullet had ripped open his jugular vein and narrowly missed his carotid artery. Another command ordered his fingers to shrink down to needle-fine points. His magnetized fingers helped hold onto the tiny needle. With that, he began to carefully sew up the gash in the vein.

A nurse arrived transfusion bag of artificial blood that would replace the amount of blood Tony had lost.

Soren sighed as he put his magazine down. "I don't know. Honestly, if I hadn't charged in like that, we wouldn't be in such deep shit."

The door slid open and a lithe Boa Constrictor slithered in.

Anne was in another room. Her horn was connected to a similar monitor and another nurse-cybernetician was examining her.

"So how bad is it?" she demanded.

"You're lucky the implant's not completely destroyed. It won't need to be replaced but the repairs under local anesthesia. As for your antenna, we'll properly repair that as well."

"Well fuck," she said. The mare folded her ears back as the nurse-cybernetician placed the injector gun against her forehead and fired.

Two more nurse-cyberneticians came in with tools and spare supplies at the ready.

(OOC - injector guns use pressurized argon to fire dried medicine at supersonic speeds to get them past the skin. It's more hygienic and produces less waste than a standard syringe.)

Axel rubbed his hands over his eyes again and sighed, exhausted. "I... don't know. But we'll deal with that when we need to." He turned his eyes up to the clock mounted up on the wall, and saw that the time was into the early hours of the morning. When was the last time I slept? He knew every second counted... but going full throttle for days at a time had left him feeling drained. And I won't be able to do anything for Lily if I'm dead on my feet...

Running a hand through his hair, he stood up and looked around at the group, dark circles under his eyes. "Guy's, I'm... I need a rest. Feeling like I might collapse. If... if something happens and I'm still asleep, wake me up?" Raising a hand weakly in goodbye, he made his way across the room and followed the nurse towards the West Wing. Once he arrived, Axel let himself into an empty room and collapsed face first onto the bed, half hanging off it.

Soon, there was a knocking on Axel's door. "Mr. Whent?" Asked the nurse. "You've, uh, got a letter."

She slid a plain white envelope under the door. Other than a stamp indicating the hospital had scanned it for dangerous substances and it came up plain, the only thing written Axel's name and the hospital's address.

Axel jerked up at the knock on the door, struggling to remember for a second where he was. Looking blearily over to where the sound had come from, his eyes narrowed when he saw the letter slide under the gap. Blinking, he raised himself up and slowly approached the envelope. Bending to pick it up, he turned it over in his hands, using the moonlight that poured through the tiny window to look at the writing on the front. Taking the envelope back to his bed, he sat down and paused for a second before cautiously opening it.

After he read the letter, Axel let out a trembling breath and dropped it beside him, then lowered his head to his hands. His fingers twisted his hair as he thought desperately about what to do. He knew it was probably a lie... that nothing good could come of it. I have to... I have to take the chance... Axel raised his head and looked down with dark rimmed eyes at the letter again.

He made up his mind.

Scrunching the letter into his jeans pocket, he stood up and quietly approached the door. Checking nobody was in the hall outside, he slowly let himself out and made his way down the corridor, heading towards the waiting room. Poking his head around the corner, he could see Marita, Rose and Marie were still there but facing away from him... and from the entrance. Swallowing, Axel crept out and across the room, wincing as his trainers squeaked slightly on the polished floor. After what seemed like forever, he managed to reach the hallway leading down to the entrance. As he approached, the metallic door opened automatically with a hiss. Axel stopped and looked behind him. I'm sorry... I'll see you all again soon... I hope. Taking a deep breath, he stepped out, hearing the door lock itself behind him.

Alone on the dark streets, Axel looked around, fingers flexing nervously and breath misting up in the cold. The road was just ahead of him, and slightly further up he could see a taxi parked on the side. Jogging up, he climbed in and told the driver where to go, handing over the last few creds he had left in his wallet. The car pulled out and set off, leaving the backalley clinic behind him.

The sound of the cab's engine faded as the driver sped away, leaving Axel standing alone at the end of the road. The dim sunlight that was just beginning to break over the horizon cast a dull, bronze glow to the street. Axel looked at the street sign, then glanced down to the crumpled note in his hand. Rhode Way. This was the right place. Swallowing, he followed the road up, counting off the houses as he passed. 95... 93... 91...

The sound of shuffling ahead of him caught his attention, and he looked in front to see an alarmingly rough looking woman stumble down from one of the doorways, her short leather skirt dubiously stained. "Hey hon," she barked, fixing her slightly bleary eyes on him, "Quick lay? Gettin' late but I can make it fast, and it'll cost less..."

"Ah... n-no. No thanks," Axel blinked, stepping past her quickly.

"Fuckin' prude!" She shouted after him, turning to wander off.

Chewing his lip, Axel looked at the number of the next house. 89. He nervously looked at the note one final time. 5:00 am. 89 Rhode Way. Right alley. Come alone, or I won't show myself. I know how to save Lily. He could see the dark alley to the right of the building. Taking a deep breath Axel stepped cautiously into it, the weight of the Luger still tucked into the back of his jeans giving him some small comfort, though it only had a few bullets left. He peered down the passageway, trying to discern anyone who might be lying it wait for him from the dark shapes of the dumpsters and trash littered around.

Axel cleared his throat. "Hey, I... I'm here! And I'm alone!" he called out, trying to sound more confident than he felt. "Who are you? What do you know?!"

Soren awoke with a snort. He shook his head to clear the sleep from his eyes.

"Well, that went well."

Anne was already up and walking. Because her surgery was minor, all she got was simple local anesthetic. A bandage was wrapped around the base of her horn. Luckily, thanks to Doctor Jiang's expert hands, there would be no scarring.

"Well, at least everything's back to normal." She tested her horn on a nearby TV, overriding its normal late-night talkshow to put her own face on the TV and her voice. "Well, it looks like my horn's back to working order like when I first got it."

"I'll go get Axel and we can then pay for everything and get moving." Soren got up and slung the rifle over his shoulder.

"Not so loud," cautioned Emilena Echo, emerging from the shadows at the end of the alley. A pistol was clipped clearly to her waist, but she held no weapons and was on the side of the alley that freely gave Axel the ability to exit to the street if he wished. "This is the bad side of town..."

Nairda stirred as he came out of his dream. "Emilena, is you there, biatch?" he muttered drowsily. "I dreamed you n' I were...where is yo slick ass, biatch? Where be I, biatch?"

He shook his head dizzily. "And what tha fuck happened ta mah voice?"

Axel started, squinting in the dark as he tried to make out the figure who'd emerged... then recoiling back a step when he recognised Emilena. "You!" he gasped, reaching a hand back to hold the Luger but not drawing it out just yet. "What... where did you..."

Axel's eyes narrowed. "The letter was from you... Why the hell would you care what happens to Lily? You got what you wanted, Lupis has her!" He looked around quickly, half expecting to see the wolf leap out at him.

Emilena sighed. "I made a deal with Lupis to get out of Purifier prison, and that's as far as my allegiance went." She unclipped the pistol from her belt and threw it at Axel's feet. "Of course nobody gave me the chance to explain that..."

Her muscles were tense and her eyes were darting nervously to the opening of the alley. "Lily was the only one of our entire team who didn't instantly think the worst of me. And now I can repay that kindness. But you're going to have to trust me, like she did."

Soren knocked on the door of Axel's room.

"Hey Axel, the surgery went perfectly. Tony, Anne and Nairda are recovering right now."

No response. Soren knocked on the door harder. To his amazement, the door swung open. The bed had obviously been slept in with blankets piled up at one end.

"Axel?" A shudder ran up Soren's spine. He looked around the room. "Stop fucking around."

Still no response.

The Human suddenly got a sinking feeling in his stomach. He was aware this was a backalley clinic and despite how professional and clean it was, that didn't mean that someone could have kidnapped and ransomed, or worse experimented on him.

Scowling, he got his rifle ready and flipped off the safety. He saw a Golden Retriever housekeeper passing by the room.

"Excuse me, do you know where Axel Whent is?" he asked.

"No." The housekeeper entered the room.

Sighing, he returned to the lobby and confronted the secretary on duty. His rifle was at the ready but pointed towards the ground. "What happened to Axel?" he asked. Soren's tone said one thing: I want answers and don't give me any shit.

Anne was reading a magazine as she sat next to Tony's bed. "So Tony, I'm guessing this is the first time you've been shot?"

Keeping his eyes on her, Axel bent down quickly to scoop up the pistol she'd thrown. "Yeah... and look where trusting you would have got her..." he said as he stood, holding the gun but not aiming it at her. He didn't trust Emilena, not for a second... but he also couldn't think of a reason why she'd try anything now, when she could have just stayed away.

"And what could you do to help her?" Axel asked suspiciously, his uneasiness radiating from his posture.

Emilena took a deep breath and explained her plan to Axel. Regardless of how crazy it sounded, she explained how she 'escaped' the torture chamber, what she saw in her dreams, and her conclusions from them. She left out the part about visiting her parents.

"But obviously, you're going to have to get me into the Purifier base for any of that to happen," she finished. "I know your team must have a plan to get back in there, but there's no way any of them would ever trust me. It'd be up to you and me, but you've got to see that it's the best shot Lily will ever have of being normal again."

Axel stared back at Emilena for a long moment without saying a word. Then he slowly raised his hand and offered her gun back, grip first. "If you try anything... if you put her in any more danger, I will kill you." He loosened his hold on the barrel of the pistol.

Sighing, Axel shook his head. "Getting in isn't going to be easy. Last night we tried to go for Lupis and it... it didn't go so well. So the security around the base is gonna be even tighter. Tony knew about some secret ways to get in, but I never got to hear where they were exactly..." He trailed off as he thought of his friend's condition. Axel swallowed. "There's more... The Purifiers built some kind of pulse bomb and tonight they're gonna use it to slaughter as many augments in Lanthae as they can..."

"I honestly couldn't care less," Emilena folded her arms. "More power to the bastards."

She turned and leaped onto the chainlink fence blocking the exit to the alley. "That 'pistol' you just borrowed is actually a police tracker; its designed to be confiscated by the target so we can trace them. While it's in the lead-lined holster it can't transmit, but that also makes it immune to all abilities to detect tracers. So remove the gun from the holster once you want me to know where you are and no tracer-detecting allies are nearby."

Nairda walked into the waiting room. "Guys, dis is blingin son! Somethingz wack wit mah rap algorithms muthafucka! How tha fuck can I git dis ta stop?" He looked fearfully from left to right. "I aint goin ta sound like dis forever, be I...?"

Axel stared at her, aghast, as Emilena dismissed what he'd told her about the bomb. "How can you say that? Innocent people are going to die!" What the hell is wrong with her?

Shaken at how Lily's only hope might lie with this woman, Axel glanced down at the pistol as she explained how it worked. So I can't take it out around Anne... she'd detect it in a second. And I can't signal her when Soren's around, there's no telling what he'd do if he saw her again... "Alright, but you'll need to be ready to move quickly," Axel said, looking up at Emilena as she jumped onto the fence. "If we're breaking in, I won't be able to wait too long." The sky was brightening - he'd need to try and get back before the others noticed he'd been gone for too long.

Tony groggily came awake, his eyes filmy and unable to focus at first. He heard Marita ask him something... how he was feeling probably. "Terrible..." he murmured, the nausea in his stomach from the anesthetic causing a really sick feeling deep within him. Looking around slowly, he noticed Axel wasn't even there. Wincing, he tried to rise, then fell back against the pillow. "Can I have..." his mouth felt like cotton, and he was unable to get the rest of the words out.

Closing his eyes as a tear or two slid down his cheeks, he tried to rest. "Yes..." he finally managed to say in response to Anne's question. Breathing heavily, the ferret cracked his eyes open a tad. "I don't suppose..." Nairda entering the room talking in that strange fashion which caused his head to swim, and his nausea to build as he groaned pitifully, clutching his abdomen. "Where's... Axel...?" he asked here, and then was unable to suppress it anymore.

He turned in the bed, and retched violently into a container near the bed. He felt like he was vomiting up his stomach as he lost his most recent meal and then some. When it was over after a moment or two, the ferret collapsed back against the pillow, a look of anguish on his face. "Fuck!" he exclaimed sadly. "I can't go anywhere like this!" He started sobbing a bit, the unpleasant sensations of having been anesthetized not sitting well with him, and causing his mind to reel a bit as he was bombarded all at once.

we'll have to pool our credits' Marita said as the secretary handed them the bill her eyes widened ' half a million credits!" she whistled and looked at the others.. ' guys how many credits do we have?
lets see' Marie said digging into her purse and pulling out a ' credits Counter" this scanned credits cards and displayed a readout of how many credits were on the card' Marita gave hers to Marie and she scanned it 37153; So under 400 dollars' 371 to be precise' Marie said. as she swiped her own. 21170. ok I have a little over 200 dollars. "Rose how about you?' marie said rose handed her hers.. but she barely had any credits 900' You have 9 bucks on you? thats it?' Marita said." and the clothes on me, yeah Rose admitted.
so between the three of us we have 59223 credits, or just under 600 dollars Marie said. You need 50 grand' the secretary said..
_Please have a seat sir" the receptionist replied to Nairda.

Tony relaxed a bit as Anne called for antiemetic. Sighing miserably, the ferret closed his eyes. "I've never been anesthetized before... guess I'm not reacting well to it." he murmured. "God, my stomach... uggggh." he groaned, rubbing it with a paw.

He reached out, and clasped Anne's arm with his free paw, as if for support as he reopened his eyes. "Painkillers would be good too..." he mumbled, a rather ill look washing over his face. "Don't worry about my bill... my family can cover my end of things... I got a card for emergencies." he said, almost in agony. "Ugggh..." he groaned again, still gripping Anne. "Where's Axel?" he asked again, his words slurred.

A nurse came in with a tray containing painkillers and the antiemetic as well as a cup of water. Another nurse removed the garbage can to be cleaned up.

Anne shook her head as she wrinkled her nose at the odor of vomit that still hung in the room. "I haven't seen him since we arrived. I'll go ask Soren and the others."

She took a look at the bottle of painkillers. Non-narcotic. The mare made a note to go light up a joint as soon as she got the chance. She turned around and made a move to leave the room.

"Tony, will you be okay by yourself?"

"I'm broke," Soren replied. He emptied his pockets. All that came out was a credit chit that he had swiped from the car he had stolen ó and it had 150 credits. Just enough for a soda at a vending machine.

He watched as the door slid open and a Human with a glowing red eye went up to the receptionist.

Doctor Tsing "Thomas" Jiang entered his office where Nairda was sitting. The doctor's blue electronic eyes bored into the Wolf. The doctor was a lean middle agd Chinese man who looked younger than his 44 years. A neutral expression was on his face as he temples his stainless steel prostheses on the table.

"Nairda," he said, his voice betraying his Hong Kong origins. "I need to speak to you about your non-payment."

Behind him were his diplomas from the schools he had attended as well as his (expired) Lanthae license to practice cybernetic surgery.

"No! Don't go!" Tony reached out for her, and then let his arm fall with another sigh. "I know I've held you guys up long enough but... I would appreciate the company." he said honestly, reaching out for the antiemetic and painkillers and took them, trying not to gag as his reflux acted up again.

Outside, Vergil eyed the approaching man with the red eye, keeping his orange eyes peeled for any further trouble. He'd been dozing when Axel had slipped out, and had woken up a few minutes ago.

Axel sighed as Emilena ran off, then turned the gun over in his hands, making sure it was firmly secured into the holster. It was small, so at least it wouldn't be too obvious he suddenly had an extra pistol on him. Clipping the holster onto the side of his trousers, he pulled his top down to conceal it then walked out of the alley, emerging back out onto Rhode Way. He didn't have enough credits on him to order a taxi, but if he hurried, he could probably make it back in okay time.

Jogging down the pavement, he passed the decrepit-looking prostitute sitting in the gutter and smoking a cigarette. She spat at his feet when she saw him. "Found yer balls yet, little boy? I could help ya find 'em for half price..." Gasping, Axel picked up speed and ran around the corner, heading back to the clinic.

Nairda's eyes went wide and he sat straight. His apprehension betrayed his attempt to pretend he didn't recognize Dr. Jiang and have a past history.

"Yo ass did dis ta me biaaatch! I thought you was a phat doctor playa! How tha fuck could your fresh ass screw up so badly?" He yelped, trying and failing to sound indignant.

Axel eventually drew near the clinic. By now, the sun had risen high enough to reveal just how grungy Lanthae Square was. I can't believe they made a clinic here... Casting his eyes towards the building, he saw with relief that the car and trailer were still parked outside. Staggering over, he leaned against the side of the trailer, trying to get his breath back and thinking of what to say. After a while, he walked over to the barred door, looking apprehensively at the camera as it swiveled over to him.

"Password?" a voice demanded.

Axel's mind blanked for a moment. "Ah... oh, Blue Screen!" The locks on the door disengaged with a clunk and it slid open. Taking a deep breath, Axel stepped into the spotless hallway, making his way down to the reception room. When he reached it he saw Vergil and Soren hanging around and walked over, raising a hand in greeting. "I'm back. Sorry I just vanished, I just... I needed to clear my head for a bit. Things were getting kind of, ah... overwhelming..." He grimaced and scratched his bandage, not meeting Soren's eyes. "Anyway, how... how are the others doing? Is Tony okay?"

rose and marie waved to Axel. ' needed some time to yourself? we all need from time to time..' MArie said ' tony made it through ok, but now we're trying to figure out how to pay for the surgeries. how many credits do you have on you Axel? because its a half a million credits for the three surgeries.

Vergil nodded at Axel as he reappeared, but noticed the evasive nature of the rat. Narrowing his eyes, he studied the rodent for a moment. He was hiding something... but why? What could possibly be worth hiding?

In the recovery room, Tony looked up as Marita entered. She was "keeping him company", but in reality was asking him for money. "Uhh... no... I don't think I do." he shook his head here. "I think that... ugh!" he put a paw up to his mouth again, waiting for the antiemetic to take effect. "My emergency card is to cover things like my emergency expenses... but I doubt my dad would want me to use it for other things. I could always ask, though. Don't you guys have insurance?" he inquired, rubbing his stomach, as he still felt like hurling again, the nausea not immediately subsiding.

I DO have insurance.. and you have enough to pay for yours.. that leaves anne and Nairda.. i'm glad to see you pulled though.. you really scared us..' She said softly, as she handed him a tissue.. ' here if you have to throw up again.. So, once we get out of here, i'll be driving the car for a bit until you feel fully up to it. hopefully that shouldnt be too long, because time is not a luxury we have, those lunatics are going to release their bomb in less than 24 hours and we cant afford to make any more mistakes..

"I don't even know if the doc's gonna let me move in my condition." Tony said a bit despondently as he looked down at the floor. "I mean once the drugs kick in... I should be good enough to drive... but... that's only if I'm allowed to be discharged... getting shot... isn't there usually a recovery time?" he asked, looking up now as he glanced at the clock. The antiemetic was starting to work, but painkillers typically took about 20 minutes, and his throat was throbbing. "If I'm laid up... then I guess I'll miss whatever's coming next..." he said sadly, gulping a bit here as he lay back against the pillow and stared at the ceiling.

Axel shook his head. "No, I... I don't have anything," he told Marie. "Sorry. Doesn't anyone else have any credits on them?" As he spoke, he felt Vergil's eyes on him, searching him, and he blinked back at the gecko awkwardly. "Vergil? Are, uh... is everything okay?" Axel shifted uncomfortably.

Vergil's eyes were still on Axel, and he spoke in his even tones as he explained his line of thinking. "You're hiding something, or at least your body language tells me you are. You failed to make direct eye contact with Soren, your posture indicates a defensive and not open stance, so that to me says that you're keeping something back, or at the very least, uncomfortable. What is wrong?" he asked pointedly, raising a brow and frowning thoughtfully. "I take it you did more than just clear your head on this walk."

Title: Into the Black

Axel flinched. "I... uh..." He sighed, his ear flattening. "Alright... I did go for a walk, but when I was out there, I... well, I was thinking about heading off without you guys, trying to get into the Purifier base on my own." He looked up, shamefaced, at the group. "I just kept thinking about how Lily's still in there while they're doing... god-knows-what to her... and I thought about how long we were going to take here, and I just panicked. The only reason I didn't just take a cab and get out of here was because I don't have any credits left to go anywhere."

He swallowed. "I... I wasn't even thinking that I'd be abandoning the rest of you. It was stupid, and... and selfish, and I'm sorry. I wasn't going to say because I don't want you guys thinking I'd just leave you." Axel surreptitiously bit down on the inside of his cheek, and tears welled up in his eyes. "I won't ever think about doing it again, I promise." Inside, his stomach was twisting in knots. Lying to his friends made him feel lousy, but Axel knew he had no choice.

we'll give you some time to rest at the safehouse.. say an hour or two, but you're going to have to forgo the full recovery time- we cant afford to have you laid up for days on end.. we dont have that luxury' Marita said.' not when those lunatics are trying to turn Lanthae into a major hellhole. well, a bigger hellhole than it already is..

Vergil softened here as Axel explained, though the thoughtful frown was still on his face. "Well, I think your apology is owed more to your friends than to myself." he pointed out here. "I barely know you, but I know you seemed really close with some in this group. So perhaps you should tell them what you just told me." the gecko suggested with a slight smile here.

In the recovery room, Tony continued staring at the ceiling. "What if I don't have a choice in the matter?" he sighed sadly. "What if the doc tells me no way? I'm stuck here until I recover?" he sighed again, shaking his head. "I guess I shouldn't let that stop me... even if I risk reopening my wound..." he commented now, lifting a claw to the air and tracing imaginary patterns now.

Dr. Jiang was nonplussed. "Mister Nairda," he said as he fixed his blue electric gaze on the Augment. "You have failed to pay your bills with me. Currently, you owe me over a million creds in debt. Pay it all off now and I'll fix your vocoder. Be thankful that you merely sound like a second-rate rapper."

Soren sighed. "Axel, I'm handy with a gun and I had a powered exoskeleton. I did the same thing you did and nearly died. You'd be fucked for sure if you did it."

Anne came out of the bathroom. She passed her credit chit to the receptionist. As the repair procedure had cost her all of 900 creds, the card was now empty.

The mare flopped down on a chair. "Well, I paid for my bill, now we gotta pay for Nairda and Tony's."

She looked at the TV and turned it on. The headline "Anti-Augmentation Activist Publically Murdered!"

A crystal clear video of a Purifier being beheaded with a reciprocating saw usually intended to cut concrete played on the screen.

"Turn that shit off!" Soren snapped.

Anne did so. "Could that be the warning Tony mentioned?"

Marie dug into her purse as the tv was turned off..' ah. good.. my insurance card.. all the workers at the club had to have insurance, due to the risk of guys getting into fight and stuff. lets see here.. i had enough coverage for 1 million credits, but i had that accident two years ago..she said as she ran the card through the credit counter."ah i have 375000 left' she said she got up and handed the insurance card to the receptionist ' you're paying for the augment huh' the receptionist said.. ' yeah nairda is part of our group' Marie said. ' ok, that leaves 124100 credits, since the augment over there paid hers. the receptionist said.
 Rose found her insurance card at the both of her purse, and took the credit counter from marie. ' 50500 credits' the counter said. ' you hardly have any insurance..' marie sighed, 'and i know why..' rose hung her head.

Before Anne had switched the TV off, reports that a second Purifier had been found naked, eviscerated and hanged from a construction site were also displayed. He had been cut from groin to collarbone, and his insides were seen dangling underneath him as his body hung lifeless from a crane. This Purifier was a bit more prominent than the first...

In the recovery room, Tony shook his head. "No I'm... I'm still a little woozy... the drug hasn't kicked in yet." he explained. "If I have to take it easy... I'm probably going to have to do it here." he reiterated. "I'll just see what the doc says. But I want to go... I want to go so badly..." He sighed, still staring at the ceiling. "If I can leave... I will. And even if I can't... I can't just sit here... even if I risk reopening my wound."

Axel nodded at the group, gratefully. "Thanks for not taking it personally. The more I think about it, the dumber it sounds." As Marie and Rose paid over the credits they had on them, he grimaced. "I'm... I'm sorry that I can't help with any of this. I mean, money was never something I really, ah... had." Shifting slightly in embarrassment, he looked up at the TV and blanched as he saw the images flashing up.

"I'm, ah, gonna go check on Tony," he choked, quickly turning away and heading down to the ferret's room, knocking on the door lightly. Opening it, he nodded at Marita and gave a small smile to Tony. "Hey... sorry I didn't come sooner. How're you doing? You look... uh, good..." he said unconvincingly.

The conversation with Marita was starting to go in circles now, but fortunately, Axel's entry into the room spared the ferret any further need to agree that yes, ultimately, they had to wait for the doctor.

Tony raised his head, and gave Axel a blank stare. "No... I don't, I'm sure." he replied, looking off to the side here before shifting his gaze back to the rodent. "Where were you?" he asked accusingly, brow furrowed in consternation. "You were the last person I expected to show up last..." He trailed off, resting back against the pillow. "Not that it matters I guess..." He looked off to the side again. "I don't even know if I can go with you anymore. I haven't heard anything yet on my condition."

Axel's face dropped. "I know, I'm... I'm really sorry. I was going to do something really stupid, but I guess being poor worked out, for once." He crossed the room and took a seat in one of the chairs next to Tony's bed. The pistol Emilena had given him dug painfully into his back, and he shifted position. Axel blinked guiltily, wishing he could tell him the truth. "The whole situation just got to me..."

He swallowed and tried smiling again, hoping Tony would forgive him. "Well, anyway, I'm glad you're, you know... still here. With us. And not, ah..." Axel trailed off. "Well, you know." He nodded vigorously. "Oh, don't worry about it! If you need to take it easy... I mean, I'd feel like crap if you got hurt again."

Tony didn't look in Axel's direction as he sat down, the ferret still looking off to the side and away from him. "What happened to doing this together?" he asked darkly, staring at the wall.

"But I guess I'm one to talk." he continued, his tone still having that edge to it. "Here I go and get myself shot... and maybe I won't even be able to join you guys for your final push." He closed his eyes here and frowned before crossing his arms over his chest. "Which means I'd be useless... and then's nothing worse than that when your friends are counting on you." he said, his body trembling a tad.

Axel didn't say anything for a moment. Then he leaned forward and put a hand on the ferret's shoulder. "Hey... look, nobody's blaming you for this. Nobody. You didn't ask for this to happen. What's important for you right now is that you get better, alright?"

He sighed. "You've already done so much for us... and for me. Lupis meant absolutely nothing to you, but you still went after him. There's... I mean, I can't think of what I could do to repay you for that... and for being my friend." Axel smiled at him. "So you have to stay alive until I can think of something, alright?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on March 25, 2014, 01:15:07 PM

Tony exhaled sharply, and shook his head as if he was fighting back tears, or maybe he didn't believe it. "Sure..." he said now, more a shaky breath than a response.

He turned his head finally, rotating it across the pillow's top to look up at Axel, but he didn't face him directly. "You don't have to repay me... I know that." he responded, pursing his lips as his head started to swim... damn... were they really making painkillers this strong now? Closing his eyes, he all but collapsed back against the bed, sinking down into the pillow as he let the light-headed, swimming feeling wash over his mind. "I think I just want to rest..." he said, more a long sigh than a request.

Outside, Vergil perked up. "Hmm..." he narrowed his eyes now... sensing something. "Excuse me... I'll be right back..." he murmured, standing up out of his seat and making for the clinic's exit. That presence... it was very familiar to him... but why?

Throwing the door open, he looked from left to right up and down the alley, then started walking in the direction he sensed it. This way... yes... but what... or more correctly, who was it?

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on March 26, 2014, 03:04:46 AM

Axel looked down at the ferret as he drifted off. "Alright. I'll leave you alone. Just... take it easy alright? I'll try and stop by as soon as I can." Getting up, he crossed the room and left, quietly closing the door behind him. When it shut, he sighed and rubbed a hand over his hair. At least he'll be safe here... After a moment, he started heading back down the corridor to the reception.

Passing one of the doors on his way, he heard muffled thumping and scrabbling noises. Axel paused and looked at the door. Surgery Room B. For a second, there was silence, and he was about to continue when it suddenly started up again. Unsure, Axel clicked open the door and peeked through. "Is everything alri-" He stopped when he saw a figure trying to squeeze through an impossibly small window, and after a second, Axel recognised the rear that was wiggling in his direction.

"Nairda?" he gasped. "You, ah... you know there's a door in the reception?"

Doctor Jiang crossed his arms as he looked around the room. He was normally pretty patient but Nairda was notorious for fucking up his recovery suites, failing to pay his bills and overall being an obnoxious asswipe.

"Next time he shows up, I'm denying him service until he pays up." He then got up and headed to Tony's room.

Anne's ears shot up as she heard a faint thumping noise. "The hell's that?"

Soren closed his magazine. "Marita, could you just get me a tempeh burger with all the fixings?" he asked.

Regrettably Nairda returned to the room where the others were. "I can't pay so I be heroically escaping!" he informed the others.

He noticed that there appeared to be some serious chemistry between Zulu and Marie. "Yo...Zulu," he asked cordially. "Would you like ta travel wit us, biatch? We can always use one of mah thugs wit yo' scrilla sense." Then Marie would not have to live unloved...

Soren smirked as he put the magazine down. "You really think he'd let you walk away without paying?"

"Mr. Stracci. May I come in?" Doctor Jiang asked as he knocked on the door to Tony's room.

An orderly carrying a neurotester passed by him.

Axel snorted. "Really? Heroically? If you say so..." They did need to find a way for him to leave though - a glance up at the clock mounted on the wall told Axel almost 45 minutes had passed since he returned. He noticed Vergil wasn't there, but assumed he was just out for a toilet break or something.

One of the orderlies walking through the reception caught his eye. He bit his lip, then turned to Soren and lowered his voice. "The people working here... they can leave the building if they need to, right?" Axel frowned. "And, uh... what's a scrilla sense?"

The knock jolted Tony back into wakefulness, and his head snapped up as he came out of his uneasy sleep. "Sure thing, doc." the ferret replied, blinking wearily. He felt a lot better at least, if not slightly drugged out. "So... how's it look, doc? How long do I have to stay here?" he asked groggily as he came more awake.

Outside, Vergil was on the streets, and glanced around at the crowd. There! Up ahead, walking along amongst the people, the white gecko could see a green reptile anthro with her back to him. Narrowing his eyes, he hated how short he was, as he couldn't get a very clear shot of her. But she was there... and she was... familiar somehow. Not too familiar though... perhaps someone he knew briefly from before...

But he halted, sighing as he realized walking away wouldn't help his new comrades, so he turned and headed back into the clinic, shaking his head. Damn... a lead he couldn't pursue... terrible shame, really.

Sulking back to his chair, he sank back into it with a heavy sigh, and rested his forehead on his fingers.

Tony's stomach suddenly rumbled, and now that he was no longer nauseous, the ferret found himself with a certain craving that only mustelids could get in times like this. It was that kind of craving... deep and inherent, and he needed it. "Excuse me for a minute, doc." he said, raising his paw. "MARITA!" he called. "If you're going out... could uh... could you get me some... CUSTARD?" he asked hopefully, eyes wide. Yes, custard. Milk and egg yolk... eggs... eggs.

"Oh... sorry, doc." Tony blinked, coming out of his custard daze, and looked over at the doctor with a smile.

Alright Tony' Marita called back' Custard it is" she said, writing it down. Zula glared at Nairda ' Its Zula, with an a.. and well, i'm probably here for another couple hours.. until the other receptionist Musa comes in.. if she comes in early then i'll tag along with you folks, stretch my legs, that kind of thing ' she shrugged.
- i think you mean marita" Marie corrected Nairda as she stretched her legs, having sat in that chair for several hours. 'already have a girlfriend Nairda' Marita said firmly..

"Huh, biatch? I didn't mention either of yo slick ass?" wondered Nairda, confused. "I was rappin' ta Zulu!"

He crossed to the door. "Whatever playa letz git tha hell outta here!" He kicked the door open and scampered into the streets, grateful to be away from the vengeful prowling eyes of Dr. Jiang and his telepathic secretary.

Or at least Nairda tried. The door to this underground clinic was specially reinforced to prevent people from breaking in.

"Nairda! What the fuck do you think you're doing!?" Anne snapped as she watched him try to break down the door.

An orderly went up to Nairda with a Taser in hand. "Back away from the door," she said calmly. The Puma locked eyes with him. "Doctor Jiang wants to talk to you after he sees another patient."

The doctor looked at Tony's chart and then the wound itself. It was still bloody and the stitches would eventually reabsorb but the liquid spray containing induced stem cells he had prepared from Tony's own blood was doing a remarkable job at healing it.

"It's doing quite well. If you follow the discharge instructions and keep using that liquid, it should heal fully in about a week or two. Right now, you can be discharged. As for activities, you can resume normal activities but nothing strenuous," he replied.

He pointed to the aforementioned bottle in its refrigerated jacket on the nightstand.

"Oh... thank god!" Tony sighed happily. "I was afraid I'd be cooped up here! Thank you, doc!" he exclaimed, climbing out of bed, and wobbling a bit on his feet. "Whoa! So uh... good painkillers!" he complimented the doctor, taking the bottle of fluid from him and heading for the bathroom to change. It always felt good to get released from intensive care and surgery, even though Tony had only done it once before.

Pretty soon, he was back in his usual attire, and walking out, bandage on his neck. "Hey guys!" he exclaimed, throwing his arms open wide. "I'm out! I can go... I'm a little stoned I guess from the meds, but otherwise, feeling OK." he said, nodding. He then noticed Nairda cornered by an orderly, and his eyes widened. "Uhhh... what?" he asked here, then shook his head. "Oh right..." Walking over to the receptionist, he handed her his emergency funds card, and paid his end of the bill. Most places didn't ask for money up front but...

"Anyway... we ready to go?" he asked the others. "Any suggestions on where to?" he inquired, his voice kind of a slurred, almost drunken tone. He was at least confident he could do this... whatever came next.

"Nairda!" Doctor Jiang called from the hallway. "I need to see you about your debt!"

The orderly shoved him to get him to start moving.

Soren put his newspaper on the table. "I'm not sure but we need information."

Anne rubbed her horn and smiled. "I have an idea. Right now, the Purifiers are probably creaming themselves over a chance to kill some Augments, right?"

Soren nodded. "No shit."

"Right. I'll use my horn to spoof a transmission, we'll ambush a Purifier and squeeze them for some info."

Soren smiled. He had some "squeezing" in mind...and it wasn't metaphorical.

(OOC - the Purifier they catch is one of the arsonists who destroyed Soren's house. I'm planning that they spoof a message and lure a strike team to what they think is a dinky little Augment store. It's actually an abandoned bakery.)

Before he left he cast one worried look at Marita. "Please Marie, help me up here biaaatch! Just pay him, I swear I be bout ta make it up ta you, nahmean biiiatch?"

Then he heard Zula was coming and his mood brightened. "You're coming! Ain't that chill

"I am not in the mood for games Nairda," Doctor Jiang said as he fixed his icy electronic gaze on the Wolf.

"I saw what you tried to do on camera. You ruined a piece of expensive equipment in your 'escape attempt'. That adds another 500,000 creds to your debt. I have however analyzed your augments and they'll cover your debt. Now, you have two choices, come up with that cash by tomorrow or I will have my guards find you and I will remove and sell your augments to pay for it? Is that clear?"

Anne stepped out into the grimy alleyway. She cursed as she crunched a drug vial under her hoof.

Soren had his rifle ready and his eyes peeled for threats.

I be bout ta have dat scrilla fo' you as soon as you won't even believe!" Inching his way away from the doctor, he gingerly turned the knob and made his way out into the lobby.

"Dum diddy-dum, here I come biaaatch! Who tha fuck wants lunch, biatch? I be famished fo' a shitload of mah straight-up cereal, Alpha-Bits!" He announced joyously to the girls.

A drunken bum staggered into the alleyway and began to relieve himself against the trailer's rear tire.

Tony nodded, and stepped out into the early morning air, noting his Pierce-Arrow was still there with a smile. "Ahhh good... nothing happened to her... she's still in one piece."

"Well I was gonna suggest I drive but... I can't... I'm not really hungry either, aside for custard. Maybe breakfast in a bit but... for now..." He shook his head. "Gotta just let my stomach settle. Soooo..." Maybe it was because he was high, he wasn't sure, but he was feeling more bold than he'd typically feel under any other circumstance. "Liquid courage" they called it, except he wasn't drunk.

He sidled over to Anne, not wanting to seem as if he was being too direct. "Anne..." he began. "I know you aren't really looking for a long term-relationship or anything but... for some reason... you've kinda grown on me." The ferret blushed here. "I uh... don't mean to be direct but... I don't think we have a lot of time... would you perhaps settle for a... short-term... relationship?" he asked, closing his eyes now, and expecting to get slapped. He seemed to shrink a little here, withdrawing in on himself in anticipation.

Nairda leapt into the Arrow, slamming the door shut behind him. "Helloooooooooo ladies and muthafuckas! I be a gangbangin' free man! Now, whoz payin fo' brunch, biatch? I would yo, but I aint got a gangbangin' finger-lickin' dime biaaatch!" " He fluttered his eyelashes at Soren. "How tha fuck bout you pay snookums? Since I don't wanna distract Marie n' Zula from their...date...."

His idiocy was giving Anne and Tony the privacy they needed outside.

Soren shoved Nairda back with his rifle. "Call me 'snookums' again and I'll put a bullet in your groin," he growled.

He then saw the bum. "Hey! Quit pissin' on my vehicle!"

The bum hastily pulled up his pants and ran away.

Anne chewed her lip. She wasn't interested in a relationship but at the same time, snubbing the son of a crime lord was a bad idea. "Ehh, why not? It'll be like trying a new strain of pot."

"Really?" Tony asked, opening his eyes now and grinning stupidly. "Well uh... looks like everyone's getting into the car so... uh... if you wanted to try this new strain sooner rather than later..." he nodded subtly to the trailer. "I can't drive in my condition... but maybe I could... take something else for a spin?" he asked, raising his brows. "Only if you... want to, of course." he said here, sounding incredibly nervous. Usually, he was much more confident and self-assured, but the drugs were making him giddy.

Vergil slid into the back seat as well, smirking at Nairda's and Soren's antics.

A police officer and a detective entered Kojuuro's room.

"Sir, you are under arrest for public indecency and sexual assault of an non-sapient," the detective said.

"What!?" Kojuuro exclaimed as he shot up from the bed, only to he stopped by a spike of pain.

"Anything you say can be used against you." The police officer then began to handcuff him.

(Alleyway)

Anne climbed into the trailer. "In a little bit."

She smiled and lay down on the couch, emphasizing her dress's smooth folds.

Soren climbed in after her. He took off his rifle and other gear and sat on a chair. "Tony, I think I have a plan."

"You got it..." Tony practically breathed, watching her lay down on the couch, and taking a moment to just admire her as she lay there, eyes playing over her form. Then Soren climbed in, nearly giving Tony a heart attack.

"Jeez! Well uh... OK... go ahead." Tony said, nodding as he sat down as well. He then buzzed Marita. "Hey Marita... we're discussing strategy back here... you guys can go and get breakfast if you want. We'll wait. Don't worry about it." he told her over the intercom.

"Is this about Lily?" stammered Kojurro. "Because she was still sapient when I..." he trailed off, realizing there was no way they could know about that. "And we didn't even get anywhere with that night! This is absurd!"

But his prior wounds from Kozlov were preventing him from actually fighting back; had he been in his normal form, he would have beaten both of these men to a pulp. However, he did have enough strength to surreptitiously implant both of the men with his signature bugs.

Nairda's eyes lit up when he saw how Tony looked at Anne. He could tell a romantic upgrade when he saw one.

"Snookums, how bout you explain tha plan ta me, n' our slick asses leave dis trailer....less overstuffed. Y'all KNOW dat shit, muthafucka! Therez nuff room wit tha hoes up in tha car," he offered brightly, winking conspicuously at Tony and leading the way into the car where Marie, Marita, Zula, and Rose were waiting. "No. Lanthae Aquarium reported that you was engaged in...sexual activity with one of their sharks two nights ago."

The two cops escorted him past the nurse's office and down the elevator.

A nurse exiting one of the patient rooms stopped to let the duo pass.

Soren got up and promptly kicked Nairda in the groin. Constantly being smacktalked, insulted and being hit on by Nairda finally caused the Human to snap. "Shut the fuck up! And don't ever call Marita a 'ho'!" He wasn't attracted to her but he was very thankful for all the help she gave the group. And he'll be damned if someone talking like a bad rapper was talking shit about her.

Anne got up and backhanded him across the face. "That's for being an obnoxious assclown and being a dick to Doctor Jiang. I overheard everything."

Kojurro allowed himself to be led away. "Oh yeah, that. I suppose that justifies this."

He had no further objections as they led him to the station and Broadstreet made him fill out sexual offender registration forms.

"I said 'ho'!" howled Nairda, clutching his gonads and falling to his knees. "Ho!" He repeated, frustrated. "Ho! G.I.R.L! It auto corrects itself biiiatch! Annit adds 'biiiatch' ta the end of sentences!"

Climbing up, he took a seat opposite Soren. "I don't really feel like eating at a time like this. So, ah... what's going on?"

Both Soren's kicking of Nairda and Anne's backhanding of him caused Tony to hold his sides and start laughing, the ferret rolling a bit on the chair as he guffawed. "Damn! It's about time someone put him in his place!" he crowed, pointing at the disabled Nairda. "Way to go!"

He saw Axel joining them, and then, the Pierce-Arrow got rolling. Dammit... so much for his intimate time with Anne... still... they could have some alone time when everyone was off to breakfast, as the ferret really just wasn't hungry right now. "Well, Soren was about to go over a plan he had with us." Tony explained with a snort, sitting more upright on the chair and composing himself.

Soren unwrapped his tempeh burger and took a bite. He swallowed his bite.

"All right, we know that the Purifiers like to attack famous Augments, pro-Augment activists and pretty much anyone associated with them, right?"

Anne wiped some ketchup off her muzzle with a napkin. "Well, yeah."

He looked at Anne's horn. "How powerful is the transmitter?"

"I can transmit anything to about thirty meters."

Soren shook his head. "It'll do. We'll buy one of those prepaid cell phones, have Anne transmit a set of fake coordinates to the Purifiers and then we can press them for info. Sound good?"

"Well yeah, it sounds good." Tony nodded here, glancing around at the group in the trailer, then buzzed Marita. "Banana is technically my favorite... but go with s'mores I guess for now." he answered her.

"So anyway, we get this phone, Anne transmits the signal, and we extract information from these guys. Sounds simple enough." The ferret nodded again, sitting back against the couch. "I was gonna show you some ways into the heart of the factory too, so we still have that."

Tony drummed his paws on his stomach now, and exhaled, looking around at the assemblage as he waited.

Axel listened to what Soren had to say, then shrugged. "Yeah... I guess that could work. We'd need to make sure we don't bring too many of them down on us, though." He considered. "And we need to get them somewhere quiet."

The rat bit his lip for a second, then glanced around at the group. "Hey, isn't there some big, abandoned bakery, or... or something near here? Might be a good place. I mean, it'll be out of the way, and nobody 'll interrupt us ..."

Tony reached over, and opened the door up, not moving off the couch as he retrieved the proffered custard. "Thanks!" he said gratefully, then eagerly dug in. He still was a bit peeved that his attempt to get some alone time hadn't entirely worked out, but he was still angling it around in his head. "Hmmmm... the bakery could work, yeah." Tony nodded here. He had to admit... he was kind of hoping to move this conference along, as he was still high, and still thinking about this short-term relationship. But he didn't want to come off like Nairda had at his father's place, after all.

Leaning over, he whispered to Anne. "If I had known it would've taken this long, I would've stayed at the clinic and asked you to remain behind... gotta have someone watching over me, right?" he joked with a wink.

"Well the plan sounds good to me." he said in a louder tone here, taking a bite out of his custard. "If you pull it off, we'll get some good info. Anything else?" he asked, looking around the trailer.

Axel saw as Tony leaned over and whispered something in Anne's ear, winking. Is something going on between them? he thought, sensing how eager he seemed to speed this meeting up. Axel remembered how they'd rushed into the trailer, alone, and he blinked.

"Alright then, I think I'll just... go check on the, ah... the others in the car," he stated lamely, feeling decidedly like the fourth-wheel, and hurried out of the trailer, moving across to the Pierce-Arrow. "Soren's got a plan to catch a Purifier and grill him for information," he explained to the others as he let himself into the back. "We can't screw things up this time." Looking to the side, Axel saw he was sitting next to Nairda, and immediately began feeling uncomfortable. "Oh, er. Hello... ah... dawg?"

Anne finished off her tempeh burger and stuck a few fries into her mouth. She blushed as Tony blatantly hit on her.

"Uh, anyways," she said, her ears splaying back in embarassment. "The wildcard is how many Purifiers show up. If only a few show up, we're good. If like thirty show up, we're fucked."

Soren took a sip of the tea he had brewed in the trailer. "Which is why we have to be careful what we say as a tip. If we say it's a pro-Augment rally, we might get a huge, heavily armed horde. Say its a small augment shop or factory and we might just get a team of arsonists."

"All right Marita... I'm taking over." Tony said, hooking a thumb over his shoulder. "I'm gonna drive us over to an abandoned bakery to capture those Purifiers. And before you argue... I'm fine. Not the first time I've driven while on painkillers, after all." he told her. "Now SOMEONE will have to move into the trailer, because there's only room for six up front, and I definitely want Axel up here because I need to discuss a few things with him." Why is some random secretary from the clinic coming with us? he thought to himself as he noticed her in the Berline.

"So yeah, don't worry about my driving. I feel up to it." he said sincerely, whipping out his phone and beginning to compose a text to Axel as he waited for Marita to exit the driver's side.

"Thanks for being a sport, Marita." Tony replied, sliding in behind the wheel, and feeling that sudden thrill of being in command of the V-12 once again. Nothing could beat an internal combustion engine! Turning the key in the ignition, he listened to the throaty roar of the V-12 spring to life. Better than the Lincolns, Packards, and Cadillacs that had come out with V-12s in the same era, Pierce-Arrow had beaten them all, and were renowned for their longevity and power.

Tony turned the radio on as he began to pull out of the lot, looking out the window so he could merge into traffic. Fall Out Boy's "My Songs Know What You Did in the Dark" was currently playing, and Tony drummed his paws on the steering wheel and the driver's side door in time to the rhythm as he drove out into the main street. This was unbeatable right now, as nothing could top driving a classic car to great tunes.

As he pulled onto the corner of 17th Street, he waved farewell to Ulsa (but wasn't her name Zula? Or maybe even Zulu?). "Cheers, miss!" he called, and then accelerated back into traffic. He hit send on his phone before they reached their next destination however, getting the directions to the bakery from Axel. Turning up the radio a bit, Tony bobbed his head and wove through traffic, making the turns Axel pointed out to him rather smoothly and driving surprisingly well for someone who was stoned. Driving was something Tony took insanely seriously, and he went into massive focus mode whenever he did it.

Approaching the abandoned bakery now, Tony slowed it down, and gradually rolled to a stop on the street. Turning the radio down, he pushed the intercom to the trailer. "We have reached our destination, ladies and gentlemen." Turning to Axel, he raised his brows. "Got my message?" he asked without elaborating. Tony kept the car idling, not turning it off just yet. "So I was thinking..." he said, back into the intercom. "We're gonna need eyes and ears on the Purifier base. You guys are gonna need Anne to make the call, and Marita's hacking to make it seem convincing. So why don't Axel, Vergil and myself drive down to the base and conduct some recon, see what kind of defenses they've set up since our last visit, and keep you posted while you get the info?" he suggested now. "This way, you got enough left behind to overwhelm the Purifier contingent, and only a minimal number will be going to reconnoiter the base." he outlined. "Sound good?"

Axel nodded. "We're running short on time. If we split up, we can see what the situation's like at the base, you guys can try and get as much new information as you can, then we can meet up again just before we..." he swallowed. "... Before we finish this. It's the most efficient way of doing things."

He leaned closer to the intercom. "We can keep in contact with you, Soren. If something turns up at the base, we'll let you know."

"We be seein you later Ulsa!" Said Nairda cheerily. "Say, what happened ta Zula? Where did she go?"

He had settled for some bowl of Chinese food, and when he finished it he sent it frisbeeing to the trashcan, where it missed by a mile and skittered to the floor amongst other litter.

"Gotcha!" Soren said into the intercom. He then looked at the group around him. "All right, first things first is we see what we've got. But before that..."

He went into the weapons locker, got out the rifle, combat helmet and ballistic vest he had worn before.

Anne pulled the Luger out of her dress. She pushed the door opened and looked over the factory. It was quite obviously an industrial bakery with a dilapidated sign proudly boasting of "Lanthae's finest algae crisps". The windows had been shot out and debris was scattered over the weed choked lot. The forced open door indicated that it had been hit by looters at least once. "The lot's choked with weeds but I don't think it matters. But the doors have been forced open."

Soren sighed. "Great. That means we gotta sweep to make sure there's no bums or anything that could fuck this up."

Interestingly, the factory wasn't at ground level, but it was on an elevated platform a few hundred feet up.

Tony waited for the others to exit the trailer and the car, and then waved at the group. "We'll stay in contact! See ya soon!" he called, honking as he drove off. Vergil was in the back seat, and Axel in the front passenger side. "Hoo! OK... hope you didn't think ill of this but... I'm just worried Lily might not have a lot of time." the ferret explained. "Thanks for agreeing to go along." he told the rat.

"Besides, we'll see what's going down at the base, and try and get a read on the situation. I won't be jumping the gun unless it's absolutely necessary." Tony outlined. He started heading for the highway that would take them to the Purifier compound, knowing this would likely be their last chance at getting Lily out of there.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on March 31, 2014, 09:21:21 AM

Axel glanced at Tony and nodded. "No, you're right. We can't screw things up... this is it. I don't want to take any chances - we have to know exactly what we're heading into." He let out a trembling breath and stared out the window as the highway rushed past, his jaw clenching. "If they've hurt her, I'll kill all of them." As he spoke, Emilena's tracer gun dug into his back, and for a second he considered if he should let Tony and Vergil know about Emilena, and the plan that he was hoping, praying would work. But if the others found out... especially Soren, who likely couldn't see past his hatred of her... if any harm came to Emilena, the whole plan would fall apart. And that wasn't a chance Axel thought he could take. The rat sighed and rubbed his face, suddenly feeling drained.

After a moment, Axel raised his eyes again. "And jesus... killing all the augmented in Lanthae?! Just... fuck, this is crazy..."

"Take it easy." Tony cautioned as he sped down the highway. "We don't know anything just yet, and going on a killing spree might not be the best thing to keep you alive." he pointed out. "You CAN'T let your emotions run away with you... I know that sucks to hear, but... at least initially, you gotta keep a cool head."

"He's right." Vergil put in. "Losing your head is precisely what they're hoping you'll do, I'm sure. Call me impartial, but from what I can remember of my life, it's never a good idea to go too crazy with your emotions."

"Well hey... I just don't wanna see you dead over this, that's all." Tony continued. "Especially if she's still alive... but only hurt. Remember... the exploding reactor and my father's men will take care of all of them... no exceptions. Either way, they're going to die. Just keep that in mind. MOST important thing is NOT killing them if they've hurt Lily... but getting Lily out of there first and foremost. Any vendetta you have should come secondary to saving her."

"Tony, might I borrow your cell phone?" Vergil asked here.

"Uh... what for?" the ferret replied.

"Internet search." Vergil responded.

"Well... all right. Here." Tony took it out and held it out for the gecko to take, which he did, beginning to tap through it as he did some research.

"Anyway... just let the rest of us handle killing them... cause believe me... I owe them some payback too." the ferret said resolutely. He swallowed as he saw the Purifier complex looming large in the distance. Putting his directional on, he took the Pierce-Arrow down the exit towards the ruined industrial part of the city. Exhaling, he began slowing down the closer he got. "There's an old high rise that overlooks the factory... we could set up in there. What do you think?" Tony asked Axel.

Vergil had found what he'd been looking for, and was reading with some fascination as he started absorbing this new information. This red gecko... was he his old superior officer?

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 01, 2014, 12:38:47 PM

As the Purifier's base reared up ahead of them, frustrated tears blurred Axel's vision. Being this close to her, not knowing whether she was alive or dead, was driving him crazy. Get a grip on yourself... Grinding his teeth, he took a deep breath and blinked them away. "Don't worry, I'm... I know I need to keep a clear head about this." He looked around at Tony and Vergil. "And I've got no arguments against you killing as many of them as you can. But just... just be careful. I want you guys to make it out too." His mouth twitched, an attempt at a smile. "I want all of us to make it out."

When Tony suggested the high rise, Axel craned his neck to look up at it. The ferret was right, it would give them a good overview of the compound. He nodded. "Yeah, let's go for it." The industrial area surrounding the base was a mess. As they drove through its empty streets, the wrecked and abandoned buildings flanked them on either side, the smashed windows and broken doors gaping like mouths. Axel shivered, his imagination running wild and making him feel like they were being watched.

As they neared the high rise, the sound of Vergil tapping away at the phone drew Axel's attention. "You okay?" he asked, looking back at the gecko, an amused expression flicking across his features. "Checking out what you've missed since you were stuck in that... tube thing?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on April 01, 2014, 10:10:14 PM

Tony felt much the same way as Axel did, and it was an easy thing for the imagination to run away with you in an area like this. He drove more slowly here, not wanting to attract any unnecessary attention.

"Dammit!" Vergil exclaimed from the back seat. "No... I was trying to find a red gecko from my memories... and it turns out he's dead. Died several years ago. I recalled him being my superior officer or something. Turns out he was one of the most famous warlords ever from the Scorched Earth War. He almost single-handedly ended it, using at times questionable tactics, but he was lauded as a hero... then he went rogue. Him and this other guy called Kalis, who was another hero of the war. They started terrorizing the planet for a few years with their accumulated forces, but finally, a great naval battle was fought between much of the world's remaining forces and the massive fleet of Kalis and this gecko. Kalis betrayed his former comrade, and fired on the gecko's flagship, killing him in the process as Kalis assumed command of the forces and still leads them to this day. I remember that memory specifically... I could see this gecko battling a female on the bridge of his ship... and then... fire and explosions... how did I survive?" Vergil wondered aloud, shaking his head.

"Anyway... as fascinating and compelling as this story is... he was my one lead, and he's dead. The only other person I can think of is maybe Kalis, but he sounds like a really evil dude, from what I'm reading. I wonder... was I part of the world's navies back then?" he mused aloud. "I just can't... remember." he sighed here, closing his eyes. "This has brought up more questions than answers, I'm afraid."

Tony pulled the car to a stop next to the high rise, and killed the engine. "OK... here we are. Really fascinating, Vergil. Sorry about your lead being dead, though. Hey Axel, you and Vergil check the place out while I lock up the car and trailer and get us some weapons. Be careful, OK?" the ferret cautioned. "The Purifiers sometimes come in here, but it's not very frequently, so we should be good."

Title: Into the Black

Axel pulled out the Luger and nodded apprehensively. "On it. You watch it too, okay? If you see someone coming, call for us." He let himself out, then walked around to the entrance of the high rise and waited for Vergil to join him. Peering through the dusty glass, he couldn't see anything but darkness. Hearing light footsteps next to him, Axel looked down at the gecko. "Hey, I'm sorry you're out of ideas about... you know, who you are. If you ever need any help, then... I'll be there. I mean, it's the least I can do for your help now." He swallowed and shook his head. "As long as we don't all, ah, die in the next few hours. Anyway... you ready? Let's do this..."

Axel pushed the door in, and it slowly opened, the rusted hinges squealing in protest. He winced, and stopped pushing once the door was just open wide enough, then slipped through. The small lobby room was cloaked in shadow beyond the light that leaked through the doorway, the pungent smell of damp clinging to the air along with what seemed to be years worth of dust. Axel fished his phone out of his pocket and flicked it on, using the low blue light as a torch. Shining the light around revealed a dusty tile floor, a moldy couch propped in the corner, and a rotting wooden desk. After checking to make sure nobody was hiding behind it, Axel turned his attention to the set of stairs in front of them that led up... and a small red light to the side caught his eye. Swinging the phone's light to it, he saw it was the elevator's 'Up' button. Why give power to the lift? he wondered.

Turning to Vergil, he pointed towards the elevator. "This has power... Should we take it, or walk?" Axel looked at his small legs with a quick grin. "I'm guessing you're not exactly Speedy Gonzales with taking stairs, huh?"

Soren followed. He used his rifle's built in tac light to peer around. Nothing, just various mixers, bread slicers, ovens and other bakery equipment lying around in various states of disrepair.

The catwalk overhead was dilapidated; he dared not climb up there for fear it would collapse.

"All right," Soren said. "We only have five people so we need to position ourselves so we can shoot the Purifiers as they funnel through the entrance. Remember, leave at least one alive."

Anne looked around. "We could just hide behind the bakery equipment." She tapped her horn. "All right, I'm ready to transmit."

"Yeah well... I guess... I guess I'll just have to regroup and figure something else out. Maybe I could check enlistment records in that war but... reading about how serious it was, I doubt I'd find anything out on me." the gecko said with resignation. Walking into the building now, he scanned the room with his eyes, but sensed no presences within. Noticing the elevator had power, his face fell a little here and looked at the rat with a "really?" look. "Yes well... I can walk just fine but... elevator would probably be best just to save us time." he informed him with a solemn nod.

Tony entered now behind them, carrying some weapons and a small toolbox-looking chest with him. "All right guys, car's locked, as is the trailer. Oh wow... the power's still on, I see. It used to be on in this building back when I was a Purifier too; that's how I knew about it. Hey Axel..." Tony set the chest down and pushed the call button, the doors opening immediately. "I need to talk to you about something before we get too settled in." the ferret stated, stepping into the elevator now along with Vergil. "Also, pick your weapons." Tony said, showing off the assortment he'd brought with him. The ferret had selected a non-projectile (aka laser) pistol for himself, and had a small, folding SMG as well. He had a concealed knife on him too that had a little surprise in it, in case of emergencies. He figured they'd more heavily arm themselves when they started their initial infiltration.

The elevator doors closed behind Axel as he followed the others in. Tapping the button that would take them to the top floor, the lift jerked then started pulling up roughly. The dim yellow light illuminating the compartment flickered. At the mention of weapons, Axel turned to look at what Tony had brought with him. "Good idea," he said, swapping out his Luger for a smaller pistol. "I was almost out."

As he tucked it into his jeans, his arm brushed against Emilena's gun. He blinked. If more people knew, maybe the plan would have more luck in working... and I trust these guys. They wouldn't do anything to risk it... "I... have have something to tell you too..." Axel started, then paused. He looked at Tony. "But, ah... you can go first. What is it?"

Anne swore. "Shit. I could've given you a moziafil tab to keep awake but I left them in the trailer."

Soren nodded as he yawned. "I'll rest for a bit."

"I'll go first." The mare then turned to Marie. "Have you got the phone and fake info and script ready?"

"Wait, so how is this gonna work?"

Anne tapped her horn. "I read the script and use my horn to transmit it into the phone. Doctor Jiang implanted a spoofer module that lets me fake coordinates. If we just transmit it with the computer, it'll show that the area the tip says is an abandoned bakery and they'll be rightfully suspicious. But with my module, I can say that the factory's gone and its an augment repair shop."

Tony blinked, rocking his head back a bit here in surprise. "You do?" he asked, not expecting this. "Well all right... I'll go first." he nodded. "I was thinking... I don't know how long we can wait here... if we see any indication that things aren't going well for Lily or just in general... not that we'd be able to see that from here probably but you get my drift... I say we just go in. I can get you right into that base, we head for the reactor, Vergil points out Lily... speaking of which... she still in there?" he asked the gecko.

Vergil closed his eyes, and seemed to be serenely concentrating. "Yes." he replied after a moment, opening his eyes. "She's still inside."

"OK, good. So yeah, I was thinking we really can't wait if there's signs of trouble. I think I'll call Soren in a bit to see how his end of things is going, and get a time estimate from them." the ferret stated. "But I highly doubt you just want to wait around here either. So anyway... what were you gonna tell me?" Tony asked as the elevator reached the top floor and with a groan the doors slid open. Tony stepped out into the empty offices now, the windows all around them letting in the eerie light of day through the dusty glass.

Anne sighed as she heard the crash. "Somebody shut that asshole up before he fucks us all over!"

She looked over the script and the cellphone. The phone had already been programmed with the Purifier tip line that was from the TV ultimatium. The laptop had the script ready, a program that altered one's voice and a dialer intended for use with smartphones – such as the ones they had. The data cable was connected to the phone. The laptop's radio antenna was out as well.

The mare cracked her knuckles.

Soren, fuming, stomped over to Nairda and promptly pushed him against the wall. "Nairda," he said. "Quit being an annoying bag of dicks and make yourself useful by finding something like a breakroom that we can rest in."

He then pointed to the stainless steel kitchenware on the ground. "If you fuck this up, I will shove the industrial sized mixing paddle so far up your ass that you won't be able to sit down!"

"Shut the fuck up! I'm trying to work!" Anne shouted. Her train of thought had been interrupted.

She turned to the three women. "Can one of you get Nairda to shut up? I can't concentrate."

Axel didn't say anything for a moment as they stepped out of the elevator. He walked up to a window and ran an arm across the glass, brushing the dust and grime away. Far below, he could see the base, could see figures milling around inside its walls, looking like they were preparing for something. After a moment, Axel sighed. "Yeah. Maybe you're right. I know how risky it'd be, but... we need to get her out of there as soon as possible. That's the most important thing for me. The reactors... they can come later. But we'll need help rescuing Lily, and..."

Axel turned to face them. "That story I told you before, Vergil. I... I wasn't telling the truth." He glanced at Tony. "When you were being treated back at the clinic, I got a message from someone, asking me to come meet them. It... it was Emilena. She's got a plan to cure Lily." He swallowed and shook his head. "I... I know trusting her again sounds crazy after... you know. And that's part of the reason I was keeping quiet about it. So if something went wrong, I'd be the only one who had to deal with the consequences." Walking away from the window, the floor creaking, Axel sat on an old, dusty desk and rubbed the bandage over his ear, staring at the floor. "I... I can't think of a reason why she'd betray us again. Lupis already has Lily, and Emilena was home free. Coming back gives her nothing. And the stuff she told me..."

He looked up. "Back at the base, when everything went to hell, I found out what's wrong with Lily. She's been... I don't know how you'd describe it... possessed by some kind of creature, and as time goes on it's taking her over. But... it's given Lily the ability to throw her mind to other bodies. At your mansion, Tony, when Emilena vanished - that was Lily, somehow she managed to teleport her away. And when that happened, it created some kind of connection between Emilena and that creature, so she could see the things that it's seen. And she saw that..." Axel swung his gaze to the gecko. "Vergil, remember that huge rhino that you... fried? He's a clone. Lupis has been making new copies of him again, and again. That means they have the technology to make clones, right there, in the base! Emilena knows how to use those cloning... machines, or whatever they are. And she found Lily's backpack in those woods, with some of her lipstick inside. She has Lily's DNA... If I can get rescue Lily, and get Emilena inside that lab... then we can clone her, and Lily can use her mind-throwing ability to take over the clone! She'd be cured!"

Axel looked desperately between the two of them. "Look, just getting Lily out of there... it's not enough. We have to split her away from that creature, before it's too late, and Emilena's plan is the only hope I have left of doing that..." Reaching behind his back, he unclipped the holster with the tracer gun still inside and held it out for them to see. "She gave me this... If I take it out of this holster, it'll start giving off a signal. Once that happens, Emilena can find me and we... we try to help Lily." Axel gritted his teeth. "So what... what do you guys say?"

Tony went silent as Axel began explaining the situation to them, and found out he'd been lied to this whole time since the clinic. But on top of that, there was way more to this than he'd been led to expect. It seemed they couldn't just get Lily out of there now, and had to create a clone of her to get her consciousness back into a normal body. Folding his arms across his chest, the ferret looked down at the floor intently as he listened.

Vergil had an emotionless expression on his face, staring ahead but not looking at anything in particular as new details were outlined. When Axel finished, Tony finally looked up, trying to process all of it. "I just..." he began, shaking his head. "I don't really have any objections. I mean... you're right... what does she have to gain by coming back now? I just... as much as I don't want to trust her... what have we got to lose, at this point?" He shrugged here, still not fully shaking the feeling that he couldn't completely trust her.

"This is gonna require a revision to our plan, then. We're gonna need more time... jesus, why didn't you tell me this sooner?" Tony asked with frustration. "Do you know what would've happened had we set the reactors to blow and you sprang this on me AFTER that?" he demanded. But then he considered... maybe Axel hadn't wanted to say it in front of the others, either. Pausing, Tony composed himself. "All right... at least you told us now... and you probably had your reasons not to say anything beforehand. But we can't go right for those reactors in that case. We're gonna need to move more swiftly and secretively to get Lily to safety AND... get that clone of hers... do you even know how long the cloning process takes?" Tony added here as he thought of it. "Based on that, we can figure out how much time we'll need overall in the base, and go as quickly as possible under the circumstances." he stated, beginning to rethink his plan.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 05, 2014, 04:23:23 PM

"I couldn't say about this sooner," Axel said as he flexed his fingers nervously. "Do you have any idea how much Soren hates Emilena? I've got no idea what he'd do if he saw her again... and I wasn't about to take that chance. She's the only one who'd know how to clone Lily." He bit his lip. "And... no. No, I don't know how long it would take. Not long. If Emilena was here, she could tell us... and it'd be a lot easier to form a plan." He held up the holster and put a hand on the pistol. "So it's alright, then? No arguments against her coming?" Axel looked between the two, then slowly drew the gun out of the protective casing. As soon as he took it out it started transmitting, letting Emilena know exactly where they were.

Axel sighed and put it beside him on the desk. "She said she wouldn't be long, so... I guess while we wait we can start coming up with some kind of strategy." He slid off the desk and padded over to the window again. "Damn it... I was hoping there'd be less of them at the base. You know, if they're planning a mass attack on the city, but..." Shaking his head in frustration, he looked back over his shoulder at Vergil. "You... you said Lily was still there, right? She's not... She's okay?"

One floor below, five Purifiers were staring up at the ceiling, listening to the creaks and thumps as people walked around in the office above them.

"I fucking told you I heard something!" one whispered.

"How many up there?"

The short, squat leopard in the middle held up three fingers. He looked at the others and readied his assault rifle. "Let's go."

"Right... well I don't blame you for holding out... I'd temporarily forgotten just how much Soren hates her. And well... I don't trust her either but... go ahead." He acquiesced, letting Axel pull the gun without any further protest.

Vergil closed his eyes, and concentrated again. "I'm not detecting extreme levels of duress, no, so I would say that for now, she's all right." he responded, reopening his eyes with a smile directed at Axel.

"Right well... I say we head down to street level. Get out in the open to meet her." Tony suggested. "Also... Axel I had kind of only given you half the story before." he confessed as he started heading for the elevator. "See I was thinking... I think Rhaegson's gotta die... and I think I should be the one to do it. If he DOESN'T die... this hatred of augments is just gonna continue and sure, there will be others taking up his mantle, but... it'll cripple them if he dies and we can ensure it by making sure it gets done right and not leaving it up to chance in the explosion. So I was thinking at some point during our infiltration... I go straight for his office and take him out. What do you think?" the ferret inquired, looking between the two of them now, but mostly at Axel.

Axel picked up the tracker pistol, leaving the holster behind so it could keep transmitting, and tucked it away. "Going straight after... Rhaegson, was it?" he blinked, following Tony as they made their way back through the office. "You'd... I mean, you'd have to be really careful. I don't know how easy it'd be to get to him... But if you get the chance, if you can see an opportunity..." He looked sideways at Tony and nodded. "Kill the son of a bitch."

Reaching the elevator, Axel leaned over and tapped the button... then frowned as the doors didn't open immediately. From below came a low, muffled groan as the lift rose up. He shot Tony a puzzled glance. "Should..." he started to speak, then stopped as the doors creaked open. He turned to face forwards - and a rifle butt shot out of the elevator, connecting against his nose with a crunch and rocking his head back. As Axel stumbled from the impact, a heavily muscled arm darted out and grabbed the front of his hoodie, pulling him forwards and into the group of Purifiers gathered in the elevator, who were all aiming assault rifles at Tony and Vergil. The one who'd pulled Axel in spun him around and wrapped an arm across his throat, holding him as a hostage. The other four stepped out, keeping their weapons steady on the gecko and ferret.

"Drop your fucking weapons!" shouted the leopard who was holding the dazed Axel, looking between Tony and Vergil. He dug a pistol into Axel's temple. "Now. Or the gleamer fucking dies!" Axel tried to say something, but the blood running back into his broken nose made him choke.

Tony nodded, and then noticed something odd about the elevator. It had gone down a floor. Reaching for his laser pistol, the ferret whipped it out just as Axel's head got cracked by the rifle butt. Firing off a shot, the red beam sliced cleanly through the chest of one of the Purifiers, the fellow giving him a shocked look as he tumbled down dead on the floor of the elevator.

But Axel was quickly pulled in and taken hostage, and while Tony kept his gun trained on the group, he knew he couldn't possibly kill all of them. "Heh..." He glanced at Vergil, who only gave him a single nod. He knew Vergil could take these guys out, but with Axel... it might be too risky at present. "That doesn't sound like a good idea..." the ferret responded. "See we drop our weapons, you kill all of us anyway... so why don't I just shoot as many of you as I can right now. Might take all of you with me for all you know. Bullshit! I know how you assholes work!" He snapped, keeping the pistol trained on the head of one of them. He didn't show it, but his adrenaline was racing, and he was inwardly terrified of this standoff. "You have to give me some sort assurance you aren't gonna retaliate for that jerk I just dropped! Cause right now... me dying fighting back sounds like a better deal than surrender now and get killed in a few minutes anyway. So put your money where your mouth is and show me some goddamn good faith or I swear to god I'll slice this asshole's head from his body!" he shouted, still pointing the pistol threateningly at one of them.

He didn't let on for the moment how worried he was for Axel, or how worried for his own safety he was, but he knew Purifiers were lying, cheating bastards, and their words weren't worth shit. He needed to somehow make them agree not to harm them, or their lives wouldn't be worth a grain of salt if he lowered his own weapon.

"How about this?" Vergil suggested, stepping forward now to try and diffuse the situation. "You let one of us go to avoid any further shooting, and the other one will surrender willingly. Tony, your father's men are starting to arrive." Vergil told the ferret now, giving him a nod.

"Right!" Tony breathed, gripping his pistol tightly and relieved to hear that. "So what do you guys say? Let one of us go... and I'll put down my weapon." he said, not budging.

Emilena jumped when the scanner suddenly flashed positive. She had guessed the correct side of the base they would attempt to break through. Setting off at a brisk run, she headed for the run-down industrial area surrounding the Purifier base.

She didn't relish meeting the others again. Hopefully Axel didn't screw something up and she was about to walk into some angry mafia goons...

Crawling up behind a large abandoned generator, she peeked at the coordinates of the transmitting pistol. She only saw two people she'd never seen before. Well, crap, what exactly do I do about...

After they spoke to othes, she realized there was a currently a standoff going on. Axel was being held hostage. Her first impulse was to draw her pistol and snipe the hostage-taker, but that hadn't turned out too well for the teammate last time she did that.

Slinking back down the generator, she began circling around. She'd have more options if she could get behind the hostage-taker.

Nairda giggled. "So, like, when is dis Purifier gonna show up, you know what tha fuck I be saying?" he asked. Y'all KNOW dat shit, muthafucka! "Cause maybe they didn't take tha bait, you know cuz they have way mo' blingin thangs ta do than bother one anonymous 'came git me' message fo' realz. Such as preparin ta fire a giant laser dat kills dem all up in one fell tha fuck swoop. And what tha fuck shiznit exactly was our crazy asses hopin ta git from tha hostage anyway, biatch? We already have they location, they plan, they base layout, n' they strength up in numbers."

This entire monologue was very poorly rapped to the tune of Gangsta's Paradise by Coolio.

The leopard's eyes shone for a second when Vergil mentioned Tony's name. "Tony Stracci... I thought I recognised you. Fucking traitor." His mouth twitched. "And your father's men are coming? You don't say..." He drilled his gun harder against the side of Axel's head. "Stracci, if I wanted to kill you right here, right now, why the hell wouldn't I have done it already? No. It's not going to be that quick. Not for you. I'm sure we're all gonna want to know why you thought you'd attack us. So these are your options."

He tightened his arm around Axel's neck, cutting off the rat's air supply. Axel thrashed, his mouth opening as he desperately tried to suck in a breath, but the leopard's grip was starting to crush in his windpipe, making it impossible. The leopard dragged Axel forwards, out of the lift. "Option A. Both of you drop your weapons, we take you in and you live a little longer. Or option B, watch your friend choke out, my men open fire on you, and you die now." He grinned. Axel's struggles had started to become weaker, his chokes becoming ragged. "Better hurry, Stracci. Looks like you don't have much longer." The leopard stared Tony in the eye. "So what's it going to be?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on April 06, 2014, 07:24:48 PM

Tony ignored the comment about his father's men gathering. "All right, listen! Knock it off! Cut the crap!" he yelled. "You know damn well you touch one hair on my body and my father will crush your organization and you know he's fully capable of doing so. We have men everywhere... EVERYWHERE... even in your little base, all right? So unless Rhaegson wants to wake up with his balls in his mouth and his entrails hanging out, you'll cut the shit, stop strangling him, and take me to Rhaegson, all right?" Tony started lowering his pistol slowly, but not all the way, watching as Axel was throttled. "Lay off him, cause if I see him pass out, you aren't getting shit, and I'm gonna opt for option B, cause it's sure as shit better than getting tortured to death by you cunts, got it?" he asked, his pistol pointing more at the groin now of the Purifier who had his rifle trained on him.

"I need assurances. No harm comes to me... or these two either. Cause if it does and my father finds out... you're all dead anyway, got it? I'm NOT dropping this weapon till you lay off, and if you don't... well we'll see how many of us are standing at the end of this, capice?" he asked again. He knew he couldn't just give in to this crap. If he did... he could be used against his father... and that was the last thing he wanted. He could NOT compromise his family... even if it meant his own death. The way he saw it, there were no real options anyway, because of the Purifiers' threat against the city. Either they stopped them now, or they didn't stop them at all.

Vergil suddenly sensed the same presence he'd sensed back in the bushes the last time a standoff had occurred. He knew it wasn't hostile, and figured it might be this Emilena they had been talking about before. Good! If they could buy a few more minutes... then maybe... at least he knew Axel would pass out first before dying. It took several minutes for the brain to die from oxygen deprivation after losing consciousness, so they had time. He maintained his non-threatening posture, getting ready to spring into action the minute the tables turned.

(Abandoned Bakery)

Anne had managed to shut Nairda out long enough to complete her work. She rubbed her muzzle with a hand.

"All right, now all we do is wait," she said. The mare then ducked behind a disused automatic package and pulled out her pistol. "And Nairda," she added. "If you fuck this up, I will sodomize you with my horn."

(Lanthae Streets)

A simple electric sedan cruised down the streets and elevated highways of Lanthae. The four beings inside were dressed in casual clothing. All in all, one could mistake them for a group of friends out for lunch or another activity.

The truth was far more sinister. The four were freshly inducted Purifiers eager to prove themselves to Rhaegson and the tip they got was just the ticket.

Emilena had circled around the group and was now behind the conversing forces. Drawing her katana (but not activating it, for fear of the Purifiers hearing), she crept forward towards the back of the one holding Axel hostage.

For their part, the ferret and the gecko were doing an excellent job demanding their assailant's attention, and she basically had to trust that they would consider her an ally and not give her away.

Once she was close enough, she swung with precision, aiming to bifurcate the hostage-holder from the gun-holding shoulder blade through the heart and out the other hip. The blow was designed to be instantly lethal while also quickly severing the muscles allowing the trigger finger to operate, to prevent a repeat of the reflex shooting when she intervened in a situation like this before.

Of course, now that she's made her surprise move, every other Purifier in the team will instantly hear her, and she has no cover...

Nairda shrugged. "Whatever n' shit. I just don't git why they wouldn't instead go fo' legitimate, already obviously existin Augment stores like tha one you used ta own, Soren."

Axel felt the pressure on his throat suddenly release and he fell back, collapsing over the lower half of the leopard's corpse. Rolling to his side, he gasped for air, coughs wracking his body... and saw the Purifier to the left spin around and aim his rifle at something behind him. Without thinking, Axel snatched up the pistol the leopard had dropped, and fired a volley of shots at him. The bullets caught the Purifier in the chest and he dropped to the floor, gurgling.

The other two Purifiers swore and opened fire on Tony and Vergil.

The sedan eventually pulled up outside the abandoned bakery. The driver frowned, keeping the engine running. "This doesn't seem like a gleamer shop..."

One of the men sitting in the back shook his head. "I told you. This doesn't make any sense. Why the hell did we even come here? We just have to wait a little longer, and we can take them out then... This is a fucking trap, I'm telling you."

The driver turned in his seat. "If they found out we took the initiative and did this now, we're gonna get some kind of reward or something. I'm telling you, Felix."

The man in the back, Felix, looked back at the driver. "You're a moron."

"Fuck you." The driver looked back at the old building apprehensively. "Alright, one of us checks it out. If something looks off, we get the hell out of here. Felix, you're up."

"The fuck I am."

The other two Purifiers nodded their head, pleased they weren't being nominated. "Just check it out. Don't be a pussy."

"Felix, you don't check it out, we'll leave you here and you can walk back." The driver glared at him. "Hurry up."

After a long pause, Felix sighed and opened the Sedan's door. "You guys are assholes. You'd better wait here for me." The others nodded, and after giving them the finger, Felix climbed out and approached the bakery cautiously. Reaching the door, he pushed it open slowly and stepped in, drawing his gun. Peering around, it was obvious the place wasn't being used any more. He was about to turn and leave when he heard the faint noise of what sounded suspiciously like someone rapping. Glancing around rapidly, he caught a glimpse of someone hiding behind a disused package, their horn poking up and giving them away. "Oh shit! Guys, it is a fucking trap! I told you!" Felix cried, turning to bolt out the door.

It was over in an instant. Tony blinked, and the leopard holding Axel hostage was down. Whatever this was, he was not one to question providence. Firing off a blast, his laser beam cut through the lower abdomen of the Purifier, causing him to drop to the ground, screaming in pain before Tony permanently silenced him with a shot to the head.

Vergil merely concentrated on the final Purifier, halted his initial salvo in mid-air, and then picked his body up, the bullets clattering harmlessly to the ground, before tossing him against the wall and watching him fall lifeless to the floor. "I think that covers that." the gecko stated simply, brushing his hands together.

Nodding, Tony ran over to Axel, helping him get back to his feet. "You all right? Sorry I didn't negotiate but... I CAN'T compromise my family's integrity. You know how some don't negotiate with terrorists? Well I don't negotiate with assholes." Tony joked, helping support the rat. He looked in Emilena's direction now, recognizing her instantly. "So... you got the signal." he stated, not holstering his gun just yet, but not raising it at her either.

Soren stepped out from behind the pile of moldering boxes near the door that the Purifier had overlooked he had crouched behind.

"Going somewhere?" he asked as he leveled his rifle with the man's chest.

Anne also trained her pistol on the man.

(OOC: They're all human, but it probably doesn't matter :p)

Felix stopped dead in his tracks when he saw Soren blocking his escape. Just beyond, the door hung half open, tantalisingly revealing the street behind it. He could see the sedan, his partners staring out of the windows in open mouthed surprise. "Guys, get-" he started. There was a squealing of tires, and the car sped away. "Assholes!" Felix shrieked.

Slowly, he looked around the room and raised his arms in the air, letting his pistol fall to the floor. A nervous smile creased his thin face. "Uh... this isn't the Robo-Ninja convention? My mistake, I'll just be going..."

Axel coughed and spat out a mouthful of blood as Tony helped him up. "It's alright... I'm... I'm fine," he said, rough-voiced. His nose throbbed with pain, and he put a hand to it. Something crunched again, and he winced, taking his hand off quickly. "Dammit..." Raising his eyes, Axel looked at the person who'd saved him and saw it was none other than Emilena. He nodded appreciatively. "Thanks. You, ah... you weren't kidding when you said you'd be fast..."

Diving out from behind cover, Nairda opened fire on Felix with his pistol turned sideways. "Dis is fo' Emilena moddafukkas!" he screamed with relish. "Come and get it biiiiiiiiatch!!!"

Emilena sheathed her katana. "I've heavily scoped this area out between our conversations. There's a portion of fence out of line-of-sight from the overlooking watchtowers just past the ventilation sheds to our south. Unless there are objections, it's our best way into the base."

She turned to go, and then paused. "Look, I know you have valid reasons not to trust me, and everyone seems so willing to just question me whatever chance they get, so for once I'm not interested. If you're planning on giving me some ultimatum where you'll only trust me until you have reason not to and then you won't hesitate to shoot me...just fucking leave. I've had it with that and you can just stay behind." Her plan was made for two people; two extras would obviously help, but were not necessary enough to put up with the nonsense she'd no doubt be getting from the last group she'd tried to work with. "We work as a team in there to get Lily out. So only team players are allowed to come."

She removed the helmets from the four Purifiers and threw the best-fitting one to each person. "They don't really have uniforms beyond these hats, so just keep these on. I don't need your name, but if you could tell me something of your skillset, I can figure out where you could best help."

Tony stepped forward now, holstering his gun. "Or, I could figure out where YOU best help." he stated with a level of derision. "No ultimatums, no. You've heard enough of them, as you've said. An objection, however." he said now, raising a claw. "No one died and made you boss. This was my plan from the start, and my family that's about to hit the place. You say don't say we don't trust you, but we don't fully trust you so tough shit, you're gonna hear it again. You don't like that, you can just go... how did you put it? Fucking leave?" He asked here, folding his arms over his chest. "Anyway, I don't give a shit how badass you think you are, you can drop the attitude, all right? As you said... we're all on a team, and I can do without the condescension. Now... my suggestion..." He looked around at the group.

"Since you're NOT in a position to take command nor do this on your own, I suggest an alternate method of breaching the base. There's a little known entrance under this building that leads right to the reactor room, which is also close to the labs. See where I'm going with this?" he asked sarcastically, treating Emilena with the same level of condescension she'd shown them. "Anyway, it'll give you the perfect access point to the labs without having to go over the fence and traipse your way through the main base. It's ALSO not guarded. My family's about to hit the place, so things are gonna get hot and heavy real quick. I suggest you take Axel, do whatever you need to do to safely get Lily out, and I'll work on eliminating a few key figures and setting the reactor to overload. How much time do you need to complete the cloning process? That's basically the only thing I didn't know." Tony informed her. "Everything else I had figured out ahead of time. Something tells me you aren't gonna need more than Axel to rescue Lily, nor would you want us breathing down your neck, so staying out of each others' way is probably best, for now." he concluded.

Luckily, "gangsta style" was a very poor way to use a firearm. Consequently, none of the shots hit anything.

Anne, fuming, holstered her pistol and punched Nairda square in the jaw. "That's for being a dumbass!"

Soren reached over and shut the door. "Do exactly as I say or be shot. Empty your pockets and strip naked."

Axel caught the helmet as Emilena threw it to him, wiping a blood smear from its surface with a grimace. He looked up quickly as Emilena and Tony launched heated words between each other. "Guys, just... just calm things down for a second, alright? Look, if we start arguing, we're not going to be able to think things through properly. Okay?"

He paused and bit his lip. "Emilena, you said you were looking the place over just now? And you found a way in?" Axel glanced at the ferret. "Tony, I... I think that might be the safest way to get in. I mean, this other way, the one that leads to the reactor room... How do you know it wouldn't be guarded? Like, sure, maybe under normal circumstances it'd be clear but... well, this isn't a normal situation. For all we know, they could be guarding it. Emilena just scoped it out... so her way might take longer but at least we won't be walking into an ambush."

Felix watched as Nairda crumpled onto the floor, landing from his admittedly impressive diving skills, then turned his head slowly as he heard Soren's order. "What?! What the fuck for? Are you fucking kidding?!" He saw that Soren wasn't. Felix gritted his teeth. "So that's what you want, huh?" With all these guns trained on him, there was no way he could make a run for it.

Glaring around, he pulled his T-shirt over his head, then unbuckled his trousers and pulled them off. "Getting a good view, you motherfucker? Cocksucking pervert..." Spinning around, he tore his underwear off and threw them at Marita's face, the business end connecting with a satisfying flump noise. "And you too, like what you're seeing, huh? Need to put on the tough guy act to see some dick? Don't get enough of this at home, bitch?!" Felix demanded angrily, indicating his bared package with a furious flourish.

"I'm just getting that out of the way now," Emilena stated. "This plan was designed for two people, and will work with two people. It could work even better with four competent people, but if one of them is going to train a gun on me immediately if Lupis gets the chance to play mind games, they're better off staying home."

She glanced in the direction she wants to go. "My way is guarded too; all ways are guarded. But my way was initially guarded by these goons, so we have a small window of opportunity to cut in before the guard changes and the alarm sounds no matter where we are."

Nairda nodded approvingly as he checked out Felix. "Nice! Nice!" he grinned his approval. "I certainly don't git enough you know what tha fuck I'm saying, biatch? Say how tha fuck bout you n' mah crazy ass go up fo' dranks afta this?"

"My ONLY reservation..." Tony pointed out now. "Is that over the fence means we have to go through the interior of the base... and the reactor is the heart of it... the heart... meaning more fights, more patrols, more unknowns. I know my way isn't guarded because..." he reached into his pocket and pulled out an elevator key. "I picked this up before I defected from the Purifiers. It's the key to this elevator... leads to the service tunnels under the building, which were used as evacuation routes in case of emergency. However, lacking this key, the tunnels were useless as evacuation routes because there was no way out of them. I picked this up a week before you guys captured me, and DIDN'T let the Purifiers know I had it before that little event took place. The reactor room itself isn't guarded because it's in the middle of the base and currently useless..."

He looked at Emilena then back at Axel. "Remember the plan? It's not JUST about getting Lily out, but blowing the base sky high so that things like your limbs don't become useless the minute we step outside. We can go her way, but I think there's a far more likely chance of running into security if the alarms go off... which it seems like they will, than if we come in from underneath. Where's security gonna rush to when alarms go off, after all? The perimeter. Where are they NOT gonna rush to? The interior areas. See my point?" the ferret asked, looking from one to the other.

"Anyway, it's your show, Axel. I just got you out here. However you do it is up to you, but I need to make it to those reactors, and I'm gonna have a much harder time coming in from the outside than I am if I just walk into the room itself from the tunnels. So do what you want, but yes, we shouldn't debate this any further." the ferret said softly. "Go with her if you want, and I'll come along, but just thought I'd voice the opposite perspective here, because it seems you're fixating on rescuing Lily, and we've got some bigger goals here."

Somewhere over the Pacific

Over the stormy and tumultuous waters of the northern Pacific, an aerial fleet of warships hovered in tight formation, currently idling on standby and consuming minimal power. Several massive carriers formed the core of this fleet, with battleships, cruisers and destroyers rounding out the group. At the heart of it all was one particularly powerful flagship, the name Red Castle emblazoned on her side.

Upon the bridge of this behemoth, a creature in long, flowing red robes stood with his arms across his chest, his features pale as death, and his eyes an intense and brilliant yet very dark golden in color. Most of his face was covered by a contraption that concealed much of it, with some of the nose, eyes, and forehead visible. What kind of creature he was was hard to say, for what little could be seen of his skin had been bleached and scarred heavily.

"Lord Kalis..." the words came from an admiral clad in black who approached him from further down the bridge. "Our agents in Lanthae picked up an interesting broadcast a few hours ago and transmitted it here. You'll want to see this."

The one called Kalis turned to look at the datapad in the admiral's hand, and narrowed his eyes as Rhaegson's broadcast began to play. At his mention of the dropping of Lanthae's defenses, a great exhale escaped his mouth. When he spoke, his voice came out raspy and metallic, and not natural in the slightest. "Lanthae... I've been after a way to conquer that city for years... perfect... continue to monitor the situation... if this pulse indeed strikes and lowers their defenses... we'll gate-jump the fleet to the city and commence an attack."

"Yes, my lord." the admiral bowed his head here, slapping the cover of the datapad shut.

"Perhaps I'll finally find what I've been looking for as well..." Kalis said in a wispy voice that sounded like death. He shifted his attention out to the forward viewport, and stared intently into the night, clasping his hands calmly behind his back.

"I likewise throw to Axel the choice of how we break in," Emilena folded her arms. "I do not care in the slightest if they set off that bomb; the world will probably be a better place if it truly kills only Augments. I'm here to rescue Lily. But if you have an easier way of infiltrating the base, I'm not demanding we follow mine. I'm a teammate, I'm not demanding I be the leader."

Soren scanned up and down Felix's body. "Good. No concealed weapons or tracers."

He turned to Nairda. "Make yourself useful and go through his clothes to see if he's hiding anything."

Anne returned with a disused and dusty office chair and forced Felix into it. "Have a seat." Her hands trembled as a side effect of her drug withdrawal starting to set in.

"Good. Rose, Marie, Marita, tie him up and then we all can have a 'private discussion' with him." Soren angled his head to a door that read "machine shop". As befitting any industrial area, the bakery had its own machine shop to repair and replace broken parts.

"Tony... I am focusing on Lily," Axel said quietly. "I know it sounds selfish but... Lily's not augmented. Even if the bomb goes off, she wouldn't be affected. But if we can't get her out before, then she's dead. Or worse." He looked at the key Tony was holding out and paused for a moment. "You know for sure it'll be clear? You're positive?" He swallowed, then shrugged, cradling the helmet in his arms. "Okay then. Let's do it your way. Then you can work on the reactors, and me and Emilena can go ahead." Axel looked at Emilena and nodded.

Felix clenched his jaw and pulled against the cord. It wouldn't give. After a moment, he gave up and looked up at Marie and Rose. "Come on, what the hell are you guys doing?! I don't know anything! I just joined up last week, why would they tell me shit?! What, you think I'm in their, their inner circle or something?!"

He struggled again. "Jesus, come on, just... just untie me! She's a dyke, but you're not, right?" Felix rambled, staring across at Anne. "What do you want? I'll fuck you, or get you drugs, whatever you want! I'll fuck you while giving you drugs!"

To the exclusion of practically everything else Tony thought with disgust. "Great... so Lily's safe... and what about you?" Tony asked as he turned the key. "Stupid sacrificing yourself if you can't be with the one you love. You PROMISED me we'd ALL come out of this. You even made it a big show to state you wanted to see me alive at the end. Well... do you?" he asked now, punching the button for the bottom floor, which the key would override and take them down into the service tunnels. "And yes... I'm positive. I wouldn't have brought it up if I wasn't." the ferret responded simply.

He took one of the helmets with him, but figured he wouldn't need it. See what this chick does? She brings up a plan to save Lily, and it's all he thinks about. He didn't even seem to acknowledge her statement about the city being better off if all augments had been killed, including himself. Tony had to admit, his respect for Axel was plummeting with the floors as they rode the elevator down. Never mind the millions that'll be killed. That's all good, so long as you save Lily, right? Bullshit! What a load of pussy-whipped crap! If for some reason they failed... and Emilena decided to help the Purifiers out on their unholy crusade, Tony swore to himself he'd kill her if he got the chance. Still... at least they had the advantage of having an army of mafia surrounding the place. Getting the Purifiers out into the city would be a difficult proposal, at best, though Tony knew their death squads were probably already out there.

The elevator didn't stop at the ground floor, and continued down further, into the tunnels. Sliding open smoothly, the doors revealed a tunnel stretching ahead of them. "All right... let's go..." Tony led the way, Vergil donning the helmet as he followed, noting it was way too big for him, so he simply tossed it aside. It was a bit of a trek. Perhaps 300 yards or so, but at the end, there was only one way out. Tony pushed up on the manhole cover as gently as he could, and peered around.

It was deathly quiet in here, and cold, as no power supplied this part of the base. Sunlight did filter in from some dusty windows, so there was that at least. He held out a paw for the others to remain in place, and slid out lithely through the hole, drawing his gun and scanning the room. The reactors towered like mountains over him, stretching to the ceiling far above his head.

He heard nothing... no chatter... no footfalls... nothing. "OK!" he whispered back down. "Come on!" he motioned for them to exit. "We're clear. Axel, you and Emilena, listen up. When you exit hang a right. Two more rights, you're in the laboratory area, OK?" he told them, still whispering.

"I can sense Lily, if it's any help." Vergil spoke up now. "She's there all right." he nodded.

"Text me when you've got her and the cloning process is complete." Tony instructed them. "I'll turn the reactors on, and that'll give us plenty of time to get out of here. If you think you're gonna be late for any reason, tell me NOT to start overload and I'll hold off. I'm gonna stay here and keep our exit open. Good luck, OK?" he said, looking at them now.

Suddenly, some dull explosions could be heard from way outside. It sounded like rocket and mortar fire, and Tony smiled a bit. "Guess dad's started the offensive with the other families. All right! That'll provide the cover we need!" he exclaimed. He knew his father wouldn't be present in person, nor would any of the other dons, but it was good knowing he had backup all the same.

Outside, standing on the walls of the perimeter, Marcus stared up at the small balls of light as the explosives curved their way through the air towards the base. Some of the Purifiers nervously shifted, looking as if they wanted to make a run for it. He held up a hand without taking his eyes off the view and growled. "Hold!" Above, the explosives began to arc down... and suddenly exploded harmlessly, far away from the base. As they did so, a faint, dome-shaped blue haze could be seen surrounding the compound. A few cheers went up as more mortar fire detonated against the shield, the sounds dull and muted.

Marcus pulled out a radio and clicked a button. "It worked. Force field is active."

Rhaegson's voice cracked through. "Remind me to give Petersons a pat on the back," he said smugly. "So the mob is attacking us? Nothing like the ritualistic killing of my men to make it obvious somethin's gonna happen. Just keep them busy a little longer."

Marcus put the radio away without saying anything else, and returned his attention to the perimeter. The force field would prevent their attackers from launching a long range assault on them. The mob would need to get up close if they wanted to accomplish anything - across the grounds which provided no cover, and had a few surprises buried away. "Hayton!" someone called across to him, and Marcus turned.

A Purifier came puffing up. "One of our squads is giving us radio silence. We can't raise them."

Marcus frowned and looked at the industrial section. They could spare the men. "Increase the security inside. Go!" The man ran off.

He turned back. "Ready your weapons!" he barked, and all around the perimeter Purifiers cocked their guns, resting on the wall for cover. 50 cal. guns set up on each corner swiveled around, and up in the watchtowers snipers drew back the bolts on their weapons. Marcus fixed his eyes on the horizon and waited to see what the opposing force would do next.

"Of course I want to see you alive," Axel said, narrowing his eyes slightly at Tony. "But we all have our priorities. You made that pretty clear when you chose your family's integrity over me just now." He folded his arms across his chest and didn't say anything the rest of the ride down.

Once they reached the reactor room, he stared up at the machinary. These things'll turn this place into a crater... Listening to Tony's directions, he nodded. "Alright. Three rights. Got it." Axel put the helmet on. "And... good luck to you too."

Emilena nodded and began the trek to the cloning room. They passed several Purifers in the hallways, but just looking like they were supposed to be there did wonders.

"Now there's going to be some sort of science team, so we eliminate them quickly before they can sound the alarm," she cautioned, and once the coast was clear threw the door open to the cloning chamber to find...nothing. No personnel. "Huh..." Shrugging, she began setting up the cloning machine. "All right, now we gotta grab Lily while this warms up."

(Purifier Compound)

Aaron's finger twitched as he viewed the scene through his scope.

He sniffed the air; the heady scent of high explosives hung in the air.

(Abandoned Bakery)

Anne's tremors began to worsen. She bit her lip as the offer of drugs.

"E...Excuse me." She bolted out of the room.

Soren shrugged. "I know you're hiding some more info, spill. Or do I need to introduce your body parts to some machinery?"

The watery sunlight filtering in through the dusty windows provided sufficient illumination.

Axel looked over Emilena's shoulder at the machinery as she prepared it. The mess of buttons, keys and switches left his head spinning. He nodded at what she said and crossed back over the room to the door. "Where... where are all the scientists?" he asked nervously as he creaked open the door, peering out the crack. The hallway was empty.

He pulled the door open further and held it for Emilena, pushing the helmet back over his eyes.

Felix's breaths became faster, his hopes of escaping vanishing along with Anne. He looked at Soren and gritted his teeth. "What? What the hell do you want to know?! You probably know as much as I do... They made a bomb, it's gonna go off really fucking soon, and then they're gonna make their move. You want to know what time we take our fucking lunch breaks, too?!" he spat, pulling against the chair. "Shit!"

Slumping back, he shook his head. "Look... you won't be able to stop it. You'd be better off if you just got out of Lanthae... as far away as you can. I, I won't tell them about you! I'll leave the Purifiers! Just let me go!"

Soren nodded. "Keep going. What's the base like? Any defenses? Approximate strength of troops?"

Anne reached inside her dress and pulled out a white tablet from a blister pack. She popped out the tablet and quickly gulped it down. A electric jolt ran through her as the stimulant began to take effect. Her jitters began to fade away and her mind became razor sharp.

She crackes her knuckles and entered through the machine shop again. She leaned against a beat up lathe. "Anything good?"

Soren sighed. "We haven't gotten shit! I'm starting to think your plan fucked us."

Anne raised her hands. "Hey, how the fuck was I supposed to know we'd get newbies? What's your plan? Go in full throttle? Fat lotta good that did us the last few times ya tried!"

Soren opened his mouth but instead, closed it with a scowl. He turned to the women with him. "You all deal with this fucker. I'm going to ask Nairda some questions."

The door slammed as the Human exited the machine shop.

"Nairda!" Soren called. "Have you found anything useful in his clothes?"

"Uh... I don't know, last thing I saw they were bringing in a lot of guns. There were a lot of people, I, I think they were preparing for some kind of attack against them." Felix blinked the sweat out of his eyes. "Defenses, uh... apart from the guns, I'm not sure. They were hooking up some kind of machine, it was a, a shield I think, I don't know for sure."

When Soren left, Felix tried to control his breathing and looked around at the others. "Why're you even trying? It's going off in an hour, you've got no chance of stopping it!"

Emilena strolled casually towards the laboratory where Lily was being held. Just like last time. Keep your face set. If you look like you're supposed to be here--

She walked into the lab. It was empty.

"She's not in one of the pods," Emilena reported after a quick sprint through the labs. "Well, no wonder they don't care at all about this part of the lab. Where the hell is she?"

Nairda had dressed himself in the clothes of the captive. "Blingin'!" he whooped, turning 360 and modeling his new attire. "Oh, and this."

He handed Soren...Felix's passcard! Complete with a small schematic of the Purifier base on the back, and a magnetic stripe that grants the holder z-level security clearance. It also had a little red sticker noting that Felix was an organ donor...or would be...

"What?! Nonono, she has to be here, she has to..." Axel moaned, pushing past her and craning his neck around, looking for himself. Emilena was right, there wasn't anything - or anyone - here. He turned back, hand grasping the side of his helmet in anxiety. "Oh jesus... come on, come on, where are you..."

Leaving the empty lab, he turned right and kept following the corridor along. Axel couldn't tell if the dull booming he heard was from the attack outside or the blood pounding in his ears. From further up came the clattering of boots, and Axel fought to keep his expression neutral as a group of Purifiers came charging around the corner toting heavy assault rifles. They rushed past him and Emilena, not paying them any attention. Axel turned left into the corner they came from... and halted mid-step. Further up the corridor, a heavy metal door was guarded by two burly rottweilers. A small man in a white lab coat was speaking to one of them. They nodded and stepped aside, letting him through. Axel half turned to Emilena and jerked his head in their direction, then strode up to them, steeling himself and trying to look confident.

"Rhaegmar says we're taking over your shift," he said, standing up straight and setting his shoulders. "He wants you out front."

The rottweiler closest to him frowned and looked at his partner. "Rhaegmar? Don't you mean Rhaegson?"

Axel glared at the Purifier and leaned in, their noses practically touching. "The fuck do you think I just said? He wants his best men out there, or are you too fucking stupid to know there's about to be a goddamn war out there?! If you're too pussy, I'll go tell him myself..." He turned to leave.

"No, wait!" the second rottweiler blurted out. "We are his best. We're damn soldiers!" The other guard nodded in agreement. "Yeah. Soldiers. Getting bored of babysitting these guys anyway."

"Then get out there, prove it and stop wasting my fucking time." The two guards nodded at each other and lumbered off. Axel waited until they were out of eyesight and looked at Emilena, letting out his breath. "I... guess they don't look for brains when they hire here..." he said shakily, his shoulders returning to their slight slouch. "Come on..." Gesturing towards the now vacant door, he pushed the handle down and shoved the heavy structure open with his shoulder, nervously fingering his pistol. He made his way through, stepping aside to allow enough room for Emilena to enter, and scanned the room. Four scientists - three humans and a golden retriever - were milling around computers and other machinery Axel didn't recognise.

"She's a little more stable, but we're going to need to keep an eye on her," one was saying. When they registered Axel and Emilena in the room, they all paused and looked at them curiously. Axel ignored their gazes and looked past them, his eyes drawn to a table at the far end of the room... and he felt himself go numb when he realised what - who - it was. Neck, wrists and ankles strapped down to the metal table, Lily was fastened down tightly. Needles were stuck into her, clamps biting into her skin. Several cables snaked out from each, leading to the parts of machinery scattered around the lab. He couldn't tell if she was conscious or not. Axel felt his hands trembling, and he heard a ringing in his ears. He slowly pushed the door shut behind him.

The golden retriever put down the pen he'd been writing with, and walked over. "Uh... excuse me, are you-"

Axel raised the pistol and shot him in the head, gore spattering the wall behind as his body dropped heavily to the floor. One of the other scientists squealed and rushed across the room, trying to make for the emergency alarm. The rat tracked him and pulled the trigger three times, each bullet tearing through the man's chest. The scientist fell sideways into a cabinet, instruments clattering to the floor, and lay coughing, choking on his blood.

Axel turned to the two remaining scientists who were cringing at the far end of the room, his pistol shaking as he pointed it at the both of them. "Get her out of there! Now!" he screamed.

Soren took the card. "Thanks! At least you're good for something."

He then entered the machine shop.

"All right, 'Felix'," he said, holding up the keycard. "It seems we have something. Now, care to explain what 'z-level' security clearance is?"

Anne smiled as she leaned against an old laser CNC milling machine. The computer was long gone as was the laser module but the motors were still intact. "You could just have given that up and we'd let you go."

Title: Into the Black
Post by: aabicus (LettuceBacon&Tomato) on April 09, 2014, 07:03:23 PM

The first scientist scrambled over and grabbed the controls.

"Don't!" the second one shouted. "They'll kill us if we do what they want!"

Emilena shot the second one. "Don't listen to him," she said to the first one, not even bothering to put believability into her words. "We'll let you live if you release her and explain what this machine does."

Quaking, the scientist rushed over and detached all the diodes, clamps and needles. "At-at the m-moment, its in stasis mode..." he stammered. "We drained her of psionic energy, a-and now we're waiting for her to recharge..."

After he removed the last hypodermic needle, Lily stirred. As the scientist attempted to step away, her hand lashed out and her claws embedded into his thigh. As he screamed and tried to tug out to safety, she bared her teeth and dragged him closer, digging her claws up from his thigh and into his abdomen, sending his intestines spilling onto the floor. As his hands flew to his stomach, her other fist swatted them with a force that snapped his arm bones audibly. Finally, she ended his life by baring her teeth and ripping his jugular out of his neck.

Following this Lily slunk out of the chair. Teeth bared and shoulders hunkered, she hissed at them and paced around the table, eyeing the exit they were blocking her from.

Emilena took a step back, drawing her katana defensively. "Uhhh...Axel, you have any ideas?" she asked.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 10, 2014, 12:17:44 PM

Axel drew back, keeping close to Emilena as Lily prowled around, making sure he was out of range of her claws. "We need to... restrain her somehow..." His eyes darted around the lab, looking for something that could be used. One of the clamps the scientist had removed was connected to a thick, sturdy cable that snaked across the room, its end attaching to a machine near Axel. Slowly, not taking his eyes off Lily, he reached over and yanked it out then reeled the rest of it in, the clamp skittering across the floor.

Axel quickly glanced at Emilena. "Alright, just... just keep her attention," he breathed, curling the ends of the cable around his hands. "I need to get behind her..." Cautiously, Axel edged back and strafed his way across the edge of the room, his heart hammering as he tried to move with as little noise as possible. He prayed that, whatever they'd been doing to drain her psionic energy, it had left Lily physically weaker than normal... otherwise this could end very badly.

Felix rose his head when he heard Soren say his name, and swallowed when he saw his keycard. "Z-level... it'll get you access to the shitters in the compound, not much else." He grinned bitterly at Anne. "Must have slipped my mind. Next time you want to play at being James Bond just to use the fucking john, let me know."

Emilena gritted her teeth and leapt forward. Lily snarled but retreated.

"Dammit, if I'm too aggressive I'll just make her tougher to flank..." she murmured to herself. Backing off, she tried to look nervous so that Lily might press the issue but Lily didn't seem interested.

Drawing her pistol, Emilena fired wide, sending Lily cowering. "Make up your mind! Fight me or not!" Emilena snapped at her. She took two more steps forward, sword brandished. Lily took two steps backwards.

Finally Emilena just fired repeatedly at Lily, leaving her huddling in the corner. "I'll try not to hit you!" She called to Axel.

Gritting his teeth, Axel raised his hand in a thumbs up gesture. That'd be nice. He'd managed to skirt his way around the room so that he now stood just out of Lily's line of sight. He swallowed tensely, his throat feeling as dry as sandpaper. With her animalistic, unpredictable movements, getting close to her was tough - and Axel didn't want to think about what Lily would do if she suddenly turned just as he was creeping up.

Another shot from Emilena sent Lily cowering further back, closer to Axel... and he made his move. Leaping onto Lily, he planted a knee in her back and drove her to the floor, face first. As they fell down, he looped the cable around her front and drew it tighter when they landed, pinning her arms against her waist. Axel looked up desperately at Emilena as he put his full weight on Lily, struggling to keep her down and the cable tight around her as she thrashed, clawed and snapped beneath him. "Get another cable! Tie her feet!"

Emilena vaulted over the middle table and grabbed the shredded coat of the diswmboweled scientist. Rat-tailing it into a rope at top speed, she tackled Lily's backside and quickly restrained her lower appendages.

Lily thrashed and snarled, but something kept her from howling or making loud noises; perhaps she still knew that there was no such thing as rescue or safety from those around them. In addition, she was already exhausted and drained from the machine, and soon enough she was limp and couldn't fight back as Emilena hoisted her over her shoulder.

"You're gonna have to serve point," she groaned, staggering somewhat. "God only knows who's gonna see us with this thing..."

She stumbled out the door, letting Axel take the lead.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 11, 2014, 01:01:31 PM

Axel followed Emilena out the door then stepped ahead, leading the way as they wound their way back through the hallways, Lily in tow. He could feel his pulse racing. They were nearing the cloning room, and so far they hadn't come across any Purifiers. So far, so good...

They turned into the corridor that lead to the cloning room... and Axel stopped dead when he saw the two rottweilers he'd lured away walking down towards them. They were engaged in a heated conversation with each other, and didn't immediately notice the three intruders standing in front of them. "-told you we shouldn't have listened! Next time I see that guy, I'm gonna..." The rottweiler who was speaking trailed off when he glanced ahead and saw them. "Hey! You! What the hell's your problem, making us..." His eyes narrowed as he noticed Lily draped over Emilena's shoulder. "What the fuck are doing with her? She's supposed to be locked away!"

For a long while, Axel and the two Purifiers stared at each other. Then the second rottweiler's hands scrambled for his gun, and Axel quickly raised his pistol, firing a volley of shots at them.

The second Purifier crumpled as a bullet tore through his skull, and his partner collapsed back, coughing, against the wall as two holes appeared in his chest. Then Axel's gun clicked as it ran dry. The Purifier staggered away from the blood smeared wall and looked weakly up at Axel. The rat desperately pulled the trigger again to no avail, and gasped when he saw the rottweiler's shaking hand reaching down to draw a sawed-off from the waist of his trousers.

Axel felt his stomach drop. Letting his pistol fall to the floor, he quickly turned and yanked Emilena's katana from its scabbard, then started to sprint up the corridor. The Purifier managed to pull out his weapon and raised it. A panicked noise escaped Axel as he tucked his head lower and threw himself forwards. There was a deafening boom as the sawed-off was fired... but the Purifier's aim was slightly off, and Axel felt heat along his side as the shot just missed him. The rat brought the sword in low as he drew even with the rottweiler, and the razor-sharp blade sliced through his middle, spilling out coils of intestines. The blade caught on his spinal column and stuck, throwing Axel off balance. Gurgling, the rottweiler slammed an elbow down on the top of the rat's head, and Axel was forced down - but he was still gripping the sword's handle, and the movement pulled it free of the bone with a grating screech. Screaming, the rottweiler fell back to the floor. Picking himself up, Axel stumbled over him and raised the sword, then brought it down, stabbing through the Purifier's chest again and again until he stopped moving.

After a moment, he looked up at Emilena, his face spattered with blood. Gasping for breath, he motioned for her to hurry up. "Come on... we... we're almost there..." As they drew near the door to the cloning chamber, he held out Emilena's sword with a trembling arm to her free hand. "Here. Need to do this quickly... there's no telling who heard those shots...."

Felix laughed in Marita's face. "What level of clearance? I just told you it's the worst kind. It's the only kind they give to new members, you stupid bitch."

He slumped back in the chair. "Look... there's nothing else I can tell you. I don't give a shit if you all get yourselves killed trying to stop this thing. But I've got to tell you, this isn't exactly a picnic for me. So if that's what you're going to do, then let me go and fuck off. Or if you're going to hurt me, stop acting all high and mighty, and just get it over with." He spat on the floor and glared up at them.

"You are no longer the boy I had to drag along back at Soren's house," Emilena complimented. "Keep the sword for now, until I can put this down..."

They entered the cloning room and headed over to the readied pod. But before they could get there, they heard voices blocking their path.

"What was it this time? Tell me!"

"I refuse to talk about it..."

Putting her finger to her lips, Emilena stumbled forward as quietly as she could. Around a corner, Agent Lupis was talking with a freshly cloned rhino.

"Goddammit, how many of us have you killed?" The rhino was shouting angrily. Tears were running down his eyes. "We're not him, you asshole! Each time we die, we stay that way! I dont want to die!"

"I never plan for it to happen, John," sighed Lupis, but the rhino cut him off. "--No! Don't call me that! Give me a new name, let me leave, and figure out your own problems without sending me to die like you did all the others!"

The two stared silently.

"You've had this conversation before, havent you?" The rhino spat. With that he stomped off in the other direction.

Lupis rubbed his temples with his thumbs and groaned with irritation. He then walked away as well.

Emilena paused a few moments, then when nothing had been heard for a few minutes continued creeping toward the aisle with the prepared pod. "Well, that was--" she began, when suddenly Lupis came barrelling out from behind some tanks, smacking I to her and sending she and Lily skidding along the floor.

"Why won't you die, Officer Echo???" he snarled furiously, pinning her and lacerating her chest with his claws.

"Marita, why don't you use the card reader on your laptop to see what's on the ID?" Soren asked. He turned to Anne, Marie and Rose.

"I'm gonna need all of you to help me have a 'private discussion' with him."

Anne nodded. "Cool."

Soren and Anne picked up the office chair and carried it over to another section of the machine shop. There, a decrepit spindle sander and a drill press were present.

The Human rubbed a finger across the sandpaper. It was a very rough grit intended for roughing up a metal surface in preparation for applying a coat to it. He pressed the on switch and the motor hummed to life.

He placed a hand on Felix's shoulder. "Now, you see that spindle sander?" He pointed to the aforementioned machine tool. "We're gonna make that and your balls good friends."

Axel stumbled backwards as Lupis suddenly charged Emilena down, tightening his grip on the sword. In the split second it took for him to get over the shock, he recognised the wolf and his lips drew back in a snarl. It looked like he hadn't been noticed, but from what he could see it looked like Emilena was getting torn apart - he had to act now.

Coming up behind Lupis, Axel drew back a leg and kicked Lupis as hard as he could, the blow connecting solidly with the wolf's ribs. As Lupis rolled off Emilena, Axel pursued him and raised the katana. "Fuck you!" he screamed, starting to swing it down, aiming for the wolf's face.

Felix's body started to shake when he looked at the sander Soren was pointing out. He swallowed, tears starting to flood his eyes. "Torture f... for no reason, huh?" His voice trembled and Felix closed his eyes. "You fucking... fucking psycho! Just fucking do it then! I can't tell you anything else!"

Marita ran the id through the check and three names popped up, Ffelix's, a human named grivis and a salmander named Rico.. 'so this id was used before' she said 'twice before it seems..' she got up. and headed into the room with the others ' so, Felix, why are there two other names associated with your id?'
 she asked pointedly.

Soren smiled. Anne's ears involuntarily lay back. The smile was a murderer's smile.

"Psycho?" Soren replied softly. "How dare you call me a 'psycho' when your band of Luddites plan to slaughter every Augment in the city and kill everyone who's worked with them?"

As the door opened he then turned to Marita. "That's odd. Is the clearance level what he says it really is or is he full of shit?"

its not z-level,, its aa level' Marita said smirking at Felix. ' aa level is 5 levels above z level indicating a rather high rank. so not only are you not the only person identified with this id, the security level it provides is much higher. so felix, yes, is full of crap.

Lupis tried to deflect the sword with his hand. This worked about as well as could be expected.

He cried out as his hand was severed at the wrist. Lashing out with his foot, he kicked at Axel's stomach.

Emilena staggered to her feet, her chest plate having prevented most of the damage. But Lupis drew a pistol out of his jacket and hit her twice in the same chest plate, which shattered it and sent her staggering with a grunt.

Lupis turned to shoot Axel when something hit him from behind. Lily had freed herself and in a desperate attempt had hit him with a flying tackle. Clamping her jaws around his neck, she hadn't expected a heavy knee in the crotch to send her rolling over his front.

Staggering to his feet, he blasted a cloning pod, sending the green fluid spilling onto the floor around them. His wounds were already recovering; his wrist stump had already clotted over. His other hand blasted Emilena's pistol out of her hand.

"What the hell?" muttered Emilena, trying to get to her feet.

"Genetic regeneration," smiled Lupis. "My father was an experiment from Pelvanida, back when they dabbled in bio-eugenics in the early 2000s."

With the last bullet in his clip, he shot out one of the many wires leading to the incandescent lighting fixture above the pods. This sparking wire dropped down and flooded electricity through the green puddle all four of them were standing in.

Lupis' foot had connected heavily with Axel's stomach, and he was knocked back. Winded, he'd started to try to move back in, shoes splashing in the liquid. Then he saw Lupis shooting up at the lighting, saw the wire tumble down, and his eyes widened. "Look out!" he started to shout, attempting to back peddle out of the liquid... then the wire touched down, and it felt like he was hit by a truck.

The next thing Axel knew, he was lying on his side, staring at the floor with a blinding pain tearing through his head. He wasn't in the pod's liquid anymore - his momentum from trying to escape must have carried him out, though not fast enough to prevent electrocution. A shivering sensation was coursing through his body, and he couldn't breath. Faintly, Axel realised he was in shock. In the position he'd landed, he couldn't see the others and his limbs couldn't seem to obey him. Thin breath whistling through his teeth, Axel desperately tried to push through the pain in his head and get up.

Felix blinked at Marita. "Two other people? What... what the fuck are you talking about?! I don't know anything about them!" He swung his gaze to Soren. "I just joined up a week ago! I got that card, and that's all I know! Maybe there was a... a mistake on it or... or something. Shit, I don't know!" Felix swallowed. "Look, if I was high ranking, do you honestly think I'd be wasting my time checking out a fucking augment shop? Are you fucking kidding me?!"

Soren sighed. "Well, at least we got one thing out of him. Think he knows any more or can we just dump him over the side?"

Anne shrugged. "Maybe you're the team leader? I'm not military but I know enough ex-servicemembers to know that the team leader is always higher ranked than their subordinates. Speaking of which..."

Soren then walked over to Marita. "What areas does this aa clearance level allow access to?"

After a few minutes, the circuit breaker tripped and the electricity cut out. All was silent for a few minutes.

Then Lupis slowly and shakily got to his knees and elbows. He panted heavily, the electric burns covering his body already starting to heal. He was halfway to the door when he heard a noise behind him.

Still sparkling with electricity, Lily got to her feet at well. Her muscle mass had bubbled out as if she were covered in tumors, and her fists were meaty and rippled with energy. She looked enraged.

Lupis tried to crawl faster but Lily was on him in a heart beat. Tearing savagely into him with equal parts brute force and razor-sharp claws, she ripped his limbs from his body and fried the remains with bolts of electric shock.

In a few minutes, Lupis barely resembled a corpse. Sitting up, Lily glanced at the fallen bodies of her friends. Axel and Emilena were both alive, but neither would be for long.

Walking over to the cable that had caused the short circuit, she wrappdd her hand around it and grunted as she absorbed a second dose of electricity. Then, she walked over and administered a defibrillating shock to Emilena's heart.

Emilena heaved and vomited blood. Buckling over, she choked and coughed and breathed for the first time in minutes. "Oh god!" Was all she could say at first.

Lily smiled but soon left Emilena for Axel. Touching his cheek softly, she put her hands on his heart and administered a similar shock.

Axel's legs jerked as the electric jolt shot through his chest. Rolling onto his stomach, he wretched, opening his mouth wide and sucking down lungfuls of air as the dark edges to his vision gradually faded. After a moment, he tried to push himself up, his arms trembling. He looked up, then gasped when he saw Lily crouching over him. Axel twisted and weakly tried pushing himself back across the floor, stopping when his back hit one of the containment pods. His eyes took in the scene; the torn pieces of somebody (Lupis?!) scattered around, Emilena struggling to get up... and lastly, Lily herself - who didn't seem like she was going to attack.

He paused, then edged forwards cautiously on his hands and knees, his body still feeling unpleasantly numb. "Li... Lily?" Axel slowly held out a hand to her.

Felix started. "You'll... you'll let me go?" He tugged at the ropes binding him. "Come on then! Hurry up and untie me!"

Lily nodded and kissed him gently. The electricity had knocked the primary conscience out, allowing her to control her body for the last few moments in it.

Emilena staggered to the cloning pod and opened it. A familiar 20-something dark-skinned body greeted them. "It's...ready..." she panted painfully. "You've just got to..."

Lily nodded. Stepping forward, she helped Emilena remove the mindless clone body and lay it on the ground. Then she climbed into the pod and allowed Emilena to seal it shut.

Emilena closed and sealed the door. "This won't hold the creature for long. Hopefully we're long gone by the time it wakes up."

They waited. And waited. The clone body remained lifeless.

Emilena grew nervous. "Without a mind, this body won't last for much longer without suffocating itself. What's taking her so long???"

Axel looked from the pod to the body lying on the floor, his hands clenching into fists restlessly. He looked at Emilena and clenched his jaw. "Did... did you do something wrong?" Axel walked unsteadily to the pod, looking at the switches and buttons next to it. "Damnit, I don't... I don't know what any of this stuff does..." Thumping a fist on the glass, he called through to Lily. "Hey! Hey, Lily, come on! You've gotta hurry up!"

Giving up, he collapsed to his knees next to the clone's body and shook her shoulders gently. "You have to do it! Please!" It couldn't go wrong... not now, not when they were so close...

Further minutes passed. Nothing.

Emilena growled and thought over the steps, leading up to now. Everything is perfect... she thought with frustration. Why the hell isn't she...?

She took a deep breath. There's the problem. She's been thinking of HER role in all this, not Lily's. Had Lily ever shown an ability to throw her conscience at will?

As Emilena began to understand the problem, a solution slowly presented itself.

"Axel..." she started, trying to put this as delicately as she could, "Lily needs an impetus to jumpstart her conscience's expulsion from the old body, such as someone trying to kill her. Normally, a near-death experience is enough, but she knows neither of us would ever kill her after all this. Now, while seeing through her eyes, I saw all her near-death experiences...and, though I didnt understand why, your moment with her in the tree..."

Emilena opened the pod and dragged Lily's mutated body onto the floor. "The alien has no concept of life after reproduction. It's a primitive animal; once you reproduce, you die.. It thinks you're trying to kill her through impregnation." She trailed off. She hoped he would get the hint.

She hefted her sword and Lupis' pistol. "I'll, er, guard the entrance..."

Soren shook his head. "Marie, we can't let him go. He's gonna arm up again and come after us. We need to dispose of him, now!"

Anne sighed. "As cruel as it sounds, Soren, I think you have a point." She pulled her pistol out from under her dress and clicked off the safety. "Sorry, but we'd like to make our raid a bit easier."

Soren shook his head. "Let's not waste ammo. We're on an elevated platform. We'll just dump him from it."

"His group has already killed numerous innocents." Soren's face was icy cold and neutral. "And what if we just release him and he goes ahead and rearms himself?"

"Marie, these people are fanatics. Do you want to put Augments like myself at risk?" Anne asked, pointing to her horn for emphasis. "Don't be mistaken, I'm not in favor of wanton slaughter but he's too high up in the command to keep alive. You saw what his keycard's clearance is."

"Which is why we need to kill him!" Soren snapped. He then gently brushed Felix's nakes chest with the muzzle of his rifle. "Pity, you really weren't a z-level operative. We might have let you live if you were."

Axel gaped at Emilena, flushing. "Huh? I need to..." He blinked and looked down at the mutated Lily. "She thought I was trying to kill her with... with that?!" You're losing time! Swallowing, he nodded quickly at Emilena and ran a hand through his hair awkwardly. "Alright, alright, I'll try. Just... yeah, just guard the door."

As Emilena walked away, Axel crouched down in front of Lily, his eyes roving over her body. He loved her, but... in her current transformed, bloodied state, sex wasn't exactly the first thing that came to mind. Axel spread her legs apart gingerly, and winced. She was spiky down there, too. He let out a shaky breath and started unbuckling his jeans. "Alright... come on..."

Pushing them down, Axel grimaced when he saw there was another problem. After being shot at, beaten, electrocuted and killing people, he was finding it difficult to get his friend in the mood. "Aw, you son of a bitch! Not now..." Rubbing up against her, he accomplished nothing aside from getting poked by something sharp. Leaning back, he tried desperately to help himself along with his hand. Still nothing. "Goddamnit!" he growled after a moment, stopping and punching his leg in frustration. The one time you could use it to save someone's life! Grinding his teeth, he looked around for inspiration... and his gaze settled on Lily's clone lying just to their side. Axel remembered the first night they'd met, how he'd felt the first time he'd looked into her eyes. Leaning over, he grasped the clone's outstretched hand tightly and closed his eyes, memories flitting through his mind of how happy she'd been that morning at Soren's house, when she knew she wasn't alone. And he felt himself stirring.

A small laugh escaped Axel. "Alright! Just... just keep it up..." Pushing forwards, he entered the mutated Lily and gasped as he poked himself on something again, keeping his eyes closed. Keeping a hold of the clone's hand, he started to pick up his pace, his breaths getting quicker.

Felix glared up at Soren with hatred. "I told you, I am Z-level." He spat in his face. "If you're going to kill me then hurry the hell up, you fucking bastard. I don't have all day."

There was a sharp intake of breath as the creature stirred. But Lily kept the conscience forced down. She had already worked herself into a bit of a panic when she couldn't escape, but once she realized what Axel was doing, she became determined to use it.

The tattoo on her chest was at one. This was the only chance she was going to get. Like before, she felt herself leaving the body and settling into Axel's.

No! she thought with determination, Not there! She used Axel's gaze to pinpoint the clone body to her left. He was holding her hand, making it even easier for her to lead herself to her intended destination.

And then...it was done. Sitting up now and breathing for the first time, Lily took several deep breaths and opened her eyes. She felt herself. This body didn't feel like hers, even though it looked like it; this would take some time to get used to.

"Axel..." she whispered, trying to sit up. "Axel...you did it."

The creature under Axel, freed of Lily's control, pushed him away and scampered out of the room. Having remembered how this rat had bested it in ambush before and was proceeding to display the ultimate act of dominance, the creature was more than willing to flee instead of fight.

When he heard Lily speak, Axel's eyes flew open. "Huh?! Oh! Argh!" he cried as the creature pushed him away and he was tugged out roughly. He groaned, holding his crotch as the mutant scrambled away, then looked back up as he heard Lily trying to move. "Oh my god! Lily!"

Dragging himself across, he put an arm around her and helped her to sit up. "Holy crap! It actually worked!" Axel pulled Lily closer and kissed her, then looked her up and down anxiously. "How... how are you feeling? Does everything feel okay?"

"Yes..." Lily smiled, but upon attempting to breathe again she began coughing. Her face turned slightly purple and she clutched her throat.

Emilena rushed back into the room at the sound. "Her lungs are full!" She announced, recognizing the symptoms immediately. Hoisting Lily onto her knees and elbows, she spanked her violently until Lily had cleared her lungs, like a newborn baby.

"Now to clear her trachea...sorry Axel, but it looks like I get first kiss," Emilena pushed Lily back down and administered CPR until Lily vomited green fluid. "Okay...okay, we're good now," Emilena sat back as Lily sat up, looking queasy.

But that didn't stop her from hugging Axel. "Thank you..." she smiled weakly. "I can't believe you managed to..." without further words, she pressed her lips against his, even while crying softly with overwhelming emotion.

Emilena averted her eyes and couldn't repress a disgusted grimace; cloning fluid breath would have to be the worst possible thing to kiss...

Soren wiped the saliva off his face. "Okay. Anne, mind giving me a hand?"

"Okay," Soren said. "Someone needs to hold the door open."

Lily's breath did have a chemical quality to it, but Axel didn't care. He returned the kiss, eagerly pressing against her mouth in unbridled adoration. He could barely dare to imagine that she was finally okay again, and it was as if by maintaining contact, he was reassuring himself of the fact that she was safe. When they finally broke apart after what seemed like forever, he smiled down at Lily and brushed some hair from her eyes. "I said I wouldn't leave you, didn't I?" Leaning his forehead against hers, he whispered, "I love you so, so much."

Axel unzipped his hoodie, pulled it off and wrapped it around Lily to keep her warm. "Here, I, ah, know it's a little big for you... and a little, uh, bloody. Sorry." Looking across at Emilena, he nodded gratefully to her, tears in his eyes. "Thank you."

Suddenly the lights in the building where Soren and the others were dimmed, and then a single spotlight silhouetted Nairda and a mic on the second floor.

With a two-finger kiss in Felix's direction, Nairda hit the background music, and busted some passionate chords. (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VHEvx9GTHVI)

Lily, with Axel's help, got to her feet. "Thanks..." she said gratefully for the sweater.

Emilena glanced at the door. "Wish we had time to get you a shower; I know that stuff isn't pleasant on the skin. But right now we need to get in contact with those two characters we broke in with. Do you have any way of contacting them Axel?"

Nairda's lyrics could use some work, but Felix had to admit - the guy sang with heart, dammit. He twisted around in his chair to look at Nairda as he finished his rap. "Hey! Yeah, we've got chemistry! Loads of it! I can feel it too! We can be Bonnie and Clyde! Just stop these goddamn crazy pricks from killing me!"

Axel nodded. "Yeah, right here..." He fished his cell phone out of his pocket and flipped it open, then winced. "Damn..." The phone's screen had a large crack running through it, but at least it was still working. He quickly tapped out a text to Tony:

Have Lily. Didn't see or hear anything about bomb. Ideas?

He closed the phone and put it back in his jeans, then looked at Emilena. "The bomb, it's... it's still around here somewhere. I have to try and stop it. But if you still want to leave, I... I won't stop you." Axel swallowed and turned to Lily. "If she does, you should go with her. Staying here... it'll be dangerous."

Tony had been waiting patiently in the generator room for the past half hour or so. It was approaching the 40 minute mark now, and he couldn't hear anything further from outside, namely because he was starting to doze. Had the attack failed? But no... the shield they had erected didn't last very long. It soon suffered critical failure, and dissipated like early morning mist. The mob had insiders everywhere, and their insiders had killed the Purifiers manning the shield generator and promptly ensured it could never be used again. Rocket and mortar fire resumed, with the rumblings in the street indicating the mafia were bringing forward a large tank with a bulldozer blade fitted to its front. It clanked rapidly down the main avenue, heading right for the front gate as its 88 mm gun opened fire on the compound's doors.

The vibrations from outside stirred Tony back to wakefulness, and he shook his head, wondering what time it was. Feeling his phone vibrate in his pocket, the ferret reached in and pulled it out in bored fashion, tapping the screen and seeing Axel's message. Oh right... about time. Tapping back Get back here. I'll start the reactor to blow this place if you're ready. he sighed, then slid the phone back into where it had come from. Still leaning against the mammoth generator, the ferret gazed out into the empty room, his sense of unease and low morale only getting lower with each passing second.

Turning, he silently began throwing some switches and twisting some knobs, listening as the reactors rumbled to life with deep, throaty hums, awakening after decades of disuse. He was only starting them up, not raising them to critical level just yet, but that could easily be done in a matter of seconds, and then he'd sabotage the whole thing to ensure they couldn't be shut down again.

Emilena folded her arms. "I Did not come thus far to just trust that Lily can keep herself alive as an unarmored human. Consider this done once we've gotten her to safety."

Lily smiled at her. Emilena expected Lily to ask why Emilena was doing this, like everyone else had, but somehow she already understood.

Lily turned to Axel. "I'd never leave you. But I don't understand...how are you planning on destroying the machine? That's not possible...unless that's where the others are right now."

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 15, 2014, 02:31:38 PM

Axel shook his head. "No... No, Soren and the others are still out in the city. Tony's down setting this place to blow." He frowned. "Wait, what do you mean? Why would it be impossible? I mean, once we find where they're keeping it, we just need to... to sabotage it. Right?"

He walked over and put a hand on Lily's shoulder. "Look, I know it might be hard for you to remember, but did you hear anything, anything at all about where they're keeping it? Some kind of storage area or... or lab maybe?" Axel swallowed. "We're running out of time..."

Marcus looked up as the shield overhead broke down. The mortar fire continued down and hammered against the walls and grounds of the compound. Several Purifiers guarding the walls flinched, and made to run for cover. The doberman snarled and fired in the air. "Don't run! We have to keep them out as long as we can!" Turning back to look out at the grounds, he spat and raised his radio. He hadn't wanted to play this card so early, but since the shield wasn't working... "Sniper teams!"

From the tops of the high rises dotted around the industrial district, Purifiers armed with sniper rifles stared down at the action below. "Here," several voices returned.

"Have any teams managed to locate the mortars yet?"

"Team A."

"Team C."

Marcus nodded to himself. It made sense, they were the two teams posted the furthest away from the base. "Take them out. And make sure no more take their place." From far in the distance, there was a series of tiny, indistinct pops, and the mortar fire abruptly stopped. "Other teams, scan the approach and get ready to fire. They've got to make their move soon..." Marcus frowned when he looked up and saw the tank rolling down the main path to the front gates. The gun opened fire on them, and they started to crumple inwards... then the tank rolled over one of the mines that had been set up, and was promptly blown up. Marcus grunted as the burning wreckage crashed to the floor. Did they really think it was going to be that easy? He could only hope the mob would be as careless when they began moving across the grounds. Turning to the Purifier next to him he barked, "Find someone to repair that gate!"

(Purifier Base)

Aaron swore as a piece of shrapnel kicked up by the mortar fire pinged off his helmet.

He aimed at at one of the attackers about 500 meters out and squeezed the trigger. The German Shepherd had never shot at anything so far away but the HMD and its associated scope made him into a near-perfect sniper.

The Poodle next to Marcus slung his rifle across his back and nodded.

He then darted into the base where several of the Purifiers were waiting for orders.

"Drop yer cocks and grab yer socks!" he shouted. "One of you fuckers needs to fix the gate!"

The troops immediately leapt to attention and filed out to get their tools.

The Canine sighed and pulled out a burner from his pocket. Yanking the small metal tab, he took a deep draw of the now smoking tobacco.

(Abandoned Bakery)

"Shove it up your ass!" Soren snapped. If he wasn't holding the chair, he would have unslung his rifle and smacked the fucker right in the groin with the muzzle of his rifle.

"Not interested in a bigot like you," Anne replied. She smiled, Nairda, for all his obnoxiousness, was actually not a bad rapper. She turned to the three women. "Look, could someone open the door? We don't have all day!"

Soren and Anne quickly hustled him down the stairs.

Soon, they arrived at the "ground level" of the abandoned bakery. Grass grew from between the cracks in the decrepit lot

Small scorch marks, drug vials and beer bottles indicated that this area had probably been used for late night parties more than once. Pockmarks and cracks in the walls hinted that the parties had gotten violent multiple times.

Anne and Soren grunted as they lifted the chair onto the concrete ledge. On the other side was a drop of at least 150 feet to the ground level where more industrial buildings and city infrastructure lay. All it took was a single push from the two to send Felix on a one-way trip to hell.

Felix screamed as he plunged down the huge drop, landing with a wet crunch and turning into what looked like a red soup. The world would never know what adventures he and Nairda could have had together.

Axel didn't say anything for a long time. He stared back at her, his eyes wide. "Wha... no. No, no, that's not..." He trailed off when he realised how much sense it made. Why would they leave their main weapon in a place as well known as this? Axel slumped back against one of the pods. "Oh god..." He thought of the thousands of innocent people that were about to die... and it occurred to him numbly that he was about to, as well.

He felt a vibration in his pocket. Taking out his phone, he saw the text from Marita. Blinking back tears, Axel texted her back: Got her. BOMB NOT HERE. GET SOMEWHERE SAFE. As he sent it, he saw the time on the screen. They had 10 minutes left. There was no way they could stop the bomb now. They'd lost. He swallowed. "I guess that's it, then." Axel looked at Lily. "I'm... I'm sorry..."

He started, then glanced between her and Emilena. "Wait! Holy shit, I think I know a way we can..." Axel ran a hand through his hair. "Lily, remember before, when you ran into this place? That lab, I... I don't know if it was the walls, or what... But while we were in there, the Purifiers set off a, a kind of mini-pulse, and it didn't affect me!"

Axel swung his gaze to Emilena. "If we can get there, then maybe... maybe we'd be okay!"

(OOC: Thanks, felt inspired when I finally got one hour of free alone time in my apartment and wanted to do something hilariously embarrassing to celebrate!)

Bowing his head sadly, Nairda dropped his mic over the side of the building to rest with Mr. Died.

"Well, let's go to the base and finish this," he said, steely-eyed, before instantly becoming wild-eyed and shouting, 'It's fixed!!! I can speak normally again! The rap was too intense for the language filter, and it broke down! I can talk without randomly inserted 'biiiatch'es!"

Tears welled in his eyes. "I've been saved....by the power of rap..."

Emilena narrowed her eyes. "That's right; the lab is sealed against psionics, and this is a psionically-charged pulse. That could work."

She peeked out the doorway and plugged two Purifiers who had been running past the door down the hallway. "We might be able to figure out how much time we've left once we're there.

Lily hugged Axel nervously. "We've got to get you to safety. I don't you to die because of...something I played a big part in operating..." her voice wavered.

Axel put his hands on Lily's shoulders and looked her in the eyes. "I don't want you to blame yourself for this. Ever. Okay? What they did to you... You didn't ask for that. It wasn't your fault." He lightly ran a hand through her hair then started to lead her towards the door. "Besides, big scary guy like me, I'm not gonna give up that easy," Axel continued, giving her a nervous smile, before ducking out next to Emilena.

He nodded at what she said. "Right, 10 minutes to get across to the lab... we can do it." The hallway was clear, so Axel slunk out and pulled a shotgun from the grip of one of the Purifiers Emilena had just shot. Shouldering it, he turned to the two women and gestured. "C'mon, let's get going before more of them turn up..."

In the center of the city, an indistinct white van was parked on the side of the road. It had been there most of the day, and pedestrians walked past it without giving the vehicle a second thought. Stored in the back, a large, box-shaped structure glowed blue, the colour pulsating like a heartbeat. On the top was a blank digital screen. It beeped, and suddenly numbers flashed onscreen - counting down. 00:10:00... 0:09:59

In a car across the street, Rhaegson smiled and put a silver, remote-like object back in his jacket pocket. A burly man in the driver's seat next to him frowned. "You didn't need to be here... shouldn't you be somewhere safer? There'll be some fighting back, you know."

Rhaegson looked at him and shrugged. "I don't want you to have all the fun. Everyone's in position, anyway. Anyone who fights back is going to be put down. And the mob's being kept busy back at the compound. It's all going to plan." He looked down at his watch. 10 minutes left...

(OOC - I'm assuming Doctor Jiang didn't quite program the vocoder properly and it just reverted back to normal.)

Soren looked over the edge. He turned away, not out of disgust but out of indifference. "Okay, let's finish this shit off."

He and Anne returned into the bakery just as Marita spoke. The Human's eyes widened. "Okay, let's find the bomb, disable it and then slaughter as many Purifiers as we can find!"

"But the pulse!" Anne cried out. "We can't search a six square mile city of forty million people in ten minutes!"

"Once that pulse hits, we'll know who the Purifiers are. We'll strike then."

Anne's eye twitched and stomped over to Soren. "Is that all you care about?" she growled, her ears pinned and swiveled back. "Revenge? This isn't about your fucking workshop any more! If this pulse goes off, Axel and myself could very well be killed! How goddamned selfish do you have to be to not give a flying shit about your friend and only about your workshop! Put aside your fucking revenge-boner and actually consider what could happen if these freaks get the upper hand!"

Soren could only gape as Anne verbally ripped him a new asshole.

"There is another way..." Nairda said, steely-eyed. "We don't have to search the entire city if we destroy the entire city..."

He tried to think of how they could do that and drew a blank. "Just providing a third option," he chuckled nervously. "Heh heh...luckily I'm not the boss so I don't have to make the call."

Emilena led the way towards the laboratory, and they reached it via brisk trot in a few minutes.

Too bad at this point there were several personnel present; scientists, specialized guards, anyone who worked for the Purifiers but had an augment for job purposes had relocated here. Emilena was about to suggest they try to blend in when she spotted a few individuals who were rogue cops and would almost certainly recognize her.

"What are you doing?" squealed Lily as Emilena hoisted her gun.

"We're using the only thing we've got; the element of surprise," Emilena replied. There was no time for anything else.

Rolling into the room, Emilena targeted the two guards with heavy weapons first, then dove for cover hoping to get a clear shot on her former colleagues.

Back in the other room, Lupis stirred. Any other being would be dead, but his regenerative factor was slowly working its genetic magic. Anything short of a beheading was recoverable; he couldn't move yet, but he'd be able to soon.

Then a shadow loomed over him. Extasis was back. Grinning grimly, Exstasis drew a knife and placed it on Lupis' neck. He was the only person in the world who knew Lupis' only weakness.

Lupis' eyes went wide and he shook uncontrollably. He tried to speak but he wasn't healthy enough.

"Don't worry..." Exstasis whispered back, guessing what Lupis wished to convey "...if we ever want you back we can just clone you."

The knife tore through skin and bone.

One of the guards started to turn, startled, as the sound of Emilena's gunfire filled the room. He started to raise the Uzi that he was clutching, aiming at her as she went for cover. Charging in after her, Axel swung the barrel of the shotgun to face the guard and pulled the trigger - the blast tore the Purifier's arm from his shoulder, a red mist spraying out over the terrified scientist who was standing next to him. Gritting his teeth, Axel awkwardly racked the shotgun and fired it again, sending a tattooed poodle flying backwards with a gaping hole in his chest.

The rest of the guards had managed to raise their own weapons by this point, and started to return fire, taking cover on the other side of the lab. Swearing, Axel kicked a table over and pulled Lily down behind it, his breaths growing panicked as bullets pinged over their heads. A clock on the wall behind them was shot down, the glass shattering. Axel saw the time as it tumbled to the floor, and he swore again. "6 minutes!" he shouted across to Emilena. "We've gotta clear this room now!"

Tony pushed off from the generator, sighing again as he glanced at his phone. No new messages... "Let's get outta here." he stated.

"What? But you haven't set the reactors to blow yet!" Vergil responded.

"Yeah well... we have ten minutes left... which is 20 minutes too long before these reactors go off if I set them now. Meaning we've already lost. IF Axel and Emilena and Lily were coming back here, they would've been here ten minutes ago. It was timed beforehand... and now they're not here. Something's clearly gone wrong. No messages, no calls, no fucking nothing!" Tony elevated his voice at the end there, stamping his foot paw into the ground. "Best we can do is hope they weren't killed and pull back into the tunnels to avoid the pulse... cause if my phone gets fried again... not that that's the worst of my worries..." he murmured here, thinking about how many were about to die.

Tapping out a quick We're pulling back. No idea where you are. Lost contact. If in trouble, let us know. to Axel, the ferret headed back for the manhole cover, knowing he was gonna lose reception once he entered the tunnel.

"Go ahead." Tony nodded, letting Vergil hop down first. He waited an extra minute before descending the ladder, waiting to see if Axel needed help.

Emilena ducked under the table, shot someone in the foot, then shot them in the face when they helpfully fell to the ground and exposed it.

We need another advantage... she thought. With the remaining bullets in her clip, she sniped as many lights as she could to increase concealment. Several scientists were radioing for help; this served only to expose them to her line of fire.

As she focused on gunning down the scientists, she didn't notice the last pocket of rsistance, the small cadre of rogue officers who had taken cover behind the computer array in the far corner of the lab. One of them primed a grenade and, under the cover of darkness, chucked it at Axel and Lily.

"We're on an elevated platform. There's no basement!" Soren snapped.

Anne looked around. "There's got to be a metal lined room somewhere we can hide!"

"We don't have the time! We'll need to get to the ground level as fast as possible! There's an elevated highway nearby that goes to telecommunications center on the ground level. If we can just carjack someone, we'll be good to go!"

Anne looked at stolen watch. "We better hurry then!"

"Right!" Soren took off in a sprint for the main road. "Everyone else, when you see a car coming, throw something at them. Once they stop, I'll carjack them!"

He readied his rifle and clicked off the safety.

Soren never thought he'd hope there was traffic but sure enough, he found himself wanting.

Even the steady drone of repulsorcars and flying frames had vanished. All that he saw was the pallid glow of street lights.

"Okay, there's no traffic. And we've got four minutes left." Soren sighed and put the safety on his rifle back.

"Well, I guess we're boned." Anne got out a packet of pills from her dress. "Well, I'm dying on my own terms, not theirs!"

"Anne! Don't do that! We'll think of something!"

Soren looked around. "Any ideas?"

Anne looked at the pills and shrugged. She put them back in her dress. She then noticed a "No Tresspassing" sign on the battered fence. "Guys, I have an idea. It's seriously illegal and wrong but I don't think we have a choice."

Soren snorted. "I already carjacked someone and committed murder. Albeit, murder of a bag of shit."

Anne looked at her watch. "Look, we get the police to respond, kill the cop, dump the body and swipe the car."

Soren looked askance. "Are you fucking serious!?"

"Got any better ideas?"

"Modern cars can't be hot-wired. They need a radio signal from the key to start," Anne cut in. She then smiled and tapped her horn. "And I got a universal key!"

She led the group over to the car and climbed into the driver's seat. She closed her eyes and focused as the microprocessor in her skull tried to spoof the reciever in the car.

The electric motor suddenly started up with a whine. "Okay, I managed to use my horn to trick the domputer into thinking there's a key." She looked at her watch. "We've got like two and a half minutes left."

Soren bundled into the passenger's seat. He decided against buckling up as he may need to use his rifle.

Axel popped his head out of cover, aiming the shotgun at the rogue officers taking cover on the other side. Yellow flashes of light illuminated the room as they exchanged gunfire, the darkness making it hard to see if he was hitting anyone. Finally, his gun clicked. He dropped back down and let the gun fall to the floor in frustration. "Crap! I'm out!" As long as Emilena doesn't run out of bullets, we should be okay... He couldn't see how much time they had left, but it couldn't be much longer.

Axel shook his head. He couldn't just sit here and do nothing. He looked at Lily. "I'm gonna try and grab a gun from one of the bodies..." he started to say. Then a metallic clink stopped him as something landed in between them. Axel squinted down at it, and felt himself go cold when he realised that it was a grenade. He stared at it blank faced for a second then dived for it, a strange whistling noise escaping him. "Ohfuckohfuckohfuck!" Fumbling for it, Axel grasped the grenade, stood up and blindly lobbed it back across the lab in the direction of the rogue officers, then knelt back down and squinted his eyes shut.

The man who'd thrown it yelled as he felt something bonk against his head. He caught the object as it fell, and his face paled as he and the other officers saw what it was. "Motherfu-" In the closed confines of the lab, the explosion was deafening. Shrapnel, and parts of the computer array system were thrown across the room. With a wet splat, a foot landed next to Axel.

He waited, then slowly stood up when he didn't hear anything else, his ears ringing. Nothing but bits were left of the rogue officers. "I... I think it's over," Axel said, helping Lily up then nodding across to Emilena. Feeling his phone vibrate, he took it out, trying to control his shaking fingers, and read the text from Tony. Taking cover in lab, safe from bomb. Hide, regroup when it's over, he sent back, then started when he saw the time.

"1 minute! We've got to seal the room!" Axel shouted. He turned to the door and heaved it shut... then froze when he heard a huge crash behind him. Turning slowly, he saw that a large section of the lab's wall, weakened by the grenade's blast, had collapsed outwards, flooding the room with light and exposing it to the outside. Axel blinked. "Well, shit."

Emilena blinked. "We're...uh...we're fucked," she finally admitted, looking at the plastered remains of their protection against the pulse. "I mean, really you are, Axel. Lily and I will survive, the only augmented parts of me are my hands."

Lily balled her fists. "No..." she whispered, and it wasn't a whisper of desperation or disbelief; her tone was commanding and defiant. I've been fighting to control a psion in my mind for the past week; I psionically powered this very bomb, I am not about to let it let it tell me what that pulse will do to my loved one.

As the remaining seconds ticked off the clock, she wrapped her arms around Axel and touched their foreheads together. Emilena just stood off to the side, seeing if she could spot any way to save her hands from the coming EMP pulse. Sadly there was nothing in the way of a shielded box or anything.

20 seconds... Rhaegson sniffed and pulled out a radio. 10 seconds... The man sitting next to him licked his lips and drew back the safety on his assault rifle. The timer kept ticking down. 5...4...3...2...1... Rhaegson smiled. 0. Inside the van, the bomb beeped, and started humming. Slowly, the noise built up, growing louder and louder. Citizens walking past the vehicle started to pause, looking at it curiously. They started to back away nervously when the windows in the van started to rattle. The bomb started to shake, its vibrations growing violent...

And then, with a sudden roar that resonated through the body of everyone nearby, a huge blue wave erupted from the van. The windows exploded as it shot up in the air, then spread out in a growing dome formation, the blue light washing over buildings and shooting down the streets as the dome traveled outwards, spreading over the city of Lanthae.

From inside the car, Rhaegson could hear screaming, cars crashing. One of the people who'd taken an interest in the van, a dalmatian, fell to the floor and started convulsing. Raising the radio to his mouth, he pressed the button on the side. "We're a go. Have fun, boys." The man next to him grinned, and got out of the car, making his way towards the shaking dalmatian.

Throughout Lanthae, the Purifiers began their slaughter.

Marcus shot down another approaching member of the mob, then ducked back down behind cover to reload. The Purifier next to him shouted for more ammo, and Marcus tossed him a spare clip. "Keep fighting!" he shouted, his voice hoarse. "It's almost time! Just..." The doberman stopped when his ears picked up a faint buzz.

Turning, he looked in the direction it was coming from. Far in the distance, a blue glow was getting brighter... and then Marcus saw the pulse itself, rushing towards the base, the buzz turning into a roar that grew louder with every passing moment. As the Purifiers around him started cheering, Marcus smiled.

Axel swallowed numbly, Emilena's words drowned out by the panic rushing through him. Looking dazed, he stepped towards Lily. As she put her arms around him, Axel felt his frame start trembling. He gritted his teeth and let out a breath as he heard a rumbling from outside get louder and louder. Axel hugged her tightly.

"I love you. I love you," he choked as their foreheads touched. He squeezed his eyes shut as a blue light rushed through the hole in the wall and flooded the lab.

Anne screamed as the pulse washed over her. She was far enough that the pulse didn't fry her augments but it still caused massive amounts of pain. The car was now at the outer rim of Lanthae where they were now actually at ground level. Sprawling fields of algae and assorted farms as well as a few factories provided a huge contrast to the towering black neon lit monoliths of the Lanthae city core.

She gritted her teeth and clutched her hands to her forehead. The car swerved wildly as she took her hands off the steering wheel.

"Anne! Get a fucking hold of yourself!" Soren screamed as he reached over and wrestled with the steering wheel to keep them from ending up inside an algae farmer's tank. The mare was still screaming in agony as the remaining pulses continued to wash over them.

(Dr. Jiang's Clinic)

The clinic was shielded so all the Augments inside were unharmed.

Unfortunately, the same could not be said of the security systems. Thanks to the pulse, they had been fried ó and anyone seeking to do harm could just walk in.

"We need to move," a Krait nurse exclaimed.

Doctor Jiang turned on the TV. Live images of Purifiers running amok and slaughtering Augments and allies" alike ó in horrifyingly sadistic and innovative ways; the screen showed a group of Purifiers throwing a young Augment, not much older than ten years old, off an elevated sidewalk and onto the train tracks below.

Chants of "Death to Gleamers!" and "Burn in hell, orgo-traitors!" filled the night air.

The Chinese doctor then turned the TV off. "We can't move now. It looks like the whole city's affected. If we leave now, we'll all be killed. We need to stay here until the furor dies down ó and then we move."

He reached into desk and swapped out his left hand for one that contained a two foot vibroblade. It was intended to laborers to use in cutting concrete and other hard materials but like many class 2 augments, it has been often been misued as a weapon.

(OOC - Orgo-traitor is a term that refers to a Baseline who has a relationship with an Augment. It doesn't matter if the relationship is sexual, friendly or even just professional. Needless to say, this is a highly offensive term.)

Soren straddled the center console and wrestled with the wheel as he pulled the car over to the side of the road. On the other side of the fence was an algae farm.

Anne staggered out of the car. "My head," she moaned. She collapsed onto the hard tarmac.

Soren sighed and got out of the car. He placed both arms under the mare's armpits and tried to drag her into the backseat.

After a few minutes of backbreaking labor, she was safely in the backseat. Soren wiped some sweat off his forehead.

He turned to Marita. "We need to get in contact with Tony and the others!"

Soren looked off into the distance. "If they successfully do a pogrom in Lanthae, what's to stop them from doing a nationwide one?" He shuddered at the implications. What he had once thought was a small-time group of thugs had now turned out to be a group of genocidal anti-Augment fanatics.

As the pulse washed over the lab, Emilena cried out and fell to the ground as her hands sparked and sent her to her knees. Her hands literally would not function anymore, and blood started to trickle out from her cuticles as the inner wires frayed and short circuited.

Axel, on the other hand, was unharmed by the pulse. As it washed over them, Lily squinted her eyes and clenched his hands in her fists. The pain he would have have felt was absorbed into her body and the harmful effects of the pulse could not enter her domain.

Some of the surviving wounded on the floor cried out as the pulse didn't spare them from its effects. A few seconds later, the pulse had passed.

Emilena, half preoccupied with her bleeding hands, still spared Lily a surprised look. "How did you...?"

Lily smiled softly. "Psionics are a mental strength, and I've had training from hell these past few days..."

Inside the car, Nairda's broken body convulsed as it finally succumbed to the pulse it had sustained over the past few milliseconds. As he flatlined, he managed the strength to grab one of his teammates ignoring him and pull the girl close to him.
"T-tell...Emilena...tell her I...love her..."
He choked out, then, as his hand went limp, he managed the ghost of a smile as a single tear rolled down his face. He would later be buried in an unmarked grave, without ceremony or mourners, just another casualty of the city that he had fought for.

Tony managed to jump down into the tunnels just in time, killing his cell service and sealing the cover shut. Panting, he waited, though was unable to tell the effects of the devastation up top. The pulse served to fry everything, knocking out the city's defenses and cooking hundreds of thousands of augments at once.

"Wait!" Tony held up his paw, wondering if the others had made it to the lab and survived. "Just wait... give it..." he checked his phone, "ten minutes."

As the defenses dropped citywide, agents of Kalis observed the spectacle, having taken proper precautions to avoid the pulse by moving to just outside the city's limits. There was no point to being in the city anyway, after what was about to be unleashed.

Broadcasting the news out to the fleet, the message was received without problems. Kalis's fleet admiral once again approached him. The dark warlord was standing calmly on the bridge of his flagship, still staring out into the dark. "Lord Kalis..." the admiral began.

"I know... I sensed it..." Kalis responded in his wheezing, raspy voice. "So much death... it's wonderful! It courses through my veins... enlivens me with a certain kind of vigor! Open the gate, Admiral Carrack."

"Yes, my lord." Carrack bowed at the waist, and turned. "Open the gate! Prepare to jump!"

Soon, a blue spark exploded in front of the gathered fleet, growing larger and larger until a portal took form, appearing like a miniature blue-black hole that rotated clockwise in on itself. It grew in size until it was several miles across, easily large enough for the fleet to pass through. Gate-jumping was a process that bent the fabric of space-time and allowed faster than light travel across vast distances provided there were relays existing at points A and B. Most major cities had relays for the delivery of goods long distances, and Kalis's fleet had an array of relays equipped on its carriers that were normally reserved for experimental space travel but could be used to traverse the planet just as easily. With Lanthae's government now in total chaos, there was no way to prevent Kalis's fleet from making an unauthorized jump into the city.

The ships' engines rumbled to life, and began moving towards the gate, which quickly sucked them through like a vacuum, and they streaked across the sky like meteorites before suddenly appearing over Lanthae's morning sky.

Massive ships began blotting out the sun, and the attack was swift and merciless. Explosions and sheets of flame blossomed around the city as the aerial bombardment commenced.

Inside the Purifier base, Tony was just emerging back into the dusty reactor room after ten minutes when he could feel the ground shaking all around him. "What the hell?" he demanded, struggling to keep his balance. "Is this part of the Purifiers' attack?" he wondered aloud, looking around.

"No!" Vergil exclaimed, pointing upward out the windows now. "Look!" Tony craned his neck and gazed out the windows, gasping as he saw a titanic aerial battleship looming overhead, resembling a giant hammerhead shark as it opened a heavy caliber fire on the Purifier base. The shots ripped gaping holes in the complex and started to leave craters on the grounds large enough to drive multiple big rigs through rather comfortably.

"What the... hell?" the ferret whispered, and noticed Vergil seemed shocked to see this particular ship.

"No... it can't be!" the white gecko gasped.

"What? What?" Tony proclaimed, trying to press Vergil for answers.

"It's Kalis's fleet! I... I recognize it!" he replied, shaking his head in disbelief.

"Kalis? What's he doing here?" Tony asked.

"Wish I knew!" Vergil responded, still looking at the ship as more shots tore into the base.

"We... we gotta get out of here!" Tony stammered. It was clear the base would be flattened in a matter of minutes if this kept up. Tearing his phone out of his pocket, he silently prayed it was still working, and much to his relief, could see that it was. The tunnels had protected it, and he sighed in relief as he fumbled with the screen, noticing he had a message from Marita, and quickly read it. outside the city! he replied, and began writing a message to Axel. You guys make it? We gotta get to the car! Still at the tunnel he wrote. The one small glimmer of hope was that the labs were located close to the old reactors, so it shouldn't take very long for Axel and the others to make their way back here if they could. He also noticed a message from one of his father's capos, indicating they were pulling back in the face of the aerial attack.

As the attack over Lanthae commenced, the government was sending out what distress messages it could, pleading for help. The nearest aerial fleet was some distance away, but did respond to the message, and began making for Lanthae. As they lacked gate-jumping capabilities, they would have to travel at sub-light speeds to the city, but even despite this, Admiral Bryce McCormick vowed to do his damnedest to reach the city in a timely fashion with the 9th Fleet, as Kalis was a wily and dangerous warlord they'd been hunting for some time now, and had finally appeared over one of the world's largest cities.

broadstree was defending the police department from assault by purifiers, their bodies lay blocking the doorway as one by one they fell to broadstreets bullets.. the city was in ruins, and the death toll was likely near 1 million. broadstreet cursed the purifiers as the last attacker fell dead.' we need to gget out of the city and regroup..'take whatever vehicles you can get, and bring along any survivors you can pick up..' he ordered. the surviving officers saluted him and hjeaded out.broadstreet then went to the armory, picked out a bulletproof vest and.put it on. he then grabbed a pair of guns and as much ammo as he could, then headed out the back of the police station to his car. like many police issued car the windows were bulletproof. broadstreet headed out of the police parking garage and headed towards the city outskirts. _ tonys alive! ' marita said upon receiving the text message ' nairda isnt' rose said indicating his limp body..'we'll have to bury him somewhere'' marie replied as marita sighed upon seeing nairda's body.' that'll have to wait until we get reunited with the others. As the pulse entered the room and Lily's grip tightened, Axel shuddered at the tingling sensation that ran through his body... then it was over. Hesitantly, he opened his eyes and was surprised to see that his vision still seemed to work. Glancing down, he flexed his fingers and gave a small laugh, disbelievingly, when they actually moved. "Holy crap, I'm... okay!" He looked at Lily and smiled. "I... I've got no idea how you did that, but... thank you..." He hugged her and kissed the tip of her nose.

When Axel pulled back, he saw the state Emilena was in and his eyes widened. "Oh jesus... We've got to get out of here..." He started to make his way over to her when a dull boom from somewhere in the distance made the ground tremble. Axel paused for a second. "What's..." There was the sound of another explosion, this one much, much closer and the floor jolted beneath him, hard enough to send him stumbling into one of the metal cabinets. "What the hell's going on?!" he gasped. Feeling his phone vibrate again, he snatched it out and saw Tony's message. "Ah crap..." On our way! he sent back, then looked quickly between Lily and Emilena.

"Tony's waiting for us in the tunnels, it's our only way out of here!" Axel rushed over to the Emilena and helped pull her to her feet. "Come on, we've gotta go!"

Marcus shoved a Purifier out of the way of the ship's gunfire, then rolled back to avoid it himself. His mouth twisted into a snarl as, sliding to his feet, he looked up to take in the flying ship that had opened fire on them. What the fuck is going on?! Gunships?! Where the hell had they come from?!

A tower started to collapse behind him. It smashed onto the ground just behind him with a deafening crash, crushing several unfortunate people, dust and debris flying outwards. Marcus leaped into one of the craters to avoid the parts flying lethally through the air, then scrabbled back up the other side, spitting out dust and looping the strap of his assault rifle over his shoulder. Glancing at the base as it crumbled before the ship's gunfire, he could see staying here was pointless. "We're retreating!" Marcus shouted across to the Purifiers who'd managed to take cover and avoid being torn apart. "Get moving! Now!" Charging through the alleyways of the base, sprinting to avoid the bullets that tore through its structure, Marcus led the remaining Purifiers across the compound to the exit on the western side.

Rhaegson blinked sweat out of his eyes as he took cover from the aerial bombardment, looking up into the sky. His men had been given orders for different strategies to adopt in the event of various problems arising... but warping spaceships? Didn't see that coming... Now that's just fuckin' rude...

He spat to the side and looked around at the men who'd gathered with him. Staying up on ground level obviously wasn't an option. Across the street, he could see an entrance leading to the subway system - if they could make it down there, they'd be able to take cover, regroup and come up with a new plan in response to this, he regretted to admit, unforeseen set-back. Rhaegson just had to hope the other Purifiers would realise the same thing.

He pointed across. "Get into the subway! Go!" Rhaegson waited for them to look at where he was gesturing, then sprint across. Gritting his teeth, he tore after them, ducking his head as he ran through the flaming debris that rained down on them. Raising his eyes, Rhaegson saw they'd all managed to make it down - he was the last Purifier left up top. A few more steps brought him closer to the stairs. He was almost there...

Then a massive explosion next to him threw him to the side. He landed with a crack, his left arm snapping as it twisted under his body. When Rhaegson regained consciousness 10 seconds later, he coughed and rolled over onto his back. Looking up, he could see the ship hovering way up overhead, continuing to fire down at Lanthae. He couldn't hear as building parts crashed to the floor near him, couldn't hear anything, and it occurred to him, almost absent-mindedly, that he might be deaf. Gotta get moving...

Rhaegson tried to get to his feet... but he couldn't move. Frowning, he raised his head, looking down at his body... or at least, what was left of his body, which now ended at his waist. Below was just a red smear, with the start of an intestinal coil poking out. Looking around, he squinted and could just make out one of his legs, torn and bloody, lying a couple of meters away. The strength in his neck suddenly gave and he let his head fall back to the ground, his vision starting to darken, the colours fading. Well, that puts a crimp in my day, Rhaegson thought. Then he died.

Kojurro coughed out blood as he staggered down the street. he hasd fought off a group of 5 purifiers who had attacked him, and while he had killed them, he was pretty banged up.. the sight of the carnage around him filled him with fury at those responsible.; gotta get out of here' he thought, as as an injured St Bernard Augment grabbed his leg, and pleaded for help ' please' he begged ' Kojurro sighed and helped the injured dog to its feet,one of the Bernard's hind legs had a large piece of metal sticking out of it..names Manny' the Bernard said through gritted teeth ' Kojuuro' Kojurro said Manny weighed 200 pounds and it was not easy for Kojuuro to lift him, finally he sat down on a sidewalk ' we have to get that debris out of your leg.. i'm no doctor.. Kojurro said.. he reached inside of his shirt and found the the beeper Broadstreet had given him to activate the bug. Kojurro pressed the beeper which gave off a noise. a few minutes later Broadstreet pulled up next to him in his car.' you have more lives than a cat.. Broadstreet said to him. then noticed Manny. ah an injured civilian. Didnt know you gave a damn Kojuuro. You surprise me.. Broadstreet went over to Manny and with a sharp pull removed the blood soaked shrapnel from Mannys leg . Manny yelled out in great pain, as Broadstreet tossed the debris away. ' put him in the backseat. theres a first aid there with bandages and gauze' Broadstreet said to kojuuro.' we're getting the hell out of here. the two helped manny into the backseat of the car, and kojurro climbed in after huim. broadstreet climbed back in and took off again, while Kojuuro bandages Mannys leg.

Emilena got to her feet awkwardly since she couldn't use her hands. "I hope you can keep all three of us alive, rat," she grumbled. She attempted to pick up her katana but could only waggle her fingers around it like raw strips of bacon.

Lily bent over and helpfully clipped the sword to Emilena's belt. "Let me take your hands for a second," she offered. Closing her eyes, she bit her lower lip and focused.

Emilena sighed reflexively as the pain started to disappear. Glancing down, she noticed with alarm that blood was starting to trickle out of Lily's nails and her hands were shaking. Realizing the nature of Lily's healing abilities, Emilena snapped, "Not right now!" and snatched her hands away, causing Lily to gasp in surprise. "I'm fine! Your hands are more valuable than mine at the moment." She rubbed them, then followed Axel. "Let's get moving."

Axel quickly bent and snatched the Uzi from the guard's severed arm, grimacing as he pulled the gun free from the fingers wrapped around it, then crossed the room. "Alright, let's... get going," he grunted as he shoved the lab's door open. Whatever was going on outside, the noise had become relentless, and Axel could feel his teeth setting on edge as the compound around them shook, dust falling in waves from overhead and settling on them as they dashed through the halls. On the way, they came across a group of three Purifiers dashing down towards them, their eyes widening in surprise at seeing the intruders. Before they could say anything Axel mowed them down and jumped over their bodies, his legs carrying him faster as the racket outside grew deafening.

Turning the corner, Axel could see the door that lead to the reactor room. "Come on, we're almost there!" He started leading them down the hallway... and suddenly, behind them, the wall began collapsing inwards as something punched through. Axel turned and gaped. Was that gunfire? What kind of guns can do that?! Whatever it was, dust, glass and rubble started flying towards them as the destruction tearing the place apart rushed up the corridor in their direction.

"Fuck! Run!" Axel yelled, seizing Lily's hand and sprinting down the corridor. The door was getting closer - but, from the sound of it, so was the gunfire that was shredding where they'd been just moments before. No way... we aren't dying now, not when we're so close! Reaching the metal door, Axel kicked it open and shoved Lily and Emilena through into the reactor room. Diving after them, he tripped and tumbled down the stairs, landing at the bottom with a groan as the ship's gunfire tore past, destroying the doorway and bringing down the roof behind them.

"Jesus, you made it!" Tony exclaimed, seeing the group charging towards him as the base began to collapse and come down. "We gotta get the hell outta here!" Holding his paw out for them, he helped first Lily down into the tunnel, then Axel, and finally, noting Emilena couldn't seem to use her hands, he grabbed hold of her armpits before she could protest, and let Axel grab her from the lower half so she wouldn't fall down the ladder and break her neck. "Here!" He said, quickly following down after her as the building was torn apart, the room they were standing in starting to act as if a giant were punching its walls.

The ground shook violently, a virtual earthquake going on around them as the battleship's big guns ripped the base apart, shredding it as effectively as if it were a toy being put through a pulverizer. "Hope this goddamn elevator still works!" Tony said through clenched teeth as they ran down the tunnel, the ferret hearing the sounds of tearing metal and collapsing walls further back from the complex.

Vergil was the first to reach the elevator, piling in and slapping the up button to the ground floor, but then jamming his bulbous finger down on the door open button to ensure everyone got inside. Once they were, his white finger mashed the close button, and they were soon making their painful way upwards, Tony silently praying that the elevator wouldn't tumble back down as the building they were in shook like a leaf in the wind.

The elevator rattled and rumbled its way up to the ground floor, and Tony let out an exhale as the doors opened and he ran out first to get the car ready. Everyone could fit in the car, and they wouldn't need the trailer, but Tony knew the car was powerful enough to reach 100 even with the trailer attached. Throwing himself behind the wheel, the ferret fumbled with his keys, eyes on the destruction of the Purifier base ahead of him, and he swore as he dropped the keys briefly. "Shit!"

Reaching down, he retrieved them and started up the big V-12. Vergil got into one of the back seats, and once everyone was inside, Tony gunned the engine and whipped the car around in a 180 degree turn, tires squealing as he pointed the car towards the highway, but then thought better of it. Looking at the sky, he could see the aerial fleet was concentrating its attack on major buildings and thoroughfares, and the highway was the place to avoid right now. OK... time to take some back streets to escape the city.

"So... I take it Lily's back?" Tony asked when he was certain he was safely away from the Purifier base, and could focus a bit less on driving like he was being chased by all the forces of hell, which in a way, he kind of was. He felt his phone vibrate, and he pulled it out to quickly glance at a text message from his father.

On the bridge of the Red Castle, Kalis was gazing with satisfaction at the destruction of the city. If they submitted, fine, but he doubted he'd have time to occupy this place. Already his fleet had intercepted emergency distress calls to the 9th Fleet, so he knew they were at least inbound. Still... nothing wrong with a little chaos every now and then. Even if he wasn't ready for a stand-up battle just yet, this was an opportunity he wasn't going to waste.

But there was something here... a distant presence he was sensing... a presence he hadn't felt in a long time. But that presence was impossible. There was no way he could be feeling it. Narrowing his eyes, he pushed it from his mind, and instead focused on watching the explosions and the decimation below him, reveling in the sight as if he were at some intense sporting event.

"That's me," Lily said shyly. "I know I look different from how you've seen...but this is how I normally look. Thank you for putting up with me when I was...less than hospitable."

Emilena narrowed her eyes as she watched the destruction outside. "Where exactly are we going?" she asked. She suspected Tony was returning to his father, and Emilena suspected she shouldn't be at the planned reunion.

Nairda's body hit the street and tumbled as he was forcibly ejected from the car. In a few seconds he stopped rolling when he hit the side of a barn.

A few hours later, he came to in the bed of the farmgirl that nursed him back to health. As she unsubtly came on to him, clearly sheltered and desperately inexperienced in the ways of men, her father kicked the door down and angrily chased him from the town with a burning pitchfork.

Axel hunched over in his seat as Tony sped the car through the narrow side streets, feeling exhaustion seeping into his limbs now that they were out of the immediate danger of the base. As long as we don't get bombed by those things in the sky, it'll be smooth sailing... Rubbing an arm across his face, he took Lily's hand in his own and leaned across to Emilena. "Whatever happens... you're welcome to stay with us. I... I don't know if I can repay you for what you've done." Axel looked at Tony and smiled. "You too. If you hadn't shown us that way in... Things could have gone differently. Thank you."

He sighed and leaned back, then stared out the window at the huge ship hovering over Lanthae. Axel swallowed. "Vergil... what... do you know what the hell's going on?"

Title: Into the Black
Post by: Pterano on April 20, 2014, 08:50:25 PM

"For now, out of the city. I can drop you off if you have a specific destination in mind and it's not being bombed to hell." Tony responded to Emilena. He glanced in the rearview mirror at Axel now. "Uh... sure, no problem." he responded, nodding. "You don't have to repay me." Plus I don't think you can, he didn't add. It was certainly high praise for having done essentially nothing but show him a way into the base. Still, it had helped get Lily out of there, and that was their main goal. This Kalis or whoever he was... he was doing their job for them now by helping to eradicate the Purifiers... but it was coming at a very high cost.

Axel also seemed to have gotten over the whole "you chose your family over me so I'm choosing her over you" thing. Tony figured not to bring it up, especially if the rat wasn't going to do so further. He needed to put it behind him, and just go on with his life. Whatever the future held, he wasn't sure, but there were things still remaining to be done, with or without his friends.

Vergil glanced up again as they wound their way through small side streets, staying clear of the aerial attack and away from major centers of commerce. It was working out well so far, as the ferret's route was keeping them clear of the bombing. "Well... I can't say with any certainty... only that Kalis is here... I don't know if it's for me, or just because he's a warlord bent on ruling the planet, but he's here." Vergil stated with some finality. "This attack is too big for me... and I don't know why he'd concern himself with someone like me anyway. I don't know how prominently I factor into his past, if I factor in at all." he murmured here. "But I DO remember this fleet distinctly. I can't... say if I served in it at some point in time or not, though. It's all just... a blur." he muttered with some dejection.

"Few miles out of town would be great," said Emilena, who was focused more on gauging her location using the remaining landmarks still standing. She didn't particularly like Tony so the sooner she could be on her own, the better.

"Hey," Lily said firmly, waiting until she had Emilena's eye contact, "Axel was serious about his offer. We both owe you, and you need somewhere to live. We could all use each other, and we've earned each other's trust."

Emilena smiled weakly, not out of insincerity but lack of practice. "Thank you for the offer. I'm pleased to have cleared my debt to you. But I have to insist that we part ways." Axel has wisely kept his full name secret from most relevant parties and Lily will be tougher for the Purifiers or mafia to recognize in her fully-human appearance. In contrast almost everyone on every front knows Emilena's name and face, and most of them would like to see her dead. She would only jeopardize the best chance Axel and Lily have of successfully slipping under the radar.

Title: Into the Black
Post by: bushwacked on April 21, 2014, 08:37:58 AM

Axel nodded. "Alright... well, just know that the offer always stands. If you ever need somewhere to stay, then... uh, you know." He blinked, then looked at Lily. "And, ah, speaking of which... we need to find somewhere to stay! I mean, I don't have a second house in the country or any surprises like that." Sighing, he looked out the window. "Well, as long as it's far away from all this... and as long as I'm with you... It'll be okay." Axel felt something sharp dig against his leg and, wincing, he pulled out the remains of his phone - it must have broken when he fell down the stairs. He swallowed. He'd have to trust that Soren, Marita and the others were okay.

After a while, Axel glanced at Tony and Vergil. "How about you guys? I'm, ah, guessing the Straccis don't need to worry about being homeless?"

Tony shook his head. "No... my dad is going to relocate though. He's getting some larger movers in to get all our stuff... no use sticking around in a ruined city, after all." Tony sighed. "I grew up here but... I guess it just wasn't meant to be. But... at least my dad's made arrangements to save all our stuff... including the cars." Tony smiled here. "Maybe I'll get to drive one to the new location. My dad's got homes all over, after all." he shrugged here. "But... I... yeah I guess I'll just stay with him for now." he concluded, sounding unsure.

Vergil shook his head. "No idea what I'm going to do or where I'll be staying. I need to find out about my past and who I am after all... as well as my link to Kalis. Maybe I'll start traveling... interviewing everyone I can find who was connected to the Scorched Earth War and who might've known about my service... and well... I'd like to learn about Kalis's former boss... who he was, why he suddenly turned traitor... I feel I'll find answers that way." he explained as they exited the city. Open fields stretched on before them, and Tony drove towards some woods he knew about to the southwest of the city.

Slowing the Pierce-Arrow down, the ferret could see refugees in this area were minimal so far. "This place good?" he asked Emilena, looking over at her now.

"Perfect." Without so much as a thank you, Emilena exited the car before it had even fully come to a stop.

Lily smiled sadly. She seemed to guess Emilena wouldn't be swayed. "At least give us some way to contact you, then. In case you change your mind."

Emilena paused. "If I change my mind, I'll be able to find you. It used to be my job to find people, you know."

And then she took off at a brisk sprint until the smoke and ashes emanating from the neighboring city had swallowed her.

(Farmlands outside Lanthae)

Soren looked at the column of smoke rising from the ravaged city. The booming of the fleet's massive cannons echoed around the countryside.

He sighed. The countryside was a throwback to earlier times. Except for the tall gleaming towers of refineries, factories and vertical farms dotted throughout the are.

The Human sighed. "Well, the city's fucked. And we're equally fucked. What do we do now? Meet up with Tony and Axel?"

"What else can we do?" Anne replied.

Soren nodded. "Can someone text the two again?"

(Purifer Base)

Sirens screamed throughout the ravaged compound as the relentless bombardment continued.

Aaron swore as the hallway he was in shuddered, knocking him to the ground. His smart rifle was just an ordinary rifle and the HMD associated with it were all but useless, fried by the EMP. Pausing a moment, he ripped the HMD from his combat helmet and the scope from the rifle and tossed the two useless pieces of electronics away.

The German Shepherd panted from the near constant running. His lungs and legs burned fiercely as he sucked in the dusty air.

It was then he saw it, the green glow of the exit sign and the lights of the outside. The flickering of the exit sign indicated he had little time left before the exit collapsed.

He urged his muscles to worker even harder and shot through the opening. And not a moment too soon as the reinforced concrete finally failed, entombing anyone unfortunate enough to be left inside.

The Canine looked around the group of Purifiers for Marcus.

Tony felt his phone vibrate again, and pulled it out as Emilena got out of the car. It was from Marita. Looking behind him at Axel and Lily in the rearview mirror, he cleared his throat. "Ahem so... where can I drop you guys off?" he asked, starting to drive forward at a slower place once more.

He texted back Not sure I'm meeting you. Need to help my family first. We're relocating to Marita. He really had no reason to link up with the others right now, and the texts he was getting from them meant they were safe for now, so he didn't have to worry about that.

Axel watched through the window as Emilena ran off, his ear flicking as she disappeared into the smoke. He turned as Tony spoke, biting his lip. "I, ah... I don't know. I mean, there's gonna be plenty of small towns around here in the country..."

He looked at Lily and put an arm around her shoulder. "What do you think? Take our chances... find somewhere quiet, settle down and try to make a new start?" Axel smiled at her. "Late lie ins... Dinners in front of the TV... I can make a mean macaroni-cheese on toast."

"No problemo!" Tony responded with a grin. "Can do! Fortunately, my dad's manor is kind of in the next town over anyway, so we should be able to work that out. I'll drop you off before then and I'll be on my way!" He drove through the open fields, and finally managed to get on the Garden State Parkway, having made his way there over bucolic country roads. The Pierce-Arrow seemed to blend in perfectly with this atmosphere in a way, as the countryside, while having high-tech farms, wasn't over the top with its technological sprawl like Lanthae was.

Reaching the town where his father lived, Tony slowed down on the main street and then pulled over at the curb. "Here we go! This good?" He asked, rotating in his seat to look behind him at the couple now. "Hey! Stay in touch, OK?" the ferret asked, raising his brows.

Back over Lanthae, Kalis was growing a bit frustrated. He had sensed her presence in the city, but it had vanished rapidly, and the warlord was convinced he'd missed her. "Damn!" he wheezed, shaking his head "Clever of you... but I knew you were here."

"Lord Kalis! The 9th Fleet is approaching!" came a shout from one of the bridge techs.

"Mmm... very well. Prepare to withdraw. We've sown enough devastation today..." Narrowing his eyes, Kalis glared out the front viewport. "I'll find you..." He murmured. "Don't think you can hide from me forever!"

A few minutes more, after delivering more devastating shots to the city below, Kalis's battle fleet began withdrawing, opening up the gate once more to prepare to jump. Several minutes after that and it was all over, the powerful fleet nothing more than a very close memory as the skies over Lanthae cleared.

Lily smiled. "We'll keep in touch," she beamed back at Tony. "Thank you for everything, and best of luck in getting home."

She got out of the car and turned to say thanks to Vergil next, but stumbled when she made eye contact. There was something...dark in his subconscious. Not even in his thoughts. In his destiny.

She managed a weak smile. "I...I'm sorry..." she tried to hide her discomfort but did poorly. "You've got a lot of power, and even more potential...just, when you get the chance to use it...remember compassion."

Not knowing what else to say, Lily stepped away from the car and averted her eyes, waiting for Axel to say his goodbyes so they could leave.

Emilena stumbled along the side of the road, coughing almost as rapidly as she was sprinting. Her burning lungs be damned, she needed to get as far away from Lanthae as she could.

Still, part of her was glad at how everything turned out. She'd paid her debt, and was free to live the rest of her life alone and away from everything in her past. She would never have to see any of these idiots ever again--

"Woooahhh!!!" Someone came out of the smoke too suddenly for her to avoid and crashed into her, making a stupid noise she was all too familiar with.

"Nairda..." she snarled, stifling an exasperated groan. "Of all people..."

"Sorry about that, madam!" Nairda brushed some ash off his shoulder, thereby making it the least ashy part of his body. "There's a psychotic farmer chasing me who wants my gonads on his pitchfork!...or at least there was when I started running thirty minutes ago..."

She slapped him to get him to shut up, and he double-took. "...Emilena!?"

Despite herself, she grinned. "God, you're an idiot. Come here."

Grabbing him by the collar, she smothered him in a passionate kiss.

Climbing out of the car, Axel walked over to Tony's window and leaned through. "Sure, we'll keep in touch. You haven't heard the last of us, Stracci! Maybe someday I'll take one of your dad's cars for a ride," he grinned, nudging the ferret's shoulder. "Or, ah... maybe not. Thanks, Tony and... take care of yourself, alright?" He looked over to Vergil and nodded. "You too. I know you've got some... a lot, of questions but be careful out there."

With a last smile, he stepped away from the car and took his place next to Lily on the sidewalk, raising his hand in a wave. "I guess we'll see you guys later!"

marita turned topwards the car when marie tapped her on the shoulder ' um, marita before we head off theres one thing i want to say.. thanks.. for letting me tag along, and not leaving me on my own after the night club blew up..' marita smiled at her ' well marie you've become a friend. i'd be glad to share an apartment with you.' Marita offered ' just as roomates' marie asked.' marie..marita started but didnt get to finish as marie kissed her on the lips.marie kissed her for a few seconds then broke away.' well, if you feel that way..' marita shrugged. i still have my drug problem to deal with rose said as she approached them. ' we'll get you detoxed' marita priomised her..rose hugged her, then hugged marie, who kissed her in response. rose blushed as she pulled away from Marie' well i'm ready to get going ' she said.

Eventually Emilena and Nairda found themselves in the lonely stretches of the desert outside the Northern suburbs of Lanthae. The next city over was a night's walk, but for the time being Emilena had set up the tent she'd been lugging since she left her parent's home, her hands having regained most of their functioning by now. The remainder of her food provisions were cooking over a fire, and Nairda was looking hungrily at them.

Instead he quickly found himself pressed forcefully to this ground by a naked vixen. "Hey Nairda," Emilena's eyes flashed mischievously. "I figured out why lovemaking with you was so goddamn boring."

"You...uh...you did?" he asked nervously, as she ripped his clothes off him.

"Yeah," she grinned, "you were missing the funnest part."

She punched him. Then punched him again. Then kept punching him until he punched her back in self-defense. Then she kneed him in the crotch until he kicked back. Soon the two were a whirlwind of claws, sex, and dirt.

Hours later, panting heavily, Nairda dragged his exhausted but satisfied body over to the food. "Where do...what's our plan now?" he exhaled, ripping into some jerky.

Emilena was squeezing blood out of her hair. "Who the fuck cares. Go anywhere. Fuck the world."

That night the two ignored the tent and slept outside, the desert wind wafting along their bruised skin.

"It's not an easy life you know..." Nairda murmured, wrapping his body around his lover. "We'll be outsiders, slandered, treated like dirt...its not an easy life on the streets..."

"Oh, shut up," Emilena rolled her eyes. "Just watch me." She glanced at the plumage of blackened smoke forming a mushroom on top of Lanthae. "We brought the last city to its knees, and it was the crime capital of the nation. The next town won't know what hit it..."

Soren nodded.

"Where would everyone like to go?" he asked.

"Drop me off at the nearest maglev station. I'll hitch a ride to the nearest big city and then make my living there," Anne replied.

As Soren drove along the highway, he looked around the area. The farms and factories around him still had the dirty industrial look to them but they were nowhere near as bad as Lanthae.

All there was along ths lonely road and bathed in the icy white of LED streetlights and light emanating from the many farms and factories in one of the busiest farming corridors of the nation was a single stolen Fisker Karma and its occupants, heading off to who knows where.

Oddly enough, the blue 1948 Delahaye 175 (http://www.ritholtz.com/blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/03/dela-9.jpg) didn't seem out of place as it whizzed down the highway of one of Corona's busier circuits. Its rakish lines and exotic look seemed to match quite well with the surrounding digital cars that surrounded it and elegant skyscrapers that rose like monoliths around the vehicles.

The only thing that was off about it was the fact it was gliding on tires and not hovering over the ground. Its engine produced a throaty hum that was louder than the modern cars, but it made the ferret sitting behind the wheel relish the drive all the more. There was nothing like a drive on a beautiful day with the top down in a vintage car to make you truly appreciate life. The wind whipped the ferret's fur, blowing it back a bit as Tony Stracci cranked up the speed. He was still mostly obeying the speed laws, but going slightly faster than the limit. While the Delahaye may not have had the horsepower of some of his father's more powerful cars, it certainly looked exotic enough that it was turning more than a few heads as it drove on its way.

Tapping his paw on the steering wheel a tad, Tony thought about what he could do today. There were basically two choices. Well three, really, but he was already mostly doing the third. That third option was drive around aimlessly. But it was one of the other two that most appealed to him. He wanted to swing by Axel's place to see how the rat was getting on. It had been a bit since he'd last stopped in, mostly due to family business coming first, but he had a free day, and he wanted to use it. He was in the area, so he took the exit, and started heading in the proper direction.

On a high-speed train currently making its way to Corona, Vergil Speicher was sitting back in a comfortable chair studying some articles and tapping a pen on his chin thoughtfully. The white gecko had a look of deep concentration on his face. Articles on Rex Sardolemuel and Kalis were spread out all around him. The seating was vis-a-vis, but only the seat next to him was currently occupied by all his papers. The war, the two generals, their going rogue... it was all documented rather well. He was trying to find mention of himself in there, or some clue, but unfortunately, common soldiers were rarely named.

He'd found out some more, at least. Rex had been the brother of Mace Sardolemuel, the founder and current CEO of the Zaloga Corporation, one of the four main weapons' manufacturers in Corona. While Mace had the business brains, Rex was the military talent. He'd enlisted young, and had quickly proven himself as a military genius, if a bit unconventional. Then there was Kalis, Rex's gargoyle gecko second-in-command. But what was missing was the personal story. Why had these two decided to suddenly go rogue and attempt to conquer the planet? They were outcasts before, sure, but why take so extreme a measure?

Vergil sighed, and closed his eyes, settling back into his seat. He needed to talk with survivors... people who had known these two. If he could just learn more... he might be able to find out who he was as well, and if he'd indeed served them during their war of conquest. He would get to the bottom of this story if he could. Flashes from his past kept coming back to him, but nothing too solid. One memory was standing out however. It was of Rex and Kalis investigating some ancient ruins somewhere, and he was positive he was with them then. But what was it? What did it mean?

"Hey! Easy with the soldering iron!"

Soren used his free hand to wipe some sweat from his brow. The apartment he was working in was home to a dour looking Chow-Chow. The dog in question was wearing a basic t-shirt and track pants and leaning back on a battered easy chair. The apartment was simple, much like the cyberneticist's own apartment, which he shared with Rose, Marita, Anne and Marie.

There was however, an incongrous item: a very elegant looking ó and expensive ó Ming dynasty vase. A dramatic contrast to the plain and downright cheap apartment.

"Sorry, it's just that many of the components in your arm are severely damaged. What the fuck were you doing? I've already dug out two bullets!" Soren carefully unscrewed the mangled laser module from the arm and placed it aside.

The Chow-Chow growled at Soren. "That's none of your concern!"

Soren nodded and continued removing more debris from the arm.

three streets across from where Soren was working stood the apartments where Rose was living with Him, Anne, Marie and Marita. Rose was coming home from her latest practice, a role named Cherie, based in 1930s new Orleans. She was now approaching three weeks being sober from biproxytol, which had been a very painful-and expensive- undertaking, if not for Marita and Marie she wouldnt have made it. Marie.. Rose smiled. the two of them had been co-workers at a rinky joint called the Black Sheep, Marie had been a waitress there, Rose had been a stripper and dancer. but the place had blown up and burned down during the last adventure which had swept up her, Marie and her old girlfriend Marita in a devious and diabolical attempt by a group called the Purifiers to wipe out all Augments in the city of Lanthae, and topple its government. the attempts had failed thanks to a aerial bombardment by someone called "Lord Kalis" which had reduced the city to rubble, killed millions, and nearly wiped the Purifiers out of existence. The three girls were among those lucky to escape and made their way here. Marita, who was a computers genius and master hacker had found a place for the three of them, and they had offered Anne and soren a place to live, and which helped lower the rent burden the three of them were carrying. Marie now worked at a casino, dealing cards, which made her quite a bit of money. The girls had made Rose go through detox upon settling in, as she was starting to go through withdrawal. after weeks and months of painful therapy, Rose was now sober. Her singing and dancing were greatly improving and drawing notice from the theater director and critics. She was hopeful about the future for the first time in a long time, since she had first met Marita several years ago. the recent crisis had forged strong bonds between the three of them, and Rose liked having someone around who was a match for her in bed. Marita was submissive in bed, a reverse from her outgoing personality, and Marie was the opposite, introspective in public but a take no prisoners sort in her chambers. Rose and her had made love for the first time shortly after her detox was complete, Rose got the sense Marie had wanted to have her for a long time, but never got around to asking management if she could have a fling with her, out of fear perhaps that they or Rose would turn her down.

Rose reached the floor where she lived and knocked on the door, which was opened by Marita. Rose and Marita were both Great Danes, Marie was a Golden Setter.'"How did rehearsal go?" Marita asked after greeting her with a kiss, her red lips locking with Rose's red lips. ' fine. we're about halfway through the play.. and the director says my singing is making great strides" Rose said proudly. 'That's excellent. Maries still at the Flipped Card, she'll probably get home sometime around 7. Soren said hes got a client in the neighborhood and I don't know where Anne is..." Marita said. "Good thing about Computers is, you can work from home.. "

she smirked. hopefully soon, we'll get a better apartment, once one of my current jobs is finished.. the payout for this job is 1 million credits Rose, enough to get us a better place.' Marita smirked. 'Does it involve your "special gifts" Rose asked ' Of course it does, especially in this town, with the Four Titans paying out big credits to undermine each other' Marita said as she brought Rose a cup of hot cocoa. "At least this place is better than Lanthae' Rose sighed, taking the cup "Rose, honey, Berlin in 1945 was better than that dump. We're out of there, you're sober now for the first time in what, 12 years? We're back together and Marie makes a nice trinity. Once my current tasks are finished we'll have about 5.7 million credits in the till, enough to buy a very nice place and settle into a upper class lifestyle.' That's a ton of credits" Rose said as she set her stuff down.' yeah, but in order to truly hit the big time, we'll need 100 million. Marie has the Megastakes card tournament coming up. she gets picked to deal the last table, she gets a massive bonus. and if you sell out your show you'll get more money coming in too. we won't have to ask Soren or Anne for any rent.' So they'll just be freeloaders' Rose smirked.' Nah, they're friends we're doing them a solid. we might have enough to buy Soren a place for himself to restart his business, and Anne a place of her own too.'Marita said.

Axel swivelled in his office chair, spinning in a circle as the voice on the other end of his cell phone moaned on. A mess of various computer parts were strewn around the room, and on the desk in front of him was stacked a pile of papers – order forms for yet more parts. The voice paused to take a breath and Axel rubbed his nose, jumping in while he had the chance. "Mr Kramar, that's… yeah, that's a virus." The rat shook his head. "No… no, that's where you went wrong. Downloads that say they'll give you five million credits… I mean, why would you even believe that?" He blinked and put his feet on the floor to stop himself spinning. "No, not even if they say they'll make, ah… that bigger. Alright… look, just bring it in tomorrow, I'll take care of it. Yeah. Okay, see you then."

Hanging up, Axel tossed his cell phone onto the desk and sighed. Business had been slow lately. When he and Lily had moved into the small, single story house, Axel had set up his own computer repair business to try and provide for them. The neighborhood they lived in was nice enough, sure, and inexpensive… and at least it was outside of the slums that bordered the city of Corona. But it wasn't good enough. Axel wanted the best for Lily, and the way things had been going lately, it looked like being able to relocate to the more upmarket region of the city would take longer than he'd hoped. There was a clunk. He looked across the room, and saw the air conditioning unit had broken down. Again. Awesome… With a heatwave settling over the city, that was just what he needed. Sighing again, Axel got up and left his ëoffice', making his way down the short hallway that lead to the small kitchen. The windows had been cranked open wide in an attempt to get a breeze blowing through. He opened up the fridge, twisting open a bottle of water. "Lily, air-con's broken again," Axel called out. He took a swig. "Jesus, this heat is killing me…"

Rio panted as he sprinted across the rooftop. His black hair, greasy with sweat, was plastered across his angular face, and perspiration covered his tan skin. The boy gritted his teeth as the edge of the rooftop approached. Picking up speed, he leaped over, his small body sailing through the air… and landed on the roof opposite, rolling into the landing to absorb the impact. The colourful Captain Super Man backpack slung over his shoulder, bulky and heavy from what was packed inside, made running hard. But Rio had no choice. If they caught up to him…

"Little fucker jumped!" someone shouted behind him. Rio glanced back over his shoulder. Two large, roughly dressed men were standing on the edge of the rooftop he'd just jumped from. One looked down, saw the distance he'd fall if he messed up the jump, and paled. The other pulled out a cell phone. "He's heading right for you!" the man yelled into it. Sucking in breath, Rio scrambled to his feet and kept running, vaulting nimbly over the ventilation units that were dotted around, making his way for the door that lead down. He was a few steps from it when the door slammed open, and a large bull burst through. Trainers skidding slightly, Rio quickly changed direction. The roof opposite was too high for him to reach – but he jumped anyway, and connected heavily against the wall, fingers scrabbling for purchase against the window ledge he'd aimed for. Groaning, he tightened his grip and quickly shimmied to the side, hopping over and grasping the metal drainpipe that ran down the side of the building. It shook for a moment, but seemed to hold. Rio wrapped his legs tightly around it and slid down. One floor from the ground, the drainpipe had broken off. Looking around, the boy looked for a something that could offer a soft landing, and saw a tramp sleeping in the alley just beneath him. Holding his breath, he let go and fell down, landing solidly on the man who awoke with a pained shriek. "You… piece of shit…" the tramp coughed, rolling onto his side and clutching his stomach where Rio had landed.

Flipping the man off over his shoulder, Rio darted through the trash, and emerged from the alley onto the main street. In this neighbourhood, the difference between the two wasn't obvious. Looking around quickly, he couldn't see anyone on him yet. Lowering his head, he started sprinting again. If he could just get escape this part of town, maybe he had a chance of hiding out…

Lily returned to the kitchen from the bathroom, where she had laundered a fresh set of towels. "Oh no...I'll see what I can do," she offered, smiling as she always did when she saw her husband. Technically, they couldn't legally wed because she was listed as "missing presumed dead" by the Lanthae police records, plus she has evidence that she was once married to a lawyer in Cornova and never divorced, but all things considered they lived like it regardless.

She soaked one of the newly washed towels in the sink. "Here, try this." She wrapped the damp towel around Axel's neck. She was often fixing up household appliances and keeping the rooms clean while Axel worked in his den. This didn't bother her in the slightest; after the harrowing week where she first met Axel and endured incredible amounts of trauma, the thought of living a normal life in a middle class suburb was the closest thing she could imagine to paradise.

After applying the towel she started giving Axel a short backrub, guessing that his shoulders were still wound-up from hunching over the computer the last few hours. "Hey, maybe today, we can cheat a little and eat ice cream for dinner," she whispered with a tinge of humor. "I just restocked yesterday. Strawberry."

Tony was now winding his way through the quieter suburbs of Corona. While Corona was a sprawling metropolis, it was also a plethora of neighborhoods. From towering skyscrapers to seedier districts to relatively pleasant areas like this, there was a bit of something for everyone. Driving down the streets of suburbia, Tony had no need for memory recall here, since he knew the way to Axel's by heart at this point.

Taking a right onto the street Axel and Lily resided on, Tony subconsciously counted the houses as they passed by, and finally slowed the Delahaye to a stop in front of the small home that had become rather familiar to him over the past few months. The ferret killed the engine, and stepped out. While he did lock the door, he saw no need to put the car's top up; it was a nice enough neighborhood that he wasn't worried about someone jumping into the driver's seat and attempting to hijack it.

There was a bounce in his steps as he bounded up the stairs, stopping in front of the door and giving out a few knocks that would be audible enough to those within.

As the train whizzed over a large lake on its track, Vergil frowned thoughtfully. "Hmmm..." he elicited the noise pensively, staring down at the papers strewn all about him. Where to go from here? He'd read all he could from these internet searches and articles, so where to next? Closing his eyes again, the gecko concentrated as hard as he could on the memory of Rex and Kalis in front of the ruins.

Yes... there it was... ancient stone structures that rose up around him like teeth, abandoned for thousands of years. But what about the voices? What were they like? What were they saying? Come on Vergil... focus...

"But this map is incomplete, Rex! It's worthless without the other components! We're still no closer to finding Torment's Cataract than we were when we started!" Kalis was saying, but his voice was far more normal, as he wasn't wearing that facial mask Vergil was used to seeing him in from the reports he'd read. Vergil could see Kalis was a gargoyle gecko, and a rather fierce looking one at that. He appeared very frustrated.

Rex, the fiery red gecko warlord stepped forward now, golden eyes narrowing. "Patience, Kalis. We ARE closer to finding Torment's Cataract. This map has shown us part of what we need. We find the others... we find the Cataract. It'll take time... but it will be worth it in the end."

Opening his eyes, Vergil took what he'd heard and decided to see if he could find anything further. Reaching over to his datapad, he quickly searched for "Torment's Cataract" but nothing came up in the search. Big surprise. Another dead end. Still... the details of those ruins... the way they were aligned and shaped... there could be something there. Perhaps it was time to make a trip to Corona's Archives to see what he could dig up.

"Attention please: we will be arriving at Corona in 15 minutes. All passengers debarking in Corona, please have your personal effects ready for departure. Once again..."

Vergil sighed, and began packing up his papers and belongings. Right... time to see what more he could find out.

across town at the Flipped Card, Marie was in the middle of dealing a hand. across from her were a human, a ferret and a green gecko, all wearing expensive clothes and jewelry . three cards lay in front of her: a 7 of diamonds, a queen of spades and a queen of clubs. bets are 40 thousand'; she said in a clear voice. the human looked at his cards then tossed in 40 thousand. the gecko raised to 60 thousand, and the ferret matched his bet. the human looked at his cards again then at his stack, he was the short stack ' all in'he said pushing in 110,000 chips, there was now 390000 chips in the pot, this soon rose to 610000 as the human and gecko threw in 110000. turn over your card Mr Silur' Marie said ' Silur flipped his cards over and smirked he had a queen and a 7, a full house. the human named Marcus flipped over his hand, he had two 7s giving him a full house as the gecko named Genki flipped over his cards he had a pair of kings. Mr Silur has a full house queens full of 7s, Mr Marcus has a full house 7s full of queens Mr Genki has two pair. Marie flipped over the next card- called the turn- an ace of hearts, which was meaningless ' you need a king to knock me out Silur said to Genki, who took a swig from a martini. the last card was called the river and Marie turned over- the king of hearts, as Genki burst into a huge grin. ' time to hit the bar' Silur said getting up from his seat as marie pushed all the chips towards Genki who was about 100000 chips from winning, which he did on the next hand. ' well that a good million for me' Genki said as he flipped a 100k chip to Marie ' nice work mam' he said feeling good about himself. ' thank you Mr Genki, business doing well i take it ' she said as she took the chip' good enough. allows me the freedom to play some cards ' Genki said as he took his drink and coat and headed off to collect his winnings. the floor manager came up to her ' i want to congratulate you Marie. he said giving her a note . ' You just earned herself a table at the Megastakes' the manager whose name was Mona said with a smile.' he added as a big grin grew over Maries face' you've earned it. you're one of the best dealers i've ever seen and I've been doing this gig now for nearly 20 years. I cant believe that you've only been doing this for 2 months. , go home and party with your girlfriends ' Marie hugged him then blushed 'sorry, i'm just really excited ' its alright just get your things c and go home. see you in a couple days' Mona said as marie headed towards the employee check out.

"Mmn." Axel leaned forwards, enjoying the backrub. After all this time, seeing Lily happy was still the best feeling in the world for him. It felt as though all the hardships they'd endured six months ago were just a bad dream. "Strawberry, huh? My favourite..."

Turning around, he lifted Lily up and sat her on the table then grinned and put on his best 'suave' voice - that was to say, not very suave at all. "Well, if we're having that for dinner, I know what I want for desert," he said, pressing forwards and starting to kiss her neck, his hands roaming down her body... then there was a knock at the door.

Axel groaned. "If that's a jehovah's witness, I'm gonna kill him," he said, pushing himself off from the table and keeping hold of her hand for a second longer as he made his way across to the hallway. "Just... keep thinking sexy thoughts! Sexy!" Axel called back as he made his way over to the door, smoothing out the front of his T-shirt. Opening it, his face broke into a smile when he recognised his friend. "Tony! How's it going?" Over the shoulder, he saw the vehicle the ferret had turned up in. "Ah, jeez, couldn't you have picked something fancier? This is a classy place, you know," he joked. "Oh, er... hang on." Axel turned his head slightly. "Honey, Tony's here! Abort the thoughts!"

Looking back at Tony, Axel stepped aside, holding the door open. "Come in. Want a beer? We've still got a few from last time, I think."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on April 29, 2014, 09:32:01 PM

Tony grinned as his friend opened the door. "Hey, Axel! Oh yeah... you like the wheels?" he asked, turning to show off the ride a bit more. "One of my father's Delahayes. Certainly love it, and he's got several all made by different coach builders." He nodded as Axel offered him a beer and to come inside.

Removing his flat cap and holding it down in front of him, the ferret stepped into the home he'd gotten used to over the past few months during his visits. "Beer sounds good! Things have been... well you know... about the same, I guess. I'm getting more responsibility, but still pretty luckless in my love life." he chuckled, shrugging. "My relationships still don't last very long. How are things going, anyway? I've got the day off, so I figured I'd swing by and see how you were doing. Was thinking of heading into the city center a bit later, but wanted to cool my heels a bit first." he explained.

Vergil gazed upwards at the ornate mosaic on the ceiling of the Corona Archives Building. It was a burnt orange and brown sun that was casting its rays into splashes of green gardens and blue streams. It was certainly one of the most beautiful works of art Vergil had ever seen.

Looking down, the gecko moved across the busy tile floor to the front desk, which was more like the middle desk, as it stood smack dab in the middle of the floor. "Um... ahem!" He cleared his throat, and one of the receptionists looked down to see his head just coming over the top of the desk. "Hi. Um... do you have a section on ancient ruins, and also, something called the Torment's Cataract?" he inquired in his deeper voice.

The receptionist pulled back and tapped away on her computer. "Nothing on the Cataract you mentioned, but the ancient ruins section is on the 15th floor." she informed him, adjusting her glasses slightly.

Smiling, the gecko nodded. "Thanks." Stepping away from the desk, he headed for the elevators, and a short time later asked the librarian who headed the 15th floor for advice on ruins that were black in coloration and resembled teeth. After being directed to several potential subjects, Vergil was sitting at a table and eagerly paging through one of the books. He soon found what he was looking for: the ruins of Narcosti. It was an older civilization that had been unearthed a few years ago. Frowning thoughtfully, the gecko flipped the page, and continued reading.

"Hi Tony!" Lily called brightly from the kitchen. "So nice to see you again!"

She quickly grabbed and popped the caps off two beers, along with glasses of ice in case either wanted their beer that way, but politely waited in the kitchen for them to arrive. She knew that men tended to like some time to talk before being interrupted by womenfolk. Besides, this would give her a chance to look at that air conditioner; it was significantly hotter than acceptable when hosting respectable company.

marie made it home right around 7:30 she was feeling very proud of herself and she entered the apartment with a spring in her step ' Helloo Girls!" she said going up to marita and kissing her. Marita held the kiss for a few seconds then pulled away, her tongue sliding out of Maries mouth ' so how was your day' Rose said as marie came up to greet her.'' Great! i earned a table at Megastakes!; Marie said and she kissed Rose tenderly ' great! so you're getting some good money? Marita said ' Good money? Marie said. ' i'm making more money than at any point in my life! we won;t be staying in our current apartment for much longer, once the month is up we'll move to a better place.' " those cost more than our current rent though...ROse said. ' we can talk this out with Soren and Anne when they get back' Marita said.

Axel shut the door behind him then led the way back down the hallway. "Hey, don't worry. I know that some day, you'll find the one girl who's as dangerously obsessed about cars as you are." He glanced over his shoulder at Tony and grinned to show he was just teasing. "And yeah, it's... it's the same old for us. I mean... I was thinking that maybe at the end of the year we'd be able to move out, maybe get a bigger place but... the way the business is going..." He shook his head. "Well, whatever. It'll turn out okay."

Reaching the kitchen, he saw that Lily had already opened up two bottles. "Aw, thanks hon," he smiled. Handing Tony his bottle, Axel poured half of his own into the glass and offered it to Lily. "Come on, join us. We can fix the air-con together later," he said, knowing glumly that with his negligible skills in fixing things around the house, he'd probably make things worse. It's the thought that counts though, right?

Taking a seat at the table, Axel took a gulp of beer. "Hey, I was thinking. It's been a while since I heard from Soren and the others. We should all get together sometime, like a, a big dinner or something." He looked at Tony. "Kind of like when we ate at your place that one time... except with, ah, you know... Less butlers. Has Soren not found his own place yet?"

Rio leaned against the wall, gasping for breath. The heat was sapping his energy, and he'd been running for about fifteen minutes now. Looking around to try and get his bearings, he could see that he'd left the dense, packed slums behind him and had emerged into one of the slightler nicer areas. Having grown up in the poorer regions, the sight of individual houses, backyards, cars parked on driveways... it always seemed uncomfortably alien to him.

Pushing himself on, Rio tried to consider his options. He wasn't a pushover, he knew that... but he knew he was still just a kid, and there was only so much he could do. There was no way he could go back to the slums now, Slate had men everywhere there. Sleeping out on the streets was always a choice, but out here, even in the slightly more upmarket areas, he knew the cops had a zero tolerance attitude to vagrancy. And if he got caught and taken in, and they saw what he had in his bag... questions were probably going to be asked. Rio swallowed. And that was another point. What was he going to do with it all? He supposed he could always...

There was a screeching of tires behind him. Rio turned, and his heart skipped a beat. Barreling down the road towards him was a dusty black SUV. Just behind the tinted windows, he could see arms gesturing wildly - gesturing at him. Godammit! Breaking into a run again, Rio cut across the road and ran up the driveway of the single story house facing him. Dashing around the side of the property, he found himself in the backyard where a family was having dinner. Rio jumped up on the table and used it to launch himself over the back fence, ignoring the crash of plates and the family's cries of outrage as their pudding splattered on the floor. Rolling on the other side, he jogged up to reach the road opposite, looking up and down the street. There were enough properties and branching roads that he should be able to lose them easily enough. He hoped.

Setting off, his pace slowed when he came across a large, expensive blue car parked in front of one of the smaller houses that he'd seen so far. It was a convertible - and the roof was down. The boy grinned, and vaulted himself into the driver's seat. The grin faded when he saw the keys weren't left in the ignition. Rio quickly checked under the seat, in the glove compartment. Nothing. He punched the steering wheel in frustration, then looked up sharply at the sound of a rumbling engine, growing closer. Sweat dripping from him now, he pulled himself out and looked around desperately. His legs were exhausted, and he didn't think he had much much left in him. Then he noticed that the windows of the small house he was in front of were open. As quietly as he could, he made his way along the side of the house. From one of the windows, he could hear voices. Moving past it, Rio stopped at one of the windows further back, and jumped up, silently pulling himself through and landing stealthily in what turned out to be a bedroom. From outside, the noise of the engine droned on, incessantly. They were still looking. Crouching down, Rio took off his backpack and waited.

"A white gecko? Yes, he just went up to the 15th floor. Ancient Ruins section."

The green coloured spider gecko nodded quickly, almost dismissively at the receptionist. "Thank you." She started to head towards the elevator.

"Are you helping him look for... for Torment's Cataract? I'm sorry, I tried looking for it in the system, but nothing was there. Maybe you'll have more luck."

Triste Acyle's mouth set firmly. She didn't acknowledge that the receptionist had continued talking, and kept heading to the lift. Damn it... at least I found him in time... She hammered the button for the 15th floor, and clenched her fist as the lift shot up, her short, slender body tensed. I've located him. About to make contact.

Good. Hurry. We need him as soon as possible

Triste narrowed her eyes. Affirmative. The elevator made a ding noise, and the doors slid open. Stepping out, her thin legs carried her along the corridor, to the section marked 'Ancient Ruins'. Turning off, she walked the isles, looking up and down... then stopped dead. There you are... Vergil. The gecko was bent over a table, his back to her, pouring over a large book.

Triste gritted her teeth, then rearranged her features into something resembling a sympathetic expression. "Vergil?" she whispered, her voice disbelieving. She took a step towards him. "Is... is it really you?"

He got up and helped himself to a cup of tea from the fridge. "Anyways, how was your day?"

Tony grinned as he took the beer and swigged gratefully. "Hey Lily! Good to see you!" He offered her a big wave as he drank. Now that beer was refreshing! "Yeah well... I can only dream, right?" he asked in response to Axel's comment about finding a girl who'd be into vintage cars. Speaking of the Delahaye, he was totally unaware that there was some kid currently in the driver's seat looking for the keys he had in his pocket.

Tony sat down at the same table Axel was at. "Your AC's busted?" he asked, swiveling to look at it with a raised brow. "Maybe I could get it running again... I work on my dad's cars after all." the ferret offered thoughtfully. "And hey, yeah! That sounds like a great idea! We should all have dinner! What are you doing tonight? I could make arrangements... uh nothing too fancy, of course!" he quickly added, knowing they couldn't afford some of the nicer places he dined at.

"And yeah..." The ferret nodded here, looking down at the table. "He uh... yeah he's still looking... but he's not doing too badly for himself though, relatively speaking." He wasn't aware that the little intruder outside was now in the house, and Tony casually leaned back in the chair, tilting it onto two legs as he took another swig.

A distance behind Agent Acyle, riding the next elevator up to the 15th floor, several nonchalantly clad individuals stood waiting patiently for the elevator to complete its journey. "We have her." a black and white tapir said into a small headset. "She's going up to the 15th floor."

"Right... remember, we need her alive. She's useless to us dead." The voice replying on the other end was only audible to the tapir, who nodded once.

"I know, I know. What about the white gecko?" he asked.

"Who?" came the response.

"She's following some white gecko. He important?"

A moment's hesitation and then "No. He's incidental. Kill him if he intervenes, but make sure you take her in one piece."

"Got it." the tapir murmured, and shifted his attention back to the numbers as they continued counting up.

Vergil looked up as he heard a female voice addressing him. Yes... him. His name! She had said "Vergil" and had even asked if it was really him. His big orange eyes moved upward until they were resting upon the spider gecko. He displayed no emotion except passive surprise, his wide eyes blinking as suddenly, he was hit by the memory again.

Yes... the memory of watching Rex battle that other reptile on the bridge of his flagship... it was her... standing before him right now... in the flesh. Gasping, he slowly stood up, fixing his gaze on her as if he were looking at a ghost hovering before him. "You..." he breathed. "You were... you were there..." he said slowly, fingers resting on the table top. "You... do you know who I am?" he asked softly. "I remember you... you fought Rex Sardolemuel onboard his ship... I witnessed it... I can't... I can't fully remember what happened but... it IS you!" he insisted. "What's going on? Who am I? Who are you? Do you... do you know?" His words rattled out like a machine gun, rapid and quickfire. He then blinked again, and shook his head. "Sorry I... I didn't mean to be rude it's just... you're the first person I've seen that I can CLEARLY remember! My mind's been all... hazy and... I have no idea who I am or what I was doing until before six months ago." he explained, holding his head a bit.

"You wanna have a look, go ahead," chuckled Lily. She acquiescently poured herself a small glass of beer, but someone who knew her well enough might be able to detect a slight tightness to her smile once the topic of a reunion was brought up. She's not a superstitious woman, but she suspected that a meeting with the old crew had a high chance of drawing undue danger or adventure on them, and she had quite enough of that from before. Plus they had never seen her as a regular human being, only as the psychotic grey-skinned creature that had hijacked and mutatsd her body beyonfld her control. This made her slightly embarrassed to consider seeing them again.

Rio sat back and leaned against the wall, listening to the rumble of the SUV as it roamed around. Then he cocked his head as it grew quieter. They were going away! He knew he couldn't assume they'd given up, but... at least he was safe for now.

Breathing a sigh of relief he closed his eyes, the exhaustion of running for most of the day catching up with him. The muted sounds of the voices coming from further in the house were almost comforting. Rio knew he should move, or at least find a place to hide, but his limbs suddenly felt as though they were made of lead. His head slowly leaning forwards, he drifted asleep.

Axel nodded when he heard how Soren was doing. "Well, that's good. I'm glad. He deserves it." Looking across at Lily, he noted the slight look of apprehension on her face. Reaching out a hand, he touched the top of her fingers and gave a small smile. "We might be busy tonight, but next time we're free we'll definitely let you know. It'll be good to see everyone again." He knew the idea made her slightly uncomfortable, but he thought that maybe if she saw everyone again, as her normal self, it might stop her from feeling ashamed of what happened to her before, as if it were her fault. Deciding to drop the idea of a reunion for the moment, he turned his attention back to Tony.

“Yeah… I mean, if you want to give it a go, we’d really appreciate it. Thing keeps dying on us no matter how many times we try to fix it.” Draining the last of his bottle, Axel stood up. “I’ll go get the toolbox. Thanks Tony.” He started to head out into the hall, and called back over his shoulder, “Hey, if you ever want help fixing a car I’ll, ah... try and give it a go, I guess.” He started to head for the storage cupboard, then remembered they’d left it in the bedroom after repairing a broken drawer that had fallen on Axel’s foot. Turning, he made his way down the end of the hallway to the bedroom and opened the door. The bed was arranged lengthways in front of him as he stepped in. To his right, adjacent to the headboard, was the set of drawers with the toolbox placed on top. Axel made his way over then stopped, sensing another presence in the room. He turned, and his eyes widened when he saw the small shape leaning against the wall beneath the open window, facing the foot of the bed. The figure didn’t move, and appeared to be out cold. What the hell… “Ah… guys? There’s someone in the bedroom…”

Making his way further in, Axel approached the figure cautiously. It still didn’t stir. Is that a kid?! Standing over him, he noticed a colourful backpack lying just next to him. He bent to pick it up, and was surprised by how heavy it was. Narrowing his eyes, Axel turned and placed in on the bed behind him, then crouched down and slowly reached out a hand to the sleeping kid. “Hey, are… are you okay?”

Rio’s eyes flew open, and he jerked his head up in shock as he took in the lanky rat crouching over him. “Fuck off!” he yelled, kicking his foot out by reflex and landing Axel a mighty blow in the crotch. All the strength left the rat and, with an Oof, he collapsed back, cupping the afflicted area and groaning.

Rio jumped to his feet and looked down for his backpack, the colour leaving his face when he saw it was gone. What the fuck?! Where is it?! In his panicked state, he didn’t notice that it was on the bed right in front of him.

“No, don’t… don’t worry about it,” Triste said, stepping closer. “I’d heard you were back in Corona, Vergil, but actually seeing you again, in person, it’s… it’s a shock for me too.” Her yellow eyes looked him up and down. “You really don’t remember? Anything? Our squad? The attack on Rex Sardolemuel’s ship? When Kalis fired on us, we all… I thought you were dead…” Triste said softly, reaching out and touching his shoulder as if to confirm he was really there. “My name’s Triste Acyle. We’re members of the Ivitz Federation. I don’t know what’s happened to you since the assault on Sardolemuel but…” She swallowed. “Maybe we shouldn’t talk about this here. Vergil… come with me. I know where you can get answers.” I’ve got him. His memories… they’re shattered.

A pause. Bring him in. Quickly.

From somewhere behind, there was another quiet electronic beep as the second lift arrived.

"Yeah! I'll give ya a call sometime! We like to fix 'em on good days with lots of sun!" Tony called back to Axel. "Cause we'll usually take 'em out for a spin after the work's done." Closing his eyes, he continued leaning back in the seat. It wasn't so unusual that Lily would turn down an offer to dine together as a group. Far as he knew, they still didn't have much contact with the others, and Tony typically saw them separately when he visited.

But then, an unfamiliar voice yelled out for Axel to "fuck off" shortly after Axel said someone was in the bedroom, and the ferret's eyes shot open. "What the hell?" he asked, springing forward as he launched himself out of the seat. Tony no longer traveled unarmed, but the small laser pistol he carried for self-defense was currently concealed up his sleeve along a drawer slider. Racing to where he thought he heard the voice, he skidded to a stop as he saw Axel doubled over. "Axel!" he exclaimed, going wide-eyed as he assessed the situation and saw the kid.

"What the hell... who are you?" he demanded, not moving from the entrance of the bedroom for the moment.

Triste Acyle worked to reassure him, and keep him calm. In spite of himself, Vergil did indeed feel himself relaxing as she approached him. There was something very pleasing about her voice to him... she was trying to make him feel at ease, and it was certainly working. He seemed to freeze as she reached out to touch his shoulder as he glanced down at her hand. So... he was part of her squad... amongst a friend, in that case. Yes, that made sense! He was former military, after all!

He couldn't quite place his finger on it, but something about her put him at ease, and made him feel safe. Realizing he was just staring at her hand, he blinked and shook his head, looking back up at her now. "Er, yes! Of course!" he quickly stated, nodding. "I'll go if it means I can find out who I am! For sure!"

The elevator doors opened behind them now, but Vergil could see who was getting out. It was five people: three humans, a tapir, and a serious looking tayra. Well, they all looked pretty serious in fact. The tayra hung back and moved around one of the bookcases while the other four approached Triste from behind, the tapir leading the way.

"Ms. Acyle! There you are!" the tapir spoke up now, smirking a bit as he came to a stop behind her. "New orders. You're to come with us at once as you're needed urgently on another project. So if you don't mind..." The three humans stood in a semi-circle around her with hands clasped in front of them. The tapir had a small but powerful taser concealed in his right hand, which he kept hidden by making a fist around it.

Vergil tried to catch her gaze to let her know something was off about this, and that while he couldn't read minds, this group was definitely not being sincere.

Soren got out some crab dip from the fridge and soy/algae crackers from the pantry. "Snack?" He offered the tray around.

He then turned to Marita. "Good call. To be frank, I'm not exactly comfortable in this area. A lot of my clients are people of...shall we say, questionable repute. And let's not forget those goons dressed in full battle gear we sometimes see outside."

The Human stole a glance at his rifle, ballistic vest and combat helmet in the corner of the cramped kitchen/living room. He never had to use it, thankfully. But he was glad it was there when some corporate thugs rampaged through the housing complex a few weeks ago, looking for some poor Augment who fell behind on payments for their upgrade.

"As for Anne, I haven't see her since this morning."

Soren looked at the picture of Axel and him enjoying a pint at The Electric Sheep back on Axel's birthday a year ago. "You know, I wonder what happened to Axel and Tony?"

Anne looked around as she darted into an alleyway. Even in the business district, there were a few alleyways that were less than pristine. An antique 2012 Lamborghini RevËnton thundered past her. She scowled as the scent of the exhaust trailed behind. The vehicle definitely belonged to some rich stuffed suit; no one else could afford a burner like that.

The mare scowled. Her contact was supposed to be here. And sure enough, a messenger drone flitted down from one of the many elevated walkways crisscrossing the area. Despite that, sunlight was in no short supply as mirrors were carefully positioned so light reached all levels of the Business District.

The drone hovered and a voice with a soft Hong Kong accent came out of the speaker. "Here you are."

Anne swiped her cred chit on the drone's reader. It was a quarter of her day's wages at the warehouse she worked with. It was only a part-time job and she would have preferred working in one of the oil farms at the city borders. Unfortunately, her drug test came back positive. The drone beeped and a finger sized packet came out of the drone's cargo hatch.

She pocketed the package and looked around to make sure there weren't any cops around. Unlike Lanthae, bribing a Corona police officer was more than likely to result in an immediate arrest. Not to mention, they didn't take too kindly to public drug use or purchases.

(OOC - "burner" – slang for a combustion powered vehicle)
(OOC - If y'all are wondering, that drone belongs to the Bak Long Triads.)

Rio looked quickly between the ferret and the woman who'd just rushed in. He finally noticed the backpack lying on the bed, and considered making a dash for it, but it was too close to them, and besides... where would he go? He swallowed. It was worth a try. His eyes grew wide and innocent. "Please, I'm... I'm so scared... I need help!" Rio turned his doe eyes to the downed rat, his voice trembling as if he was going to cry. "I, I didn't mean to hurt you. I'm so, so sorry! You just scared me! Please, I'm just a little boy..."

With Lily's help, Axel stood up slowly. His legs shook, then buckled, and he sat down on the bed with a groan. "What's... in bag?"

"Huh?"

Reaching next to him, Axel picked up the backpack and shook it weakly. "What's... Ooohh...

What's in this?"

Rio's face reddened. "Oh, nothing! Just, er, just toys and stuff!" Suddenly, the bag's zipper gave... and from it poured bundles and bundles of credits, raining on the bed and floor. Axel watched blankly as they tumbled out, and when at last the final one fell he turned his gaze up to the kid.

Rio's posture slumped. "Oh, fuck me." He sighed. "Alright. I'll cut the bullshit. But I do need some help." He licked his lips. "Could I maybe get a glass of water, or something? I'm really fucking thirsty."

Triste looked over her shoulder when she heard her name being called, and when she saw the large group gathered behind her, Triste turned around. "Another project. Really." Three humans, a tapir, and a tayra. The Ivitz didn't send them to find me, did they?

No. Not on our records.

The spider gecko narrowed her eyes at them. She couldn't just discount them - they knew her name. "I'm not going anywhere with you," she said lowly. "Get out of here." Knowing the chances of that happening were fairly low, Triste shifted her posture slightly, defensively.

Tony blinked, and looked down at the whopping amount of credits sprawled out on the bed. "What the... hell?" he asked, noting it was a good amount, and much more than anyone would ever normally carry. "All right... where'd you get all this?" he asked suspiciously, picking one up and studying it to see if it was a forgery or genuine. "Furthermore, what's a guy with this many creds need to break into other people's homes for anyway? This stinks worse than a beached fish at low tide."

He had to admit though... his father had grown up kind of similar to this, and he wasn't completely without sympathy for the kid. "As for the glass of water, I don't see the harm in that, but this isn't my house, so it's not my call." he ultimately stated.

"I thought you might say that." the tapir said more menacingly this time, and smiled wickedly as his hand whipped upward and produced the taser in one swift motion. It only culminated in the actual firing of the small dart which lanced out the end of the device and headed right for the spider gecko with a slight crackle...

Vergil had seen this coming about a half a second before it occurred, and was already springing into action, but he had the table between himself and the group, so right as the taser fired he was leaping across said table, bounding over it and reaching down for his energy blade at his side right as the human on the far right started to turn towards him in a delayed reaction...

Lily had already rushed back to the kitchen and brought Rio a glass of water, having used the one she'd already set aside for Tony's beer. "Here you go," she smiled softly. "We won't harm you, it's all right."

She turned to the others. "Why does it matter where he got the credits? Look at his clothes, he's clearly a street urchin. I think we should replace his bag and help him on his way. We could buy him a train ticket and he could start a new life in a nearby town. Chancellorsville perhaps." As a former fugitive herself, Lily had a soft spot for others who were on the lam with nobody to turn to, and was incredibly quick to forgive even the most suspicious of appearances. After all, if Axel had not given her the benefit of the doubt when they first met, she would have died in an alleyway on her first day in Lanthae.

There are some very powerful people in this city, and I don't like to think about the things they could do to him if they caught him. Might sound strange, given my own family, but I just want to make sure he's not gonna get into greater trouble after leaving here... or indeed, bring trouble here for that matter." Tony explained. "What do you mean you lost the creds!?" Ruozheng "Rory" Zhao thundered, pointing a steely finger at the two unlucky underlings in front of him. The scent of incense hung faintly in the air, hinting at the meeting place's "official" purpose as a meeting place for a Chinese fraternal organization. Behind him was a small shrine to the gods of the Earth.

"It was not our fault, Sir," the Chinese Water Dragon said, his tail twitching nervously. "We were wrapping up a deal."

"Not your fault!? Why the fuck weren't you watching the bag?" The Triad enforcer then rubbed his temples with his mechanical hands. He slowly took a deep breath to calm down. "There's a bug inside the bag. I'll go send some 49ers after it."

He then turned to the duo. "You two, on the other hand. Get out of my office! And find some way to redeem yourselves before I have you fed to the catfish and crabs!"

The two 49ers scurried out of the office.

Rory pressed the intercom on his desk. "Yuan, Lin and Zhu to my office!"

Less than three minutes later, a Giant Panda and two Humans entered the office. All of them wore very sharp business attire. Both the Humans were Augments despite looking like Baselines, equipped with artificially enhanced senses as well as reinforced bones and artificial muscles far stronger than natural ones. However, one of them was bald.

"Your orders?" the Giant Panda asked.

"Find the creds those two fan tung lost."

"Yes, Dai Lo."

(OOC - Fan tung [transliteration is probably off] is a Cantonese word literally meaning "rice bucket" but is slang for "idiot" or "dumbass".)

Rio took the glass, gulping down the water quickly with a satisfied gasp. "Thanks. Alright, yeah, the money might not be mine exactly." He looked at Tony. "And I wasn't breaking in here in steal anything. I swear. I was hiding."

Axel looked down at the credits uneasily. "Answer his question," he told the kid. The pain from the kick was starting to fade into a sick pain in his stomach, but at least he felt like he could breath now. "Who's money is this?"

Rio looked down at his worn trainers. "It might...kind of be, ah... the Chinese Mafia's money," he said shiftily. He looked up at the three of them. "Look, I know this sounds bad, but... I got payed to run ingredients over to the Triads. You know, for drugs, that kind of stuff. Yesterday, I was making another delivery to their warehouse, and when I was in there I saw this huge fucking stash of credits. I knew it wouldn't be there long, so this morning I broke in and just... stole it, kinda." Rio gritted his teeth, his hands fiddling with the glass uncomfortably. "Look, have you guys seen what it's like in the slums here? And I mean the slums, the real shit pits. Living there... it's the worst fucking thing I can think of and until I saw that money, I didn't think there was any way I could get out of it."

The boy slouched back against the wall, and now the emotion in his voice was real. "I didn't want to live like that anymore, man. Fuck that. So yeah. I took it. I thought it could be my way out." He glanced between the three adults. "I don't think they can find me out here, and I just need some time to figure out what I'm gonna do with all this shit. And I can't stay on the streets or, or go to a hotel or something. I mean, a kid with all this?" Rio waved a hand despondently at the credits. "Sure. People aren't going to notice that. Please, just... look, if you let me stay here just for a bit, I'll split some of the cash with you. Just for a while. If I go out there like this, I'm as good as dead."

Axel bit his lip. This sounded like trouble... serious trouble. But if the kid was telling the truth, and they just kicked him out... Godammit. Sighing, he looked up at Lily, unsure.

Triste saw the tapir's fist rising, and without thinking she lurched to the side, the dart missing her neck by millimeters. In a smooth motion, she seized the tapir's arm and pulled him forwards, pistoning her right leg forwards. Her foot connected with his knee, and with a wet pop his leg seemed to snap in half.

Stepping back to let him fall to the floor, she flicked her hand and suddenly a small, curved knife appeared in her hand. Triste twisted the knife around so it was held in a reverse grip and started to advance on the others, catching Vergil leaping over the table in the corner of her eye.

"Well, we certainly don't want any of the money!" exclaimed Lily. "If you stay, it'll be for free." And temporary, she wanted to add, but that would seem harsh. Truth be told, she didn't quite understand the degree of danger this lad had put himself in; her fugitive story cast significantly less blame on herself than Rio's, but she could understand the desire to escape the street life, especially as a child.

She glanced at Tony, seeing as how he knew more of this stuff than she did. "What if...we drove the bag of money out into the countryside and left it somewhere? Or just bought this young man a ticket to another country? It doesn't sound he should stay around here..."

Tony closed his eyes at the mention of the Chinese mobs. "Christ..." he breathed. "Not... the best and safest way to get rich quick, kid." the ferret commented, shaking his head. "You're putting yourself in real danger... and I'm not talking the kind you see in movies. This is the real deal. I should know, since my father's a pretty famous don. Staying here's not gonna work. A lot of times, these mobs tag their creds so they can trace 'em. That way it's easier to regather the funds if they've been laundered... or stolen. You gotta ditch that money, kid. Now." Tony emphasized. "I understand you want out of that life but... stealing mob funds isn't the way."

He nodded at Lily. "Yeah... or we could return it. Either way's fine with me. We dump it somewhere to be found, or we give it back. Either way, the last thing to do is have him keep moving with it in his possession. They'll track him down. I don't mind spotting him cash for a ticket, but he travels with that money at his own risk, is all I'm saying." the mustelid cautioned.

"Axel... we gotta get rid of that money... or let him go off with it, but he's dead if he does that. I'm not sure how much time we have, but we can't sit here discussing this." Tony explained with dead seriousness.

The tapir screamed in agony as his leg was broken cleanly by Agent Acyle. "Gagggggh! You fuckin' bitch!" he wailed, going down to the floor. "Get her!" he shouted in agony, holding his leg as he fumbled around for the taser, which he'd released after the searing pain had shot through his leg.

Beginning to draw their guns, the human in the middle looked at the human to his right with some confusion. "We can't kill her!" he reiterated.

"Crippling her she'll still be in one piece!" the other guy retorted as he took aim with a pistol for Triste's legs.

The guy that Vergil was heading for just barely drew his pistol before losing his hand when the gecko's energy blade was ignited, the beam slicing the arm off below the elbow. He screamed in pain and shock as he toppled backwards, clutching the stump where his lower right arm had been.

"Shit!" The guy in the middle pivoted and fired on Vergil, the white gecko managing to dodge to the side just in time as a particularly thick tome on ancient ruins behind him took the full impact of the bullet that had been intended for him.

Unseen behind the next bookcase, the tayra poked his head out and saw the unfolding battle. "Dammit... we've got problems." he muttered into his headset.

"Second team is standing by down below... we'll move on your signal." was the response.

"Might need that now... but hold off on blowing the place." the tayra replied. "I want to try and minimize casualties if possible for the moment." He slid back out of sight behind the books, pulled out a pistol and yanked the slide back as he steadied himself. Not yet... as team leader, he couldn't expose himself just yet...

"Give it back?!" Rio spluttered. "No fucking way. No. I can't see them again. Even if I do, it's not like they're just gonna forget about it. And what would I do in another country?"

"There's no way you're staying here with it," Axel said.

"Alright then, I'll just... I'll do what that guy said! Hide it in the countryside somewhere, maybe I can find a way to use it..."

"He just said it's probably tagged," the rat interrupted him. "If you use it, or keep it anywhere near you, they'll find you. Don't you get that?" He ran an exasperated hand through his hair. "Jesus... what the hell were you thinking?"

Rio's mouth opened, then closed again. He swallowed, his fingers working at the glass as the reality of the situation he'd gotten himself into dawned on him. He'd thought maybe he could try to make a new start, somehow... but in the end he was going to be in the same position as always. Or in an even worse one - now it wasn't even safe for him to return to the slums. He had nothing.

Axel sighed and rested his head in a hand. "Shit... Alright, we'll drive it out to the countryside and dump it. The further we put between us and it, the better." He looked at Rio. "Did anybody see you come here?" The boy shook his head no. Axel nodded and leaned over, roughly shoving the credit bundles back into the bag. Making sure he hadn't missed any, he stood up and slung it over one shoulder, the strap set at a size far too small for him. "You can stay here for tonight. In the morning, we'll figure out what to do with you." Axel looked over at Lily, his ears drooping slightly. We can't just kick him out onto the street.

Triste sprinted for the human on the right as he took aim. Using her smaller size to her advantage, she drew within reach, slapped his gun upwards then hooked the curved edge of the blade around the inside of his thigh. Drawing it back towards her, the blade sliced through the human's muscle and femoral artery. As he fell to his knees in front of her, Triste slashed the knife sideways to open his throat. At the sound of a sudden gunshot, her head jerked sideways and her eyes widened as she saw the man firing at Vergil. No!

Pushing the dying human out of the way, Triste leaped up onto the man's back, wrapped a spindly arm around his neck and jabbed her fist forwards, the blade sinking between his vertebrae. She twisted the knife and there was a crunch as his spinal column separated.

Tony nodded at the rat's outline. "All right... I guess I'm the one who has to drive it. I'm not sure I'm gonna go entirely out into the countryside, since that's a bit far. I might just dump it as soon as I can, or... see if the triads' contact info is anywhere conveniently stashed in my phone. I'm wary about driving it all the way out of the city, since it's going to look like I'm fleeing with it." he explained.

He picked up the bag, giving it a woeful look. "Um... you mind if I take the beer with me? I'm gonna need some fortification before I get out on the road." Tony gave Axel a hopeful look. Drinking and driving was of course totally illegal, but the ferret wasn't planning on being overt about it, and one beer wouldn't bring him over the limit.

Pulling his phone out, he began searching through his contacts, seeing if his father had given him the info of any of the triads in Corona in case of emergencies.

Vergil paused as Triste rather effectively killed the two humans in the middle of the room. That just left the partially armless human, who was going into shock, and the tapir, who'd managed to finally fumble around enough to locate the taser. Vergil gave the fellow one look and just as he was raising to fire into Triste's back, the tapir was suddenly thrown backwards against the bookcase and let out a surprised gasp as he crumpled, unconscious amidst a pile of books.

"Well... friends of yours?" Vergil asked as he straightened up and looked around before whipping his tail into the back of the head of the human he'd "disarmed" earlier in order to get him to cease his bellowing. "Or should I say, friends of 'ours', since apparently, I was in your squad at some point?" He extinguished his blade, and dropped it back onto the belt at his side, his feathers standing a bit more on end from the adrenaline rush he'd just been through.

Behind the bookcase, the tayra silently cursed. Dammit! So much for his team! Sliding the gun quietly back into the waist of his pants, he tried to act inconspicuous as he began making his way back to the elevator, but then stopped, and figured he'd listen in from his position. Besides, he was dealing with at least one telekinetic, maybe two. The gecko had held his own, much to the team's surprise. Their lack of preparation had cost them, and now they were down a squad. At least they had sizable backups waiting in the wings so to speak...

Lin, Yuan and Zhu walked around Corona's business district. All three of them carried Beretta 92 pistols inside their sport coats. While the weapons they carried were practically antiques compared to the energy weapons that were readily available on the civilian market, they had a distinct advantage. Thanks to their lack of a battery and electronics, most scanners would not detect them.

Of course, no one suspected the trio to to Triads. They looked just like any other businessman.

"That's odd," Yuan said, looking at his tablet. "The money went to the edge of town."

"We'll go there," Lin said as he flagged down a taxi.

The trio bundled into the taxi. "Where to?" the Human driver asked, a slight German accent tinting his voice.

"To Crown Gardens," Lin said.

The driver gave the trio a funny look. "Do you mean Crown Avenue? I can't seeó" Crown Gardens was a working class neighborhood outside Corona city limits. Crown Avenue was a posh upmarket neighborhood near the Financial District.

"Crown Gardens," Lin said, cutting the driver off.

"Whatever you say." The repulsorcar lifted off vertically as he merged into the skyway above and headed for Crown Gardens. Where Axel and Lily lived.

Soren was about to put another lentil chip into his mouth when he saw Anne perched atop the roof of the next door building. "Holy shit!" he exclaimed. "Maria! Rose! Look out the window! It's Anne!"

Anne breathed in the air as she stood atop the building. She peered behind her, enormous wings of pure golden light shimmered. She had done it, she had somehow become a Cerosala. And now she would prove her acension by flying.

Of course, none of this was real. The marijuana joint she had purchased and smoked had been of an unusual strain. Genes belonging to the ergot fungus had been inserted into the plant via genetic engineering techniques. As a result, smoking a full joint was like taking multiple hits of LSD. At the same time. Normally, this strain was supposed to be used in miniscule amounts to make "space cookies" and similar psychoactive foods.

(OOC - Cerosala are equinoid angels with a unicorn horn and wings of pure light. They feature in myths in the Into the Black 'verse)". The term is from Latin combining the words for horn and wing.)

"You can have anything you like!" exclaimed Lily. "Maybe some strawberry ice cream in case it gets too hot?"

She looked at Rio. "Of course he can stay the night with us. And then we'll give him what he needs to live for a while wherever he turns up." She said this last bit hesitantly, as she knew that Axel had been saving up in hopes of upgrading their current living situation, and that slush fund is obviously from where Rio's gift would be coming. Also, she suspected Rio would probably misuse most of the money and wind up in his original ways, not due to any fault of his own except youth and inexperience. But the alternative was letting him live with them longer than part time, and she couldn't ask that of Axel. While part of her had been wanting children for a while now, this neighborhood was hardly the healthiest place for a child to grow up, and she could never bring herself to ask Axel. She suspected he was too busy trying to keep their own lives afloat without having to care for yet another.

Axel smiled grimly. "Take it. Ice cream's off limits though." He was trying to make jokes, but inside his stomach was turning knots. "Be careful, alright?" he said, putting a hand on the ferret's shoulder. "And when it's done, give us a call so we know you're okay."

"Can I have a beer?" Rio piped up.

Turning, Axel frowned. "No."

A sulky look passed across the boy's face. "Fucking bullshit," he said quietly.

"Hey! Do you know what a risk this guy is taking? For you? You haven't even said thank you."

Rio looked at Tony holding the bag, his dark hair falling over his eyes. All he saw was someone taking off with the money he'd worked so hard to get, the money that could have spelt a new life for him. "Thank you," he said eventually. It didn't sound sincere.

Axel sighed. "Just... sit there and be quiet," he said, pointing to the corner of the bed. The rat turned back to Tony. "We owe you for this. Thanks Tony."

"You could say that. It was time I found some new friends, anyway," Triste said drily. She slid the knife from the man's back and wiped the blood from its surface on his shoulder. Sliding it back into the strap on her forearm, she looked down at the bodies around her. "Kalis' men, probably. They've been stepping up their attacks lately, and that makes me uncomfortable. Something big's coming, Vergil. And we're going to need your help."

She looked up at Vergil and tilted her head. "You still haven't lost it, I see." A smile played across her face. Gesturing, she started to walk back to the elevators. "Let's go. You won't find your answers if you're dead, Vergil." We were just attacked. Likely Kalis' men.

You can't allow any harm to come to the target. Hurry back.

Post by: Pterano on May 03, 2014, 08:18:49 PM

Tony nodded, and hefted the bag over his shoulder. "Friends can't be in debt to each other." he responded simply, and began heading for the kitchen, swiping the beer on the way out. "I'll be sure to call when I'm out of harm's way!" he shouted back into the house, and made his way quickly down the path to the Delahaye. Finally finding the number of "Rory" Zhao, he decided to try the Bak Long Triad first. They were by far the most prominent triad in Corona, after all.

Sliding behind the wheel, he started up the engine and got the expensive car rolling. Chugging the beer, he dialed Rory's number to find out what was up, and if he knew anything about the missing money. Of course... he'd need to tread cautiously. If it wasn't the Bak Long Triad's money, they might try and hunt him down anyway once they learned he was in possession of quite the amount of creds.

The tayra peered cautiously around the bookcase again, watching the two head for the elevators. He didn't make any sudden moves though.

Vergil nodded as he followed after Triste. "I still haven't lost it?" he smiled back. "Good to know I'm as good as I was... and Kalis? I knew it!" he snarled. "He made an appearance in Lanthae a half a year ago, and mostly leveled the place! I'm convinced he's part of my past and I was right! I've been meaning to try and seek him out for answers but... he doesn't exactly seem like the type of person you find... more like he finds you, and seems I'm not too far off. At least you and the others can provide me with answers." he confessed gratefully.

Something about how she said something big was coming unsettled him, and the gecko figured the faster they got to wherever she wanted to take him, the better. As the elevator doors closed and they began heading down, the tayra finally spoke into his headset. "They're on the way down! You'll have to work fast!"

"Copy. Police are already on their way. No point in wasting time." was the response from the second team's leader.

Inside the elevator, Vergil looked over at Triste. "So... how well did we know each other before the whole... thing on Rex's ship?" he inquired.

Lily was silent as Tony left the place. A few awkward moments passed.

"...so, uh, what did you say your name was?" asked Lily, coming up with the best icebreaker she could. "Do you want anything to...drink?"

"Something tells me that she went scavenging and blew her creds on something!" Soren grabbed the radio transmitter that Anne had scavenged from somewhere.

"Anne!" he said into the radio handset. "Back away from the edge! Step back from the edge!"

Soren's voice, distorted by radio static echoed in her head, courtesy of her antenna horn.

"Ehh, Soren? Did you ascend too?" she asked aloud and transmitted.

By this time, numerous spectators were crowded around the ground floor and staring at the spectacle.

Soren covered the handset with his hand. "I'll keep her talking. You three get to the next building and grab her."

"Anne," he said. "So tell me what you 'ascension' is like?"

"Oh it's wonderful! I can see for miles!"

Marita , Rose and marie ran out of the room, and headed down the stairs. it would probably take them a few minutes to get to the top of the building. hopefully Soren could keep Anne occupid long enough for them to grab her. marita rushed in and reached an elevator which took a couple minutes to open. the three of them entered, she punched the button that said' roof', and the elevator began to ascend.' wonder what drugs shes on to do something that.." Rose said.

The boy looked up at Lily as he sat on the corner of the bed, his lower lip threatening to protrude in a pout. "Rio," he said sulkily. "And I don't know why I can't have a beer..."

Axel grimaced. "Because you're... like, what, 10 years old? No way."

"I'm 13!"

"Whatever. You can have, ah... juice or something instead. This is Lily, by the way, and I'm Axel." Rio shrugged his shoulders. Gritting his teeth, Axel turned to Lily. "Can I speak to you for a second?" Leaving the bedroom, he walked with her to the kitchen and pulled open the fridge. "I'm, ah... I know I kind of said he could stay without asking you," he said as he took out a carton containing the last of the orange juice and poured it out into another glass. "I'm sorry. But, ah... you know... I'd feel pretty bad if we just kicked him out." Axel put the carton back and gave Lily a smile. "Tomorrow, I'll figure out what to do. It'll be okay."

Triste gave Vergil a sideways glance as the elevator traveled down. "Well, now I'm offended if you don't remember that." Her tail snaked out and lightly brushed up against his leg. "Let's just say we had our own... special training program. Maybe now that you're back, we can make sure we haven't gotten rusty."

Taking her tail away abruptly, she crossed her arms and faced forwards again. The numbers above the door continued to drop as they approached the ground floor.

"Axel," Lily smiled, "of course I want to help out Rio. I'd never turn away a guest, especially one in need."

She quickly prepared Rio's juice. "We can do what we can for him while he's here. This could be his first opportunity to try out a more normal life. We'll make it the best one we can."

Tony got no response the first time he called. OK, time to try the next one. After calling the Red Lotus Triad and informing them in very vague terms that he might have something of theirs in his possession but getting only a negative response to his prompts, Tony began to think that perhaps Rio had been screwing with them. Sighing, he drove the Delahaye down another residential street in the next neighborhood over. It would be a waste of to time to call every single triad out there, so he decided to do the next best thing he could think of.

The ferret slowed the Delahaye as his eyes scanned the street for what he was looking for. Finally pulling the car to a halt on a street he judged to be far enough away from Axel's neighborhood, the mustelid exited the car and proceeded to walk over to the nearest storm drain. Acting totally natural, Tony dumped the bag of credits down the opening and walked back to his car. Whistling to himself, he pulled the door open, slid behind the wheel, and started driving off, the bag now out of his possession.

Reaching for his phone, he dialed Axel.

Vergil's orange eyes grew rather wide as Triste's tail gently brushed along his leg with delicate force. Not usually one to think about such pursuits, the gecko had to admit he was feeling a bit of... longing right now. So, it had been like that, had it? They hadn't seen each other longer than ten minutes and she was already looking forward to seeing how in practice with his "special training" he was? He certainly wasn't going to protest that. Smirking, he nodded once. "Heh, very well. I'll see how well I hold up." he said with some measure of confidence.

As the elevator dropped, his hand suddenly lashed out and he hit 2 so the elevator would stop on the mezzanine level first. "They're waiting for us downstairs!" he warned. "I just hope there's a way out on the second floor." he murmured, the elevator stopping with a ding on the mezzanine now.

Upstairs, the tayra was frantically radioing down that the target might be getting off on 2. In the lobby, the second team decided to drop the pretense, and started whipping out high powered laser rifles from bags. Training them up above, screams erupted from patrons as they noticed the weapons. "Remember, take her alive!" shouted one of them.

"Pain in the ass!" a second yelled.

Vergil could see for the moment they were out of sight from the ground floor. "Windows to the right." He nodded in their direction. "You fast?" he asked.

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: bushwacked on May 04, 2014, 06:33:41 PM

Axel smiled and kissed Lily on the forehead. "Right. It doesn't look like he's had it easy. And, hey, maybe it'll even be fun having a kid around for a bit. You know, practice for if we ever decide to, ah... Well, you know... Later, I mean. Ah..." Axel's ears started turning pink. The phone rang suddenly. Axel started, then took it off the handset and answered it.

"Tony? Is everything okay? Is it done?" he asked anxiously as they started making their way back to the bedroom.

Triste peeked down through the glass to the lobby below. Those were some high grade weapons... and with all the civilians down there, things would be complicated. Shaking her head, she turned to Vergil as he mentioned the windows.

"I guess you're about to find out," she said lightly, preparing herself. Triste motioned to Vergil. "After you."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on May 04, 2014, 07:51:05 PM

Tony breathed a sigh of relief when he heard Axel pick up. OK, so far, so good. No problems with the triads... yet. "Yeah... as done as I could make it, at least. I dumped the backpack down a storm drain in the next neighborhood. Its weight should prevent it from being carried anywhere beyond the drain, and even if it's swept away... all the better. We'll have 'em chasing after that instead of poking around here." he quickly explained.

"Anyway, you got things covered over there? Need me to come back?" he asked, turning the Delahaye around and starting back in the general direction of Axel's neighborhood.

Nodding once, Vergil charged out onto the mezzanine, drawing the immediate attention of the team below. "There they are!" one shouted, and began blasting away at the white gecko while another behind him tried to shoot out the glass panels separating Vergil and Triste to cut her off. Vergil looked behind him, ducking as he did so to avoid his head being sliced off. Curious... they didn't seem to be too keen on using lethal force against Triste.

Turning his attention to the windows up ahead, Vergil focused and shattered the one directly in front of them, hoping there weren't any innocents down below, though he was pretty sure these windows opened up onto an alley. Already the sound of sirens could be heard wailing from outside, and he was at least thankful the Corona authorities were on the ball with this.

One of the members of the second team was racing up the stairs to the mezzanine to try and get behind Triste. Keeping low, Vergil skidded to a halt just beneath the window. "Better hurry!" he called back to her, checking to make sure they were still in good standing to escape.

Lily brought Rio his juice. "Here you go," she smiled.

She sat on the side of the bed. "Let's go make the couch in the guest room into a bed. You'll be close to the kitchen, feel free to eat whatever you like, and I'll show you where the restroom is."

She smiled. "And I bet I know something in the living room you'd like to try before going to sleep..."

(White Dragon Headquarters)

Rory had just came from a lunch banquet with several of his fellow red poles. The meal itself was quite something. White cut catfish with scallion and ginger, soy sauce poached sea bass and a dessert of tofu pudding in a ginger and sugar syrup.

As was tradition, he did not have his cell phone with him.

He passed by the shrine of Guan Yu as he took a seat at his desk. He looked at his cell phone and saw he had a voicemail. And it was from Tony Stracci.

"Fucking hell, it's that bak gwei again."

He opened the voicemail and read the message. Tony had found the creds. This was gonna be ugly if his three 49ers met him. And it could lead to a conflict between the White Dragon Triads and the Stracci Family. Which was not a good outcome.

The Human opened a channel to the trio. "Lin, Yuan, Zhu! If you encounter a Ferret holding the creds, find out his name before you beat his ass! If he's a Stracci, you ask for the creds back but do not harm him!"

(Crown Gardens)

Lin kept an eye out while the two Humans scanned around the Crown Gardens neighborhood. He was aware that he and his fellow 49ers stood out in their business attire but he wasn't too concerned. As a Giant Panda, he was blessed with immense strength. And of course, the business suits were carbon nanotubes, made to be bullet resistant and fireproof.

It wasn't too bad. Though there was a lot of graffiti on the concrete buildings, elevated walkways and elevated highways. A few hooligans riding either hoverbikes or wearing flying frames flitted around, either racing or painting graffiti. A few working class men drank beer and chatted on the front stoop of one of the houses.

"The cash is in the next neighborhood," Yuan said, looking up from his tablet. It's not moving.

"Move out then!" Lin barked.

The trio headed up an elevated walkway that was a direct route to the neighboring development. They passed by various working class people who sometimes stared at them but other than that, they were mostly ignored.

(Mott Place)

Soren's heart pounded in his chest. "So Anne, how was ascension?"

Her voice came through the radio. "It was amazing. Your spirit's just floating up, up and away. It's like all your earthly cares just vanish."

Please hurry, he thought. He wasn't sure how much longer he could keep Anne talking. Knowing what happened here, he was sure those onlookers were exhorting her to jump.

Rio took the juice, shifting a little uneasily as Lily sat near him. "Uh... thanks," he said as he reached beside him and plucked a pack of Smokey Bear cigarettes from the bed. Tapping one out in what seemed to be a well practiced move, he held it between his teeth and slid a cheap plastic lighter from his pocket.

"Yeah, we've got it covered here," Axel said brightly as he entered the room. "Thanks again, Tony. I guess we'll..." He trailed off when he saw Rio taking out a pack of familiar looking cigarettes. He'd promised Lily that he was going to give up smoking, but a few days ago temptation had been his downfall and Smokey Bears had always been his favourite. "Oh crap. I'll call you later, Tony." Axel hung up, and took a step further into the room. "Hey, what's, ah... what's this now..."

Rio lit the cigarette then paused. "Oh, fuck. Sorry, I'm being rude. Want one?" he asked through clenched teeth, putting away the lighter and holding the pack out to first Lily then Axel. "I guess they're yours. Found them in your underwear drawer."

Axel paled, and now it was his turn to shift uneasily. "What?! That's just, like, ah, not true, honey. I've never seen them..." He trailed off. "Wait, what were you doing in our underwear drawer?"

The boy shrugged and blew out a reasonable attempt at a smoke ring.

Axel walked up to him, plucked the cigarette from his mouth and snatched the pack away, putting it in his pocket and giving Lily a knowing glance. "For safe keeping..." He decided Rio could keep the orange juice.

"Hey! What the fuck!" Rio protested. "I can deal with no beer, but what the hell's wrong with a smoke?! It's like breathing fresh air, only better!," he said, quoting a poster he'd seen. Sighing, he looked down dejectedly at his glass. "...What's in the living room?" he asked Lily eventually.

Triste sprinted up behind Vergil, feeling an impact run along the floor next to her as someone fired a round at her feet. She caught up to Vergil and looked over the edge quickly. The window did lead into an alley... complete with an open dumpster full of trash. How clichÈ...

From behind, she could hear pounding feet as the second team charged up to meet them. The panicked screams of the civilians continued to echo about, a stark contrast to the utter silence that had met her when she'd first arrived at the archives. Triste looked at the gecko beside her. "No time like the present, Vergil," she muttered and pushed him out, aiming for the dumpster. With a last glance at the gunmen who'd finally managed to reach the mezzanine level, she leaped out after him.

Lily pursed her lips when she saw the cigarettes. "Axel...honestly..."

She ushered Rio towards the living room. "Nobody in this household smokes," she said firmly. "Especially young boys."

The living room was warmly lit but a bit sparse. Only a few couches, a threadbare rug, and a counter containing a television furnished its expanse. The last of these Lily regarded with a smile. "This is what boys your age like! Television!"

She flicked the set on and sat down with him on the couch. The current channel was showing a laser golf match. "If you've never tried one of these before, you'll fall in love!" She handed him the remote. "Use these buttons to change what you want to watch. There are all sorts of things on, just look around."

the girls reached the roof and headed out. knowing anne had great strengths, Marita had grabbed a syringe containing a drug anti-toxin, it was used to stop ODs and return users experiencing hallucinations to normal. which, judging from what Marita had overhead from Soren , Anne was now experiencing. Anne thought she could fly, it meant the drug she had taken was a powerful one to form such a powerful belief in the user.' Grab Her! marita said, and she grabbed anne around her waist and began to pull. Rose lent her assistance and Marie did as well.thanks to the element of surprise and their combined strength they had managed to bring Anne back from the edge and were now on the floor of the building roof . Marita could hear disappointed cries and some boos from below. the group down there had wanted her to jump. 'As Rose and Aarie held Anne down, she pulled out her phone and sent Soren a text message ' We got her Soren. Applying anti-hallucination drug now. if she gets nabbed by the cops shes going to spread many years in prison, the cops here are a far more ' law and order' bunch' than those in Lanthae. There you could get people off by greasing a few palms, here not so much. she needs to get into rehab, like Rose did.' Marita finished the text.

Tony hung up after Axel had to go. Grinning a bit to himself, the ferret realized that the rat practically had a kid to take care of now. He had to admit, it would certainly be good practice in case the couple decided to have kids. Well, that was one friend down. He knew Vergil was getting back to Corona today, but the mustelid decided to wait a bit before calling him. So that left Soren and the others... and maybe even Anne.

Reaching for his phone again as he took another swig of beer, Tony dialed Sroen as the Delahaye shot back onto the highway. At least that mess with the triad's money was behind him now.

The gecko didn't have any further time to react before he was pushed out the window by Triste. Crying out as he fell and suddenly found himself buried amidst the refuse, Vergil sputtered and tried to flounder his way to the top. Unfortunately, he wasn't fast enough, and was soon face to face with Triste's not insignificant chest. "Ooof!" He gasped as he tried to pull back amid the massive black bags. "Sorry!" he hastily apologized. "Quick! Get out!" he ordered as he grasped the top of the dumpster and hauled himself out, brushing his feathers rapidly as he did so.

As soon as Triste was out, Vergil telekinetically pushed the dumpster down the alley to the front of the building. It worked to draw the attention of the thug who appeared at the window. "This way!" Vergil called, waving as he ran in the opposite direction, to the street at the rear of the archives.

Behind them, Vergil could hear the dumpster collide with a parked car. He didn't wait around to hear if Kalis's men bought it or not. Rounding the building to the street, the gecko attempted to act as casual as he could under the circumstances. "Well I hope you have some form of transportation, because I'm afraid I'm fresh off the train." he explained. He had to admit, he was extremely eager to learn about his identity and his link to Rex and Kalis. "Where to from here?"

Soren's phone buzzed. He breathed a sigh of relief. He texted the girls back. Good. Now we gotta haul her into rehab and keep her away from the cops.

When he finished, he got a call from Tony. "Hey, Tony. It's nice to see you again but I really can't chat. Anne just tried jumping off the roof. She just got toasted on some really strong shit. Right now, we have to get her into rehab before she gets arrested and/or kills someone or herself."

Anne struggled against the trio who were pinning her to the ground. "Get off of me! What the fuck do you think you're doing!?" The hallucinations had worn off but she was now quite pissed off.

(Hauer Square)

Hauer Square was a working class neighborhood just like Crown Gardens. Except it was a bit closer to the vertical farms so there it was much less well lit. Despite the seemingly perpetual twilight in the area, children of all species and races played on the sidewalks and streets.

Zhu waved back and smiled as a group of Komodo Dragon hatchlings stopped their game of tag to wave to him.

At Yuan's direction, they turned down an alleyway. "Right, the creds are somewhere in here."

"I think I see them!" Lin piped up. Thanks to his Ursine low-light vision, he could see the bag of creds in the storm drain. Thankfully, it hadn't rained so the drain was dry.

Grunting, Zhu lifted the heavy steel grate as if it weighed nothing. While Yuan kept an eye out, Lin used a piece of rebar he bent into a hook to grab the filthy backpack.

Zhu put the steel grate back in place and retrieved a plastic bag from his pocket. Making sure no one could see them, the trio transferred the creds to the opaque plastic bag.

Tossing the filthy backpack into a dumpster, they exited the alley and headed back to their headquarters.

Marita jabbed anne in the leg with the anti-drug serum and injected it into her ' You were on some serious drugs. you were pretty spaced out' marita said as she finished injecting anne, and put the syringe away.' we're putting you in rehab, the cops here arent very sympathetic at all to druggies, you get busted doing something like that. they arent going to put you in treatment it'll be 20-25 years in jail' Marita said.' come on marie said as she started dragging Anne towards the door that led down to the building.

"I've seen TVs before," Rio rolled his eyes exaggeratedly. It was true... sort of. Back where he used to live, there was an old, beat-up electronics store. Through the dusty window there was a tiny, out of date television on display. Rio used to spend time pressed up against the glass, peering through at whatever grainy, black and white image was being projected. He'd never seen one up close though... or one in colour. He took the remote from Lily and flipped the channel. A cutesy cartoon came on, two squirrels holding hands and singing. Axel wandered into the room, and when he saw what Rio was watching he grinned and leaned against the door frame. "Farm Friends! I used to watch this all the time as a kid..."

Rio looked back at him and grimaced. "What is this shit?" He flipped the channel and the ending of Scarface appeared. A coked up Tony Montana was waving a huge gun around, blowing holes in other gangsters. Rio grinned at the sudden cacophony of gunfire and death. "Whoa..."

Onscreen, Tony Montana invited his enemies to say hello to his little friend. Rio looked from Axel to Lily, delight on his face. "This is fucking awesome!"

Triste nodded as they crossed the street, pushing their way through the crowd that had gathered outside the archives, drawn to the sounds of chaos from within. "One of the Ivitz headquarters. It's not far, we'll be there soon." In the distance, she could hear sirens approaching. Picking up the pace, Triste turned the corner. Parked on the side of the road was a sleek, black motorcycle. Mounting up, she looked over her shoulder and waited for Vergil to climb on. "Come on, move it!"

Once he was on, Triste gunned the engine and they sped away, the sounds of sirens and shouting fading. Weaving her way through the traffic, she could see the top of the top of the Ivitz building they were heading for. I've retrieved the target. Bringing him in now. He was investigating the Cataract.

Excellent.

20 minutes later, Triste pulled the bike up outside the headquarters and cut the engine. The stone-white, severe looking building reared up over them. Grass grew around the walkways leading to the entrance, closely cropped trees planted along the paths. Nothing about the building was inviting - even the greenery seemed sterile. We're here.

Bring him in. I'll have someone meet you in the lobby.

Triste climbed off the bike and turned to look at Vergil as she started to make her way up the walkway. "Come on. Everything you need to know is inside."

Lily smiled. "Thought you'd like it."

Though crime dramas weren't really her thing, she sat with Rio and watched the end of the movie silently. She was just glad that everyone seemed to have cooled down somewhat.

A while later, she roused from a groggy half-sleep to see the channels flipping quickly. A western, a Shakespeare play, an antiques auction, a documentary on the 2008 Pelvanida invasion, a tear-stricken lawyer sniveling about a missing kid, a car insurance commercial...

She sat up suddenly. "Wait. Go back. Go back to that!"

Impatiently she wrestled the remote away from Rio before he'd even had adequate time to process her request. Flipping back rapidly, she tuned back to the lawyer.

"It's just...so hard to handle..." the puffy-eyed man, who appeared to be on a late night talk show, sniffed and wiped his eyes. "First my wife disappears, and now my oldest son...I don't know if my heart can handle this again."

"This is a hard time for you," agreed the talk show host. "What can you tell viewers about Ejlert, so that they might be able to help locate him?"

The lawyer shook his head. "There was no reason for him to leave, we all loved him and he had many friends. He was the lead quarterback at Carriage Hills High, and top of his class in mathematics, his passion. I can only assume the worst...the best thing viewers could do is send money to help fund the search parties. We had a very successful fundraising when we tried to find Lily, and if anyone could find the heart to...donate again...I'd be so grateful."

"I'm sure there are viewers who will help you out." the talk show host ruffled some paper as a number appeared on the screen. "Call Denny North and the 'Search for Ejlert' campaign if you know anything or wish to provide support, and show some compassion for a tragedy-stricken family. Up next, warships have appeared on the horizon, and what that means for your weekend--"

Lily turned the television off. She tried to speak several times but couldn't. "Axel.....I...Axel, did you see that?" she stuttered.

Tony felt his heart sink at the mention of Anne having almost jumped off a roof and needing rehab. "Damn..." he said softly. "Shit... is... is she gonna be OK? What clinic are you sending her to?" he asked, drumming his claws on the steering wheel as he pushed the pedal down a bit more heavily here. He suddenly had the inclination to go and see how she was doing; it was his day off, after all. "Oh yeah and I was just calling to see how things were... I think Vergil gets back in town today, and I wanted to discuss well... Kalis, and what he means for the future of Ivitz." Tony outlined.

Vergil had to admit, the ride on the motorcycle was kind of thrilling. He'd never been on one before... or perhaps he had, but he certainly couldn't remember it. Looking up at the rather foreboding building, he kind of doubted Triste at first, but figured it had to be true. Entering the lobby, a stoat with wiry spectacles greeted the pair. "Agent Acyle... Agent Speicher... welcome to Section G. I'm Preston Fugate, special liaison for the special forces. Agent Speicher... it's good to see you back with us." he said seriously but sincerely too, despite his somewhat wooden posture. "This way, please." He motioned with a paw, and led them to an elevator in the rear of the lobby.

Swiping a card he had, the doors opened and Vergil regarded them with a smirk. "Thought I'd had enough of these for one day." he cracked to Triste. The elevator took them down several levels, deep into the heart of the underground beneath the building. Exiting into hallways that appeared as sterile as the greenery had been, the stoat led them down several passageways until they reached a door with heavy security out front. The guards however stood aside and didn't give the newcomers a second glance however as Fugate led them into a large conference room.

A round table dominated the chamber, and a giant screen with the Ivitz Federation's logo on it hung above them. Seated around the table were various species, some dressed in military attire, and some not. They regarded Vergil as if he were a curiosity, but then, curiosity melted away to smiles, though some seemed force while others were genuine.

"Sit down." Fugate instructed the two of them before taking a seat himself. "These gathered here are the upper echelon of Section G, Ivitz's special forces. They were, and hopefully still are your direct superiors, Agent Speicher. First though... I assume you have some questions."

"Do I ever..." Vergil began, looking around the room at the new faces. "So uh... first things first I guess... since uh... Agent Acyle seemed to know... who exactly am I... and what's my connection to Rex Sardolemuel?"

A pause here, and a dignified looking pangolin in a military uniform spoke up after a moment. "I can answer that. You're Vergil Speicher, Agent 127072. You were recruited by us five years ago in the aftermath of the Scorched Earth War. Before that, you had been a soldier in the Federation's service. Rather than me bore you with the details, we could permit you access to your personnel files..."

"Do I have any surviving family?" Vergil quickly broke in.

"No, I'm afraid not. You were orphaned at a young age, and under Federation welfare for some time. But getting back to what I was saying, we recruited you specifically to Agent Acyle's squad to act as a double agent when Rex Sardolemuel began acting... against Federation orders. You had served under him previously, and he trusted you quite a lot. You were reporting to Agent Acyle frequently on any developments that occurred with Sardolemuel. As he began turning more and more rogue and his power grew, your assignment became increasingly dangerous, until we decided to pull you out. No sense in having a corpse on our hands, after all. What you had discovered before that though... was of vital importance." The pangolin tapped a keypad in front of him, and the screen burst into life like the rising sun, bringing new light into the room.

"Sardolemuel and Kalis were starting to hunt for a place where the sea flows into a gaping hole... a place known as Torment's Cataract. We believe a city once stood there, but suffered some great calamity, and sank into the sea, leaving the Cataract behind in its place. The location is notoriously difficult to find, not only because it's one giant waterfall and sinkhole, but also because it sits in a region of massive electromagnetic interference, making locating it remotely impossible, as well as sending any aerial reconnaissance in to be a risky proposition at best. According to our research, the civilization that built their city at the Cataract also constructed a massive battleship, ten times greater than anything we've ever been able to develop."

Concept art appeared now on the screen, and Vergil whistled at the sheer size of the projections. The ship was estimated to be almost 4,000 square miles*, which would rival some small countries in size. "We know this vessel exists from ancient records we uncovered, but so too did Sardolemuel. However, it's believed to sit at the Cataract, and the location of the former city was carefully hidden by this civilization in a series of waypoints they set up across the globe. Sardolemuel had located about half of them before we pulled you out, but before he could finish his quest, we took him down." the pangolin continued. "He grew overconfident, and we were able to bring his fleet to battle before he could find the last waypoints. You and Agent Acyle were part of a team sent to infiltrate his ship and kill him personally. The mission was... mostly a success, as Kalis turned on Sardolemuel and fired on his ship with his own, getting a bit too greedy as it were. But in the destruction of Sardolemuel's flagship... we assumed you were lost. Agent Acyle reported she wasn't able to save you... and much to our relief, here you are."

Vergil glanced at Triste now, then back at the pangolin. "Why relief?" he asked.

"Hm... well you see, Vergil, you're an incredibly valuable asset to us. Outside of Kalis and his forces, you're the only one who witnessed the location of the waypoins, and even though you might not be able to remember them, we know they're there... buried within your memory. You're the only link we have to those waypoints, and your memory is coming back. Just now you were researching the location of one of them, after all. We think if you could unlock those memories... remember how to find these things, then you could help lead us to Torment's Cataract before Kalis."

Vergil chewed his bottom lip. "But I don't know..."

"But you have to try." the pangonlin reiterated. "It is there, Vergil... and if Kalis beats us to the Cataract... it'll spell devastation for not only Ivitz, but the entire world. If he gets his hands on that ship... we will fall... and if we fall... nothing stands between him and total domination of this planet, do you understand? You've seen Kalis at work... you know he doesn't care for life. His only goal is chaos and destruction. There is no alternative to this... we need your help in stopping him. He's had zero defectors since assuming control of Sardolemuel's forces, and has killed every agent we've sent to infiltrate his organization. You're the only one who has prior knowledge of the waypoints. Please... this is really our only hope." he pleaded.

Vergil looked up at the ship's projections again, and then down at the table, thinking carefully. "I have a few more questions but... first..." He looked over at Triste. "Agent Acyle... if we're going to be working together, I'm going to need people I can trust. I'm sorry but working with complete strangers isn't going to fly with me... at least... not right away. Since time is of the essence, I really can't sit on this one, and I know that. Would you have any objections if I brought in a talented group of individuals I've come to trust over the past six months? None of them represent a threat to Ivitz, and as they say, desperate times, right?" he asked, looking around the table. "I can vouch for these guys, and I want to work with them again... provided they say yes, of course. If not... I'll settle for your guys instead. Deal?" he asked, looking back at her now, as he needed to be able to trust her first and foremost on this.

*4,000 square miles or roughly the size of the country of Lebanon.

Sitting beside her on the couch, Axel saw. All that time ago, when they'd seen the man on the television claiming to be Lily's husband, pleading for her to come home, he'd believed it was a lie, a trick to lure her in. Or maybe it was more accurate to say, he'd willed himself into believing it. But now, with the news report they'd just seen, the truth hit him in the chest like a tonne of bricks. Lily did have a husband. She had kids. She had another life, and he'd dragged her away from it.

And now, to learn that one of her children was missing...

Rio, initially disgruntled by Lily snatching the remote away, soon understood that something was very, very wrong. "Uh... I'm gonna... go to the bathroom, I guess..." he said hesitantly, excusing himself from the situation. Axel kept staring at the blank TV set as the boy quietly left the room. When the sound of the bathroom door clicking shut carried over, he blinked as if being woken from a trance and looked at Lily.

"Lily, I'm... I'm so sorry, I..." He started to reach out to touch her, then stopped, suddenly unsure of what to do. Axel swallowed. "Do... do you want to call that number?"

Triste sat calmly as the pangolin explained the situation to Vergil, her hands folded on the table in front of her. As he listened intently, she kept her gaze on him, studying his reactions, his expressions. She was satisfied by what she saw. The voices echoing lightly around the room, bouncing back off the marble walls, lent the situation a vague dreamlike quality.

At Vergil's request after the pangolin had finished speaking, Triste's eyes narrowed ever so slightly. He'd met others, others that he was willing to trust with something as serious as this? Triste hadn't been expecting this... Her eyes flicked briefly over to where the pangolin stood on the other side of the room, and she picked up on his quick, curt nod.

The spider gecko turned her attention back to Vergil, and gave him a small smile. "Of course, Agent Speicher. If you deem them to be trustworthy, then I'm sure it won't be a problem." Her hands, still clasped on the table before her, tightened slightly. "But I would need to keep an eye on them. Given the severity of the situation, I'm sure you understand."

Lily took a deep breath. "No..." she said. "I need more information first..."

She started to get up, to head to the computer room, but before she could she found herself hugging Axel instead. "I knew about my old life..." she whispered, tears streaming from her eyes. "Of course I did, we saw it on the tele in the clothing store all that time ago...sometimes I wondered if I'd abandoned them...but I thought they must have lived and died in Lanthae...and it was so much easier to just live with you. I love you...I didn't want risk losing you by learning if..." she suddenly drew away from him, burying her face in her hands. "Oh god, I'm a horrible person!"

For several minutes all she could do was cry, as months of repressed guilt finally realized itself all at once.

Vergil nodded and gave her a reassuring look. "Of course. I understand you'd need to monitor them. Perfectly clear." he replied. "No problem with that at all."

"Good! So... any further questions?" Fugate asked.

"Just one... why did Sardolemuel turn traitor? What drove him to do such a thing? I mean... he was one of your best and brightest, yes?" Vergil asked.

"He was... he was a genius... the best we'd had. But he was also ambitious, and didn't like being tethered, so to speak. He desired full autonomy in his operations, and was frustrated with what he saw as government interference. As the war dragged on, he became determined to end it any way necessary, including extreme measures. He did just that, ignoring our orders and doing as he pleased to bring the war to its conclusion." Fugate explained. "Afterward, he was facing legal charges for insubordination, and against our advice, he and Kalis retired before any trial could be forthcoming, and vanished."

"For how long?" Vergil asked.

"A year. When he resurfaced, he declared himself an enemy of the Federation and managed to convince 90% of his old unit to rebel and join him. That's when we recruited you. He was extremely charismatic and very popular. It didn't take him long to start gathering support not just from the Federation's old enemies, but even amongst our own as well. It was a dark time. He promised change, but brought nothing but destruction and misery to thousands. He still maintained his support however, as he had this strange way of looking out for his own and ensuring his followers rarely suffered. By the time we'd finally killed him though, the devastation was rather extensive." Fugate said with a somber tone to his voice, bringing up pictures on the screen now of the aftermath of Sardolemuel's rebellion. Twisted heaps of metal where buildings had once stood greeted them, as did injured people with blood running down their bodies like rivers.

"Any clues as to why he did this, or what he discovered after he vanished?" Vergil inquired, averting his eyes for a moment from the screen.

"None... you weren't present with him for that, and the only other person who knows the answer to that is Kalis, who decided to join his mad rebellion without question. Remember, Vergil. These waypoints are vital... and the fate of millions is quite literally in your team's hands. It's best to remember Rex's story as a cautionary tale... you MUST keep your head about you during this. If Kalis finds Torment's Cataract first, it'll spell the end for millions. Don't ever lose sight of what that means." Fugate said, giving him a look that could've burned holes through him. "Rex Sardolemuel was a traitor... and it's vital that his legacy ends here... with you."

The gecko nodded, and glanced sideways furtively as he frowned. "While his story interests me, I just wish I knew more about it. Kalis is a monster who needs to be stopped... but I just thought that perhaps... maybe I could reach out to him somehow if I knew more about the past..."

"We'd prefer him dead." the pangolin cut in. "But with that said, we expect you to clearly assess the situation and use your best judgment. Your assignment, should you choose to accept it, will be to find the waypoints that lead to Torment's Cataract before Kalis does. It'll be a race against time, or perhaps I should say, you'll be racing the storm, but it's a race you must win. We'll give you full access to your personnel files so you can find out more about yourself. Unlock those memories and help us bring Kalis to justice! End Sardolemuel's legacy once and for all! Agent Acyle will be your main liaison with us as well as be in charge of handling logistics on this operation. Trust me when I say she has special talents uniquely suited to this assignment." He smiled in Triste's direction here.

"You'll have full access to our resources as well to help you accomplish your objective." Fugate offered. "Do you accept?"

Vergil nodded solemnly, looking up now without hesitation. "Of course. This has to be done... and I accept." Standing up, he looked around the room. "Thank you for the information. I believe I've got the location of the first waypoint, and that's something to start with."

"Indeed, it is. Good luck Agent Speicher on unlocking your memories and finding the Cataract. Remember... keep things in perspective." Fugate told him, and both he and Triste were shown out now.

"So... I guess I'll assemble the team... or at least see if they're willing to help. Now that that's behind us though..." Vergil looked up at her as they headed for the elevator. "First of all, thanks for backing me in there. I know you might not trust them but... they helped me out in Lanthae before Kalis's attack... and I trust them with my life. Second... uh... how... involved were we, with each other? I want to remember as much as I can... including... any past relationships." he gave her a sincere look. "If I hurt you with my assumed death... I can only apologize." he said regretfully.

Silently, Axel held Lily as she cried, an arm around her quaking shoulders. After several minutes, he leaned forwards and gently turned her face towards his, looking her in the eyes. "I love you too. And I know that the woman I love isn't a horrible person. She's the furthest thing in the world from that."

Giving her a small smile, he stroked her cheek with his thumb. "And right now, it sounds like your..." Axel swallowed. "Your son needs your help. So that means you have to be strong. For him. Okay?" He hugged her. "I'm here for you, Lily. You know that. Anything you need, anything I can do to help, I'll do it."

Triste didn't say anything as they walked to the elevator. As soon as the doors closed behind them and the lift started on its way back down, she turned to Vergil, shoved him up against the side and pressed her mouth against his, firmly, urgently. Her hands started on his shoulders, and then began to move along his chest, her long fingers exploring his body. Moments passed, and eventually she broke away from him, panting slightly. "Does that answer your question?" Smoothing down the front of her shirt, she stepped away and turned to face the elevator doors. "And you've got nothing to feel sorry for. I wasn't that hurt." She gave him a sideways glance and smiled. "But... I'm glad you're back, Vergil." Men are so easy...

Clearing her throat, Triste crossed her arms, her eyes narrowing inquisitively. "So... who are these people that you have so much faith in?"

Lily was silent for a time, just wrapping herself up in Axel's arms. "I've got to do something about it..." she murmured. "Maybe if he'd still had a mother, he wouldn't have disappeared..."

She got up. "Can you put Rio to sleep or occupy him or something? I was going to, but I now need to do some research on the computer. We're going to have to find a way to put him somewhere while we go on a little trip." She headed for Axel's computer room.

Vergil was practically smothered as Triste was all over him like butter on bread. She was clearly proving her part, and he struggled to reciprocate, kissing her just as deeply as he could, if making it a bit of a delayed reaction in the end. She was exploring his chest as well, rubbing her hand down his shirt and causing him to shiver a bit before in tingles she pulled back, the gecko gasping for breath as he hadn't been prepared for the kiss.

"Whew! Well... that uh... that answers that question!" Vergil responded energetically. "As for these people I have faith in... better to show than tell..." Digging out his phone, he first dialed Tony...

Tony noticed the incoming call from Vergil, and quickly broke off the conversation. "Oh, sorry! Getting Vergil's call now! I'll talk to you shortly!" Putting the call on hold, the ferret answered the gecko. "Hey Vergil! How'd your trip go! Find out anything new?" Tony asked.

"Tony... you driving from the sounds of it? Pull over... we need to talk..."

A few hours later, Vergil was sitting with Triste at a cafe in Corona's heart, but he'd managed to secure a private table usually reserved for VIPs that was well removed from the other patrons of the cafe. A TV was replaying the afternoon's events with some degree of urgency. It turned out that a firefight had developed between police and the terrorists, which both Vergil and Triste knew were part of Kalis's force. But they had been good... almost too good. They'd been on the verge of escaping when the authorities had blocked off the exits. It was then bombs were detonated under the floors of the archives, showing the level of planning and training these guys had. No trace of them was found after that, and 65 people were left dead or seriously injured. It was the first major terrorist attack in Corona's recent history, and was the biggest news event of the day. Already measures were being taken to prevent something like this from recurring...

Vergil had called everyone, and had told them the bare minimum of details, but had impressed upon them that it was extremely urgent, and that he needed their help to curb the coming disaster, explaining the security of the world was at stake. They were all familiar with Kalis by now, and this latest news item was a refresher, if anything. He'd asked them to meet him in the Cafe Verona, and so here he was, ready to introduce those who showed up to Triste and let her get a read on them for herself.

Marita, Rose and Marie entered the cafe as Broadstreet appeared on TV, making clear that the police were examining the video of the incident and were hunting down leads.. Rose noticed Vergil and led the girs over to him ' Hi Vergil, you sounded pretty urgent on the phone ' Marita said as she took a seat at the table. " so what is this all about?' she asked, as Rose and Marie took seats as well.

By this time, Lily had made the trip out to Carriage Hills, to the typical two-floor suburban house whose address was given on the 'Search for Ejlert' website. Gulping softly, she glanced at the warm-colored brass door-knocker and tried to work up the courage to knock it.

When Lily had emerged from the computer room, Axel was in the kitchen, using the phone to try and find someone who could look after Rio while they were gone, despite Rio's protests that he could stay and watch the house. Unfortunately, the only neighbors who answered were a family across the street who were recovering from an incident involving someone using their dinner table as a springboard. Vergil's phonecall had come just after Axel had hung up. It sounded serious, to put it lightly. With no other options, they'd decided that Axel would go to meet Vergil, while Rio accompanied Lily to the address she'd found, on the condition that he stayed quiet and didn't get in her way. He'd agreed.

"Come on, what are you waiting for?" Rio demanded now, as he stood beside Lily and waited for her to knock. He still didn't quite understand what was going on between her, the rat and the person who's house they were standing outside, but he knew nothing was going to get solved by standing around. "You haven't seen this guy for a long time, right? So he's probably gonna be really happy to see you!" Rio tried.

Axel stepped out of the taxi and made his way across the street to Cafe Verona. Spotting the gecko seated on the far side in the VIP section he crossed the cafe, suddenly feeling a little self conscious in his slightly rumpled T-Shirt and jeans amongst the more well-dressed clients. Raising a hand in a wave, he approached the table and gave the group a nervous smile. "Hey guys! It's, ah... it's been a while..." He nudged Marita's shoulder and nodded at the other two girls. "Good to see you three are still sticking together."

Axel took a seat next to Marita and turned to face the two geckos on the other side of the table. The one he didn't recognise, a light green spider gecko, stared at him unblinkingly, her yellow eyes seeming to evaluate him. The red stripe across her face gave the gecko the appearance of someone who didn't have a lot of fun in life. Axel blinked uncomfortably. "Ah... hello," he said eventually.

Triste nodded at him but didn't say anything for the moment.

"Alright then." Axel looked at Vergil and smiled. "Hey, I came as soon as I could. Lily couldn't be here right now, she's, ah... she has something to take care of for the moment. Hopefully she'll meet up with us later." He swallowed, his fingers tapping on the table nervously. "So, ah... this didn't exactly sound like good news..."

Tony pulled up a bit later, still in the Delahaye. Vergil had sounded serious... much more serious than he'd been in the months following Lanthae. Parking on the street outside the cafe, the ferret jogged across the street, making sure to check traffic in both directions before he threaded his way into the cafe, trying his best to move swiftly but not bowl anyone over either.

"Hey Vergil!" he waved, noting the trio was here, as was Axel. Soren was the only one missing so far. He hadn't had a chance to check in on Anne yet, but depending on what this news was, he might get to see her later tonight.

"Hi everyone... it's good to see you again." Vergil cracked a small smile, and looked around at the gathered group. "It's not good news I'm afraid. First off, this is Agent Triste Acyle, with the Ivitz Federation. She found me after my return here earlier today... and that attack you saw at the archives... that was us... more specifically... Kalis's men hunting us. She knows who I am... and about my past. I got answers today, and it turns out, we used to work together as part of an elite squad several years ago. But rather than go into my past... we instead need to talk about Kalis..." the white gecko said gravely here.

"You know the basic history about Rex Sardolemuel's rebellion, but it turns out, while Rex was launching his attacks against the Federation, he was looking for something else. I'll fill Soren in when he gets here, but time is kind of of the essence. I was a spy in Rex's fleet, reporting back to Ivitz on his search for a location called Torment's Cataract. This place has been lost to history... except the civilization that once had a city there created a series of waypoints to find it. They hid themselves well... perhaps rightly so, for they had constructed a warship so massive, just picture the entire sky being blotted out by this thing, OK? 4,000 square miles... making it a virtual small country in size. Its power would be beyond imagination, and needless to say, it could lead whoever possessed it to dominate this planet and everyone on it."

Tony stared wide-eyed at the description of the ship, and nervously ordered a scotch from a passing waiter that he managed to just barely flag down. Vergil waited for it to sink in, then continued. "So anyway, the civilization was wiped out before they could use it, and Rex died before he could find its location, but Kalis is still seeking it. In my mind is the location of about half of these waypoints, since I witnessed them being found. I can't remember everything, but I know where the first one is. I've decided to help the Federation stop Kalis before he finds Torment's Cataract first, but I can't do it alone. I need a team... and since I don't fully trust the Federation at present... who else could I turn to but you guys? You guys were pretty phenomenal in getting Lily her body back, and also helping to attack the Purifier base... twice. I'm gonna need backup... not just because I trust you guys, but because I need people who I know will have my back. This mission isn't about my past or who I am... it's about stopping Kalis from finding this ship. If he gets it... it won't matter what we're doing with our lives. It'll all end. Not just our lives and livelihood, but everyone else on this planet too. I'm sorry to have to ask... you all have lives now... families even... and I'd be taking you away from that. But I wouldn't ask if this wasn't serious, guys."

Vergil looked at each of them now. "Our lives mean nothing if Kalis beats us. None if it will matter. He'll wipe out the Federation, and with it, every person on this planet who doesn't openly submit to him. I understand if you want to say no... I won't blame you, nor hold it against you." Vergil stated sincerely, looking from one to the other. "You have lives... I get it, I understand. If you want out... I'll go with a team from the Federation instead... but I'd rather have people I know and trust with me as opposed to total strangers. You might say it's not your problem, and you're right... it's not. But once Kalis finds Torment's Cataract, it'll be everyone's problem. For the sake of all life... we gotta try, right?" he pleaded.

By now, Tony's drink had come, and he gulped, taking a silent sip as he waited for someone else to speak first to break the tension, which was so thick the ferret felt like a chainsaw would be needed to cut it.

i'll help you' Marita said, breaking the silence as a waiter brought the table some drinks.' i will as well Rose said a few seconds later "i've come too far now to let some warlord take over the world! this is my home, and i'm not going to let it be destroyed." well count me in too' marie said' just out of curiosity.. how long do we have to find all these relics? Are we talking days? weeks?"
- we have to find the locations first' Marita replied "given that this ship is 4000 miles in area, and given its power, it will have to be hidden somewhere big enough to contain it and remote enough to make it hard to find. there aren't that many locations on earth big enough to hide something that big. one of the 5 major oceans or the Sahara desert, come to mind." she turned to Triste' Hello, i'm Marita Jones, these are my girlfriends Rose and Marie. we';ll be happy to assist you in finding the locations you are after.this kalis guy well he sounds like a real nasty piece of work. we'll help in anyway we can."

Lily swallowed. "You're right...." Slowly, she grasped the brass knocker and rapped the door.

After a few tense minutes, she made to knock again when the sallow man from the television opened. "Yes? How can...?" He trailed off. "Lily???"

Lily fidgeted nervously. "Hi Denny..."

Denny was gaping like a fish. He stumbled backwards and almost slammed the door shut on her "How are you...how could you be...?"

"It's a long story..." Lily said shyly. "I lost my memory, so I didn't--and don't-- remember anything about you, our kids, or this house. I came because I heard about Ejlert."

Denny was still dumbfounded. "You're alive! Did you tell anyone? We could make headlines!"

"Don't tell anyone!" Lily interjected. "Please Denny. Its more complicated than you think. I came to help find Ejlert. May I come in?"

Denny blinked. "Of course, of course." He held the door open all the way, and Lily walked into her old house.

She marveled at the otherwise unremarkable simplicity of everything. How long had she lived here? How often must she have cleaned every item in this house, items that sparked no sense of familiarity whatsoever?

"Who's the, uh, the boy?" Asked Denny, who had not extended the open door to Rio.

"Rio is a friend of mine," Lily called from the kitchen.

Since Lily was gone, Denny coldly grabbed Rio by the collar and pulled him off his feet with a strength unintuitive from his thin frame. "You touch anything in this house and I will make you regret it..." he snarled, his face twisting into a ferocious grimace void of warmth or restraint. Dismissively he tossed the urchin back to the ground and followed his wife.

Axel swallowed as he leaned forwards, staring at his fingers as they flexed nervously against the table. Lost civilizations... a gigantic warship.... being intrusted with a mission like this... It was a lot to take in. He'd barely managed to get out of the last situation alive, and all he'd wanted to do was settle down with Lily and live a quiet life. But Axel had seen first hand what Kalis was capable of... and if Vergil was right, if Kalis was trying to find this warship, then there wouldn't be any life to settle down to.

He nodded slowly at what Marita and her girlfriends said, then looked across at Vergil. "So... no pressure then." He sighed. Given what was at stake... it wasn't like it was something he could refuse. "Alright then," Axel said eventually. "I, ah... I guess I'm in. I've got your back, Vergil." He paused. "But, ah, you know. Maybe try to keep it out of danger as much as you can?"

Her hands folded on the table in front of her, Triste looked between the lanky rat, the three women and the well-dressed ferret. Her expression remained blank for the time being. Turning her gaze to Tony, she waited to hear what he would say.

Rio landed with a thump as Denny dropped him to the floor, his knee crying out in pain as he landed awkwardly. A shocked expression was plastered on his face as the adult walked away. He'd met his fair share of violent adults, of course... but the change in Denny's personality had been so sudden that for the moment, Rio was speechless. And the expression on his face...

After a moment of lying on the floor where he'd been dropped, the boy got to his feet and started to make his way along the corridor down which Lily had disappeared, and where Denny had followed. The man's voice kept replaying in Rio's mind. Of course he'd be wary about a stranger inside his house. Even Rio could understand that. But there was something else... something in Denny's voice... Rio's stomach tightened. Something was wrong in this house. He just didn't know what. Following behind Denny, Rio kept his arms close to his body, frightened of touching anything, of turning Denny's attention back on him. His eyes darted around, taking in the corridors they were walking down, the furniture, the doors that branched off from their path. They approached a large bookcase set into the left side of the corridor, and he looked it up and down as they passed. The bookcase was thick and heavy, the shelved filled with rows upon rows of old books. Rio's eyes flicked down, and he felt a small jolt run up his body. He slowed his pace, his already quiet footsteps fading to silence as he eventually stopped dead. Ahead of him, Denny continued on in Lily's direction, oblivious to the fact that he was no longer leading Rio.

By the bookcase, scratches had been gouged into the wooden floor, lining up with the legs of the heavy furniture. From the marks, Rio could tell that the bookcase had been pulled forwards, multiple times, the legs of the bookshelf betraying their constant use. Is... is something behind?

Biting his lip, Rio held back as Denny continued onwards, rounding the corner and moving out of sight. He waited a few seconds, then retraced his steps, shifting back silently to the bookcase. Rio turned, standing directly in front of it, and looked it up and down. From here, there was nothing immediately wrong with it. It just looked like a normal piece of furniture set back against the wall. So why did he have a sick feeling in his stomach? Glancing back to make sure he was still alone, Rio edged to the side of the bookcase and ran his hands along the back of it. It wasn't set flush against the wall. There was a gap. He pressed his face against the gap between the rear of the shelf and the wall. It was too dark, he couldn't see... Yes! Something... something was there... He squinted, but couldn't quite make out what was behind.

Gritting his teeth, Rio hesitantly pressed his fingers against the back shelf of the case and pulled it outwards, slowly, trying to make sure that it didn't make any noise. There was a small, tiny screech and Rio flinched... but luckily, it seemed Denny hadn't heard anything. Breathing a silent sigh of relief, the boy kept pulling, and eventually the bookcase had slid out far enough for Rio to get a good look at what lay behind. A metal, heavy-looking sliding door. Rio paused, trying to understand what was going on. What possible use could there be for this door? Why was it hidden? Hesitantly, Rio slowly pressed himself into the small gap he'd created and pushed the sliding door open, inch by inch, trying not to make a sound. The door was well oiled, and it slid open silently, revealing an inky blackness behind it. Rio could just about make out a set of wooden steps leading down, and a musty, damp smell wafted up. He wrinkled his nose. His mind was screaming at him to just leave this alone, to just close the door, push the case back and leave it alone. Biting his lip, Rio slowly stepped down into the darkness, feeling his way down, the steps creaking below him ever so slightly.

After about 15 steps, his trainers crunched on a stone floor. The air was cold, frigid. In the darkness, Rio strained his ears, but there was nothing. Even the sounds of Lily and Denny talking upstairs had faded to absolutely nothing. Taking another nervous step forwards, something tapped his face, and Rio almost cried out in shock, stopping himself just in time. After a second, he realised it was a light switch, attached to a string. Swallowing, his throat dry as sand, he reached up and pulled it. The light flicked on, bathing the room in a sickly yellow glow.

Rio felt his blood freeze at what he saw.

He was standing at the entrance to a decent sized basement, rectangular shaped. From the ceiling dangled a bare light bulb. Along the left side of the basement was placed a row of cramped wire cages, the doors firmly shut with padlocks holding them closed. At first, desperate thoughts that perhaps Denny North kept animals in these tiny cages flitted through his mind. Then he looked across the rest of the room. At the far end of the room was some sort of wooden table, metal manacles connected to the four corners by chains. A thick-looking bag had been left on the table's surface, and coiled on the floor next to it was a dirty garden hose, hooked up to a tap in the wall. Water was pooled on the table's surface, and the bag looked damp, as if it had recently been soaked.

Closer to Rio was a wooden chair, bolted to the floor. Leather straps were set into the arms of the chair. Placed neatly on the floor next to the chair was a set of industrial looking clamps, and draped across the back of the chair was a plastic bag, softly rustling from the breeze drifting down from the staircase, worn as if someone had been struggling inside it. Rio felt his stomach churn as he looked closer at the ends of the chair's armrests and noticed faint scratches in the wood.

Other objects in the basement lay hidden in the gloom, but Rio didn't stop to look at them. Feeling his heart starting to rise into his throat, his stomach roiling, he wheeled around and stumbled back up the wooden steps.

Tony realized Triste was looking right at him, and he gulped again. "Uh... yeah! Of course! I mean I'm not about to let Kalis fuck up my life, after all! Not after things finally seem to be getting back on track! I'm in!" he nodded here.

"Great! Thanks, guys! I knew I could count on you... and well yes... we'll watch each others' backs to keep each other out of trouble. But uh... given that it's a cataract, I'd say it's in the ocean somewhere, or a large body of water. It's surrounded by electromagnetic interference though, making any scans on it impossible, so its location is pretty much unknown. But we'll find it... we have to find it. So I know the location of the first waypoint at least... it's the ruins of an ancient civilization... which existed at the same time as the civilization that built the ship. It'll take a bit of trekking so to speak... but we'll find it. Oh and uh... what about Lily, Axel?" Vergil asked the rat here, turning his gaze to him.

Tony downed the scotch, not caring if it would hit him pretty fast. Wow... the final showdown to save the world, huh? Wouldn't be the first time he'd done something like this... still, better order another scotch, just to be safe.

Soren sighed as he rubbed his cheek. His body ached all over. He was very thankful he was still wearing his protective gear from when he worked with the augments or he'd probably be nursing several busted ribs.

"CafÈ Verona." The driver parked in front of the very upscale Italian resturaunt.

Soren paid his fare and stepped out. He looked at the suits and fancy gowns everyone wore. A Lexus LF-A passed him.

He sighed. "Let's get this over with."

The man walked through the front entrance without so much as a peep from the waiter. Instead, he was escorted to the table where Marita and the others were. "Sorry I'm late. I just got back from dropping Anne off at the rehab center."

He winced as he sat down.

"Hello, Soren." Vergil gave the human a smile, and nodded at him. "Glad you could make it." Vergil began relaying the info that'd been discussed to Soren. Tony was rather eager to hear about Anne, but that would have to wait for the moment. Instead, he struck up a conversation with the others, beginning to talk about life in Corona and some things he previously had on the agenda in the days ahead before his plans were put on hold. However, as he talked, conversation swung round to the Zaloga Corporation, one of the four main weapons' manufacturers in the city. Tony had an appointment with them tomorrow, as his father was trying to secure shipping rights to their goods. So far talks hadn't gone anywhere, but that's why his father was sending him in to try and get a better response.

As Zaloga came up however, Vergil couldn't help but overhear it as he wound down his briefing with Soren. "Zaloga... Zaloga..." he said softly, staring off into the distance. "Why does that...?" Suddenly, the gecko was hit by another memory, this one becoming as fresh in his mind as pine needles on a winter day.

Rex and Kalis were seated in a waiting room somewhere... but as the memory became clearer, Vergil could see the Zaloga Corporation's red and black logo emblazoned on some tapestries. Kalis, who was in his natural gargoyle gecko form, fidgeted uneasily in the chair.

"Rex..." he started to say. "Are you sure about this? Do we really need such power? Something just feels... off about this... it's not right. We could face court martial and death if they find out we're pursuing this..." he stated nervously.

"You sense it too, huh?" Rex responded with a smile. "Don't worry... it'll be fine. And we're already risking it all to end this war anyway, my friend. Chances are pretty good we're gonna face a court martial regardless. May as well take that first step, right? Would you rather another ten years of war?" the red gecko asked with some concern.

"No... I-I guess not." Kalis stammered, shaking his head. "But still... this is... I dunno..." he trailed off as an impeccably dressed blue gecko entered the room now.

"Brother! It's good to see you again!" The blue gecko Vergil recognized as Mace, Rex's brother, and CEO of Zaloga Corporation. "You said you needed my help with something?"

"Yes, brother, and it's a matter of some urgency." Rex rose to standing now and shook his brother's hand. "You told me once about the strange ruins under this building... and what you had found down there. The map... I need access to it..."

Mace's pleasant demeanor melted into one of uncertainty now, his confident look gone. "Brother it's dangerous down there... I already told you..."

"I know... but it's a risk I'm willing to take. Please, Mace... I need to see what's down there for myself..."

The vision faded and Vergil gasped. "Wait!" he exclaimed to the group now, holding his head. "Wait, wait, wait! I just... I remembered something!" His hand shot out. "Zaloga! I know how Rex found out about the waypoints in the first place! Guys... there's a waypoint right here... in Corona!" he breathed, looking intensely at them. "Rex's brother Mace is CEO of Zaloga... and I just saw him talking to Mace about a map that's hidden under Zaloga's headquarters... Mace must've found it and told his brother about it! That's how Rex found out about Torment's Cataract... and the warship! Guys we can start our search right here... in this city!"

Tony bit his lower lip. "Zaloga? Damn... I was supposed to meet with them tomorrow on business..."

"Perfect cover!" Vergil cut in, not giving Tony a chance to finish. "We could go as your you know... attaches, bodyguards, whatever, and while you're meeting with them... or something, we could find a way down there and locate the waypoint!"

"That's... well... I'm sure security..." Tony stumbled.

"But it's our only chance, and a damn good excuse to gain access to that building, if you ask me! What do you guys say?" Vergil asked, looking eagerly around at the group as a smile began playing about his lips.

Denny walked into the kitchen to see Lily examining silverware. "Could I get you something to drink?" he asked politely.

"Um, sure," Lily answered, putting the silverware back quickly. "How about...my favorite?" She was curious to see if her favorite drink, whatever it was, affected her memory.

Denny took some blueberry-pomegranate juice out of the refrigerator, and surreptitiously grabbed a small vial from a hidden drawer under the counter. "So...you don't remember anything of living here?" he asked, keeping his tone neutral.

"Oh no, nothing at all," Lily admitted. "I'm hoping that my visit could jog my memory."

"Your visit?" Denny brought her the glass of juice. "You don't plan on staying? What about your children?"

"The children!" Lily was about to take a drink, but stopped when they were mentioned. "Can I see them? Where are they?"

"They're up in their rooms. Aside from Ejlert of course..." Denny pushed her juice towards her. "Drink up, and then we can go see them..."

Soren shuddered. He then took a gulp of ice water. "Let me guess, you want me to come along?"

He then looked at Tony. "Don't get me wrong but I just want to have a normal life."

Title: Racing the Storm

Axel glanced over at the human. "But Soren, if Kalis manages to get to this... Cataract... then none of us are going to be able to have a normal life." He shook his head. "Now that we know about all this, there's... I wouldn't be able to sit out and hope someone else fixes it. Not when the lives of the people I care about... Lily, you guys... Not when they could all be at stake."

He looked back at Vergil and nodded, though his expression wasn't quite as eager as the one plastered over the gecko's face. "Yeah, that... that sounds like it's a lead, at least. But Tony's right. Even if we pretend we're meant to be there with him, it's not like they'll just let us look around. I mean, ah... there's bound to be some sort of security systems in place. How are we gonna get around those?"

Rio reached the top of the basement stairs and quickly wriggled out from behind the bookcase, his chest heaving as he took deep breaths. Down there, the air had seemed dead, lifeless. After a moment, he went to head down the direction Lily had taken, but then considered and pushed the bookcase back first, gritting his teeth as he heaved against its weight. If Denny came back and discovered he'd been down there...

When it was close to its original position, Rio took a step back and pushed his hair out of his eyes. He swallowed, trying to calm himself and adopt a neutral expression, then set off down the corridor. He eventually arrived at the kitchen, where Denny and Lily were stood talking. He could feel his heart thumping at the sight of the man, but he fought to think straight. She said she lost her memory... I have to tell her about it... With Denny around though, there was no way he could say anything. He bit his lip as he stood in the kitchen doorway, trying to think what to do.

"Lily..." Rio started to whine as Lily was about to take a drink from the juice. His voice shook slightly but he tried to play off against it, putting on a show of fidgeting uncomfortably. "I... I really need the toilet. I didn't go before we left... could... could you come with me? I'm scared of going alone," he said plaintively. Rio locked eyes with Lily, trying to get his message across. "Please?"

Soren swirled his glass of water around. Axel had a point. Not to mention, he recalled what happened to Lanthae just a few months ago.

He templed his hands and let out a sigh. "How bad is this gonna be? Can we just escape from this impending clusterfuck? I'm kinda not interesting in playing action hero again."

i can n handle security if it becomes a problem' Marita chimed in ' the trick is to get enough info so know where to start looking. As it turns out Zaloga is one of the groups my employer is very interested in. so hopefully i can get us some info from them.. we're in this for the long haul Soren so i suggest we get packed up for a lengthy trip we're going to be going places..'look i rather not be doing this either i'd rather be living a quiet life with my two girlfriends, have a place to live, raise a family down the line, all that normal stuff. ' but this kalis guy threatens literally everything, we cant ignore that, just because we want to stay out of it,. that die is cast i'm afraid,

Soren sighed. "Well, when you put it that way..."

He took another sip of his water. Great, he thought. My life's gonna go to shit, again!

"Anyways, how long is this gonna take? I don't want Anne coming out of rehab and into an empty apartment or worse, coming after me because she thinks I tried to get rid of her."

"We'll have to figure that out of course but actually... before that..." Vergil turned to Soren here. "No one's gonna make you come along of course, but we can't run from this. Ivitz is the only nation powerful enough to stop Kalis, and if he gets his hands on that warship, it's over." he explained. "Won't matter where you run to... he'll take that thing to every continent until he has achieved total domination." the gecko said acidly.

"Hey... as for Anne... I don't want her thinking that either... in fact... I was gonna go visit her if it was OK with you... let her know there are people who care about her and want to see her stop destroying her life." Tony put in sincerely. "I want to visit frequently too... no matter how long this takes."

"Could take awhile, depending on how much traveling we'll need to do." Vergil mused aloud. "Anyway, the first waypoint is right here, which leads me to you..." he turned to look at Triste. "Surely the Federation has schematics for Zaloga's HQ... as well as ways of bypassing its no doubt extensive security?" he inquired hopefully, raising his brows here.

Lily was about to take a sip of the juice, but stopped because Rio entered, clearly needing assistance. "Oh! Of course." She turned to Denny. "Where is the restroom?"

"Head into the dining room, it's the door on the right," Denny replied. His eyes narrowed as he watched Lily put the cup down and cross to the dining room.

"Right over there--" Lily started to say to Rio, when Denny grabbed her hand. "--Come on," he said pleasantly. "Let's go see your children. They're upstairs in their room..."

Lily was a bit startled, but acquiesced. "It's been far too long since they've seen their mother..." she admitted, starting up the stairs with Denny.

Triste nodded. "Of course. By tomorrow we'll be able to provide a plan for the building, as well as some form of clearance for each of you. Including the North woman if she decides to accompany us."

Axel blinked. "Just like that?"

"Just like that, Mr. Whent." She leaned forwards and raised her voice. "You're all here because Vergil's vouched for each of you. Personally, I would have preferred to bring qualified Ivitz agents on this assignment, but we have enough faith in his judgement that if trusts in your abilities, it's worth a shot." Triste looked at each member of the group sitting across the table from her. "But, since I'm sure by now you understand the gravity of the situation, I'll be watching each of you. If I feel that any of you will be a liability to the mission, you'll be out."

Crap... Rio chewed the inside of his cheek. "But... I..." His palms sweating, he followed them to the foot of the stairs. To the left of the bottom step, set against the wall, was a small cabinet on which was placed a vase containing a bunch of flowers. Rio paused by it it, then looked up as Lily and Denny headed upstairs. Both of their backs were to him. So far, Denny had seemed calmer around Lily...

Rio pushed the vase off the cabinet then quickly took a few steps up the stairs, pressing a hand to his mouth as if in shock as it smashed on the floor. The flowers scattered, water pooling around them. "Oh! I'm... I'm so sorry! It was an accident!" he stuttered, turning big eyes to the two adults. Come on... come clean it up...

Soren rubbed the bridge of his nose. "Well, if you put it that way, then I guess I'm in."

He then turned to Tony. "She's doing inpatient treatment at the Corollis Clinic. She's not allowed to have visitors for the first 72 hours." The Human winced as his body's aches began to act up from Anne's beating when he told her that she needed to go to rehab. Luckily, the rebound effect from the drugs in her system quickly wore off and he was able to get her to voluntarily check herself into the clinic.

"Good... thanks guys... I'll make this up to you somehow... I don't know how yet but... I'll think of something. I promise." Vergil told them sincerely. "Sorry again, Soren. But it means a lot that you're going to have my back." the gecko stated, nodding solemnly.

Tony sighed at Soren's announcement. "Dammit... you know what? I don't care. I'm gonna go see her before tomorrow. She has to know that she has people who care about her before we just up and leave. It's like Soren said... she'll think we abandoned her, and that's not right. Regulations be damned... I'm a Stracci, they'll let me in." he said, pushing his chair back and standing with some determination.

"Ahem... before you uh... do that..." Vergil broke in. "What time are we meeting at Zaloga tomorrow?"

"Oh... right. Uh... my appointment's at 1:00, so be there a half hour early I'd say so we can go over plans." Tony stated.

Vergil nodded. "I'll probably call you guys tonight with ideas. Speaking of tonight..." he looked at Triste now. "You wouldn't mind getting those schematics and clearance to me tonight... would you?" he asked her, once again hopefully. "It's just... I'm gonna need to time to prepare, and look over everything. I'm good at coming up with things on the fly... for some reason..." Vergil explained. "So if you could do that, that would be great. This is my address..." He dug around in his pocket, and finally produced a small chit with his address on it as he held it out for her.

"I think we're all agreed, then. Zaloga at 1:00 tomorrow. I will see everyone then!" Tony replied, giving them a nod. "Heh... seems we're always coming together to save the world, eh?" he asked with a grin, and gave the group a wave before paying for his scotch and starting to head back out to his car.

(CafÈ Verona)

Soren turned to Vergil. "Okay. Let's finish this off once and for all."

He then turned to everyone else. "So do we need to get any other supplies and stuff?"

(Corollis Clinic)

Anne sat in a dull room. All around her were various patients at the clinic. A steady electronic ticking was heard as the clock counted the time.

She reached up and touched her horn. It was spongy but otherwise unchanged. Upon arrival, they had sprayed it with a special metallized bioplastic-based foam. The foam's purpose was twofold: to prevent the horn's use as a stabbing weapon and to silence her electronic telepathy so she couldn't order drugs or other contraband.

She shuffled her hooves nervously. There was no clatter of steel horseshoes on tile. She had been given rubber horseshoes that were glued on.

Her ears lay back. "So what do you want?"

The counselor, a young Axis Deer buck looked at the mare. "How about you introduce yourself?"

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on May 09, 2014, 01:00:13 PM

Vergil shook his head. "Maybe some supplies but nothing serious right now... let's wait to find out where we go next, since from what I recall, the waypoints reveal parts of the map, and it becomes clearer the more you find. So once we get the first one, we'll have an idea where to go next." At least they should, he didn't add. Vergil knew this was the first waypoint Rex had found so in theory, it had led him to the one after that. Even if it didn't, Vergil knew where they could go next, as he'd found another waypoint at the archives yesterday.

"Once we know our next destination, we can plan accordingly with supplies. And definitely jump back here from time to time too... you know, just to check on things and recharge." Vergil suggested.

Tony had arrived at the clinic shortly after leaving Cafe Verona, and had managed to browbeat the staff into letting him through. What were they gonna do? Refuse the son of a powerful crime boss entry? After finding her location, the ferret went straight to the section of the clinic where the mare was being treated.

Stopping just outside the door, the ferret's face fell upon seeing the state she was in. "Dammit..." he breathed, and pulled his cap off his head, wringing it in his paws. Yeah, he was nervous, and wasn't really ready for this, but he'd driven all the way out here, and no time like the present, right? Steeling himself, he stepped forward and cleared his throat.

"Uh... sorry, doc, but I needed to see her before I leave town... hope you understand." Tony said, and without waiting for a response, he moved forward, eyes traveling to Anne. "Hey..." He gave her a small wave. "So... I wanted to see how you were doing... jesus... I heard the news and was worried. You almost killed yourself!" the ferret started, his face melting into anguish without him really realizing it. "What were you thinking? I didn't want to see you splattered all over a road! I know you might not think so but..." it was a long pause... much longer than the ferret wanted. "But people care about you, you know? I care about you." he said softly before he could stop himself. He closed his eyes in frustration, but figured he may as well finish. "This isn't what I want to constantly think about every day... whether or not you're going to live to see tomorrow. You've gotta stop, Anne. Not just for your sake... but you know... the people who care..." Tony trailed off here, not wanting to present too much at once. He finally reopened his eyes, trying to will his face to un-contort itself from the knot he was sure it must've twisted into while saying that.

On the second floor around a hallway, three white doors sat nestled between an off-white carpet and adobe wall. Lily quietly pushed open the first door to see a young boy, maybe 12, with light skin and dark hair in a cereal bowl cut.

"Hello!" she beamed. The child just looked at her.

"This is Christian. You don't remember Christian?" asked Denny.

"I...of course I do," Lily lied. She knelt down in front of her son. "How have you been? I haven't seen you in so long, I missed you so much!"

The child just continued staring blankly at her.

"Say hello, Christian," Denny demanded firmly.

"Hello," Christian said to Denny.

Lily's eyes clouded, and she put a hand on Christian's shoulder. "Oh god..." she whispered, eyes growing wide. "He's in...such pain..." She sensed... actually something even worse than pain. It was absence. The lack of having ever felt anything at all. Just feeling it brought tears to her eyes.

"He's mentally retarded," Denny explained. "I should have warned you."

Lily turned suspiciously, ready to tell him that she'd met mentally ill and this felt different, but gasped in surprise when he noticed two young girls peeking at her from the doorway. One was a young teenager, dark-skinned with Denny's hair, and the younger one must have been 7 or 8, with Lily's eyes and complexion.

"Oh, hello! Forgive me, you both...startled me..." Lily rubbed her forehead and reflexively winced. Both of them were giving her the same emotionless stare as Christian. Lily's senses ached, numbed by the congealing sense of repression weighing heavy on the room.

"Aylin and Hannah. Also retarded," Denny said simply. "Ejlert was the smart one. I always figured when he was born he stole all the intellect you had to give, leaving none to go around for these three."

Lily stood up suddenly, looking aghast at her husband. "How could you say such a thing?" Her next line was interrupted by the sound of shattering glass downstairs. "Oh no, Rio..." Lily took one last look at her children, ashamed to admit to herself she was almost grateful for a chance to get away and prepare herself mentally for a more extended conversation. "I'll be right back, I just need to check on a friend..."

She darted from the room. Denny stayed behind, giving Lily's backside a calculating look as it disappeared. With hardly a glance at his children, he crossed to a broom closet and withdrew a heavyset black rifle.

Triste took the card that Vergil gave her, looked it over, then nodded. "Shouldn't be a problem." Slipping it into her pocket, she pushed her chair away from the table and stood up. "I'll see you later tonight then. It was... good meeting the rest of you. Hopefully, this'll all go smoothly." With a final glance around the table, Triste turned and left the cafe.

Axel watched her leave, then turned a bemused expression to Vergil. "I just love the positive outlook she's got. It's, ah... it's just great." He stood up too and rubbed a hand through his hair. "I should get going as well. I'll let Lily know what we talked about." He gave the group a sickly smile. "Can't wait for tomorrow. Yay... See you all then, I guess." Raising a hand in farewell, Axel made his way through the cafe and emerged onto the street.

He thought about heading back home... but the idea of leaving Lily to deal with her problem alone didn't sit well with him. He knew her husband would be helping her, but surely it would be okay if he just hung around in the area to make sure she was okay... Or is that just jealousy speaking? Axel shook his head, then hailed a taxi that was passing. "Carriage Hills," he said as he climbed in.

Rio looked up anxiously as Lily started to come down the stairs, then grabbed her wrist and started desperately trying to pull her back along the corridor. "We have to get out of here now!" he urged, his voice a low whisper. "This guy is a fucking psycho! He's got this death basement with cages and tables and... and chairs!" Rio babbled as he kept trying to pull her. "Holy shit, you actually married this fuck?"

Lily's eyes widened. "...show me," was her only reply.

"I'll be up in a minute!" she called up the stairs. "Rio cut himself, I just need to help him clean this out!"

When Rio had reopened the bookshelf, Lily wasn't even particularly shocked to see the horrific torture equipment behind it. Shackled chairs with asphyxiation bags, cages that didn't leave room to sit down, waterboards... "Every form of torture that doesn't leave a mark..." she murmured.

She realized there was a shadow blocking the doorway. "What have you done to my children?" she snapped furiously, whipping around with her fists balled.

With a light whiff a tranquilizer dart embedded itself in her chest. Calmly, Denny made to reload but before he got the chance Lily dove forward and grabbed his foot. Concentrating, she channeled the semiconsciousness from the dart into her husband.

Denny gasped as he felt himself getting sleepy. Kicking Lily in the face reflexively, he reached into his pocket when she didn't let go and grabbed a bright red powder.

Snarling, Lily tried to drag him down with her and received a face full of chile dust. She screamed, but stayed focused and transferred the burning blindness to Denny. "I'm not the same woman you kept locked up in this room for God knows how long" she snarled, channeling animal fury. Raising her arm, she slashed deep red strips of flesh across his face and elbowed his rifle out of his hands.

Stumbling backwards onto the wooden steps, Denny tried vainly to fight back. Lily could taste his fear, his helplessness, as she pumped his own psychological weapons back into his system.

Then she was distracted by crying. Her children were at the top of the stairs, watching with wide eyes. Each of them emanated genuine fear, but not at Denny. At her.

"Children!" she exclaimed, hesitating. "Don't look! Please, it's okay--"

One of Denny's elbows smashed into her temple. With the break in her concentration came his second wind. leaning over, he sent both of them thumping down the stairs, with him on top. With a grunt, he wrapped his arms around her neck, putting in the extra effort to shield his mind from any further psionic attacks.

Gagging, Lily felt her already-inflamed vision going black.

Later that night, Vergil was alone in his flat, rubbing the back of his neck as he peered at the computer screen in front of him. His laptop was sitting on a coffee table while he leaned forward on a couch. He was looking at Zaloga's main website, but the pictures of the building just weren't what he needed. He required more if he was going to lead an operation inside this place. Mace really looked... familiar to him, but he figured that's because he had met him before in the past. He had to have been in that waiting room, after all, but he couldn't remember if he'd made it down into the sub-levels with Rex or not.

Leaning back, he tapped the arrow key a few times, scrolling through what pictures he could find of Mace and the Zaloga headquarters. It was a nice building... that was for sure. Very landscaped outside, it was almost like a castle sitting atop waterfalls and cliffs. He'd certainly give props to the landscaper and architect, no doubt.

Anne smiled. She got up and embraced Tony in a hug. "I know," she said. "I knew that the twenty some odd years of drug use will eventually catch up to me. But I just kept ignoring it. Mainly because, I really didn't have anyone who cared or to care about."

She sniffled as he ears splayed in embarassment. "But now, I've got you, Soren, Axel and the others..."

(OOC - Anne will eventually break her habit of drug use...and then continue to use marijuana. Though she'll only use what she grows. Personally, I'm of the belief that marijuana is the least harmful of drugs, but this is not the place to talk about it.)

Tony was a bit surprised at the sudden forwardness of it all... but he had to admit, he rather liked it. He hugged her back after a moment's hesitation, and smiled. "Hey... I'm glad you know that then. I wouldn't have come here if I didn't care, after all." He patted her on the back. "And I wanted to see you before..." he trailed off here, pulling back, but not releasing her just yet.

"I have to go on a trip... with the others. That bastard Kalis is after something dangerous... something that has the potential to shatter the world with its power, and Vergil's been asked by the government to help stop it, since he kind of remembers how to get to what Kalis is seeking. Because this threatens everyone... I gotta go to help try and stop him... for all of us. We aren't leaving just yet though... we got something to do here first that's kind of dangerous but... I wanted to see you before that... so you knew that I did care... and that we weren't just leaving. I can visit you every day if you want, up till I leave... and when I get back... I'll visit again." He smiled once more, giving her a sincere look.

Rio gaped as Lily and Denny tumbled down the stairs towards him, lurching to the side and almost coming down with them. Shooting a glance upwards, he could see some kids, around his age, just standing at the top of the stairs, crying. "Help her! What the fuck are you doing?!"

They made no attempt to move, or even acknowledge that he'd said anything.

Swearing, he turned and jumped down the stairs after them, landing next to the dazed man as he choked Lily. Punching and kicking at Denny seemed to have no effect as he tightened his grip, intent on cutting off her air supply. Desperate, Rio swung his gaze around the room and his eyes stopped on the tranquilizer rifle, lying on the penultimate step from where Lily had knocked it out of her husband's hands. Snatching it up, he spun and aimed the gun at the side of his head, pulling the trigger. It clicked, empty. Gasping, Rio could see Lily was on the verge of blacking out. Switching his grip on the rifle to the barrel, he raised the butt and swung it as hard as he could. It connected against Denny's temple with a solid clunk, knocking the man off balance and loosening his grip on Lily. Darting forwards, Rio grabbed her and tried to pull her away.

Denny cried out and took a swing at Rio. Lily blocked the fist with her arm, then used her legs to push Denny over her, sending him tumbling into the torture dungeon.

"Shut the door!" she commanded Rio, staggering to her feet. Her words were slurred and the tranquilizer was taking its course. using her hands for assistance she crawled up the the first floor. "Hannah, Christian, Aylin, come with me!" she begged. But the three children darted up the stairs. "Please!" she begged.

Downstairs, Denny was ramming the bookshelf. Rio had set the propped the tranq gun to block the bookshelf, but it wouldn't hold for long.

"Rio...we've got to...got to..." Lily could barely keep standing. Her vision and thoughts swam, and her head thudded painfully. She almost dropped to her knees when she attempted to move for the stairs.

"Fuck them! We've gotta get out of here, he's gonna kill us!" Rio shouted, catching up with Lily and trying to support her as best as he could with his smaller frame. The sound of slamming reverberated throughout the house, loud as cannon fire to the boy's ears as Denny tried to force his way out. The floors vibrated and pictures on the wall shook rhythmically with each impact.

Rio awkwardly pulled Lily along, back down the corridor that led to the front door. They had to pass the barricaded door to the basement, and he could see with a sinking in his stomach that the gun had almost been jolted free. "Come on! Hurry!" he urged as the entrance grew slowly closer.

Axel looked out the window as the taxi made its way slowly down Carriage Hills, keeping an eye out for the house matching the one Lily had shown him on the website. "Hey... hey, stop here for a second," he muttered when the car passed the two-story house. Axel chewed his lip as the driver pulled up opposite, trying to decide what he was going to do now.

With Rio's help, Lily stumbled over to the front door and opened it by flopping her full body weight onto it. Sprawling onto the front porch, she couldn't seem to concentrate long enough to get back up.

Behind them, a final THUD sent the rifle skittering to the side, and a partially-drugged Denny grabbed it and marched up the stairs, reloading as he did so.

Rio almost sprawled over along with Lily as she fell down onto the porch. Stooping, he tried to pull her up, but she was too heavy. He heard the crash as Denny finally managed to break free from the basement, and he desperately redoubled his efforts. "Shit! Get up!"

Across the street, Axel's mouth popped open when he saw Lily and Rio come tumbling from the front door. "The hell?" He hurriedly climbed from the taxi and called across. "What the hell's going on?!"

Rio's head jerked up, and his eyes grew wide in recognition. "Help us! He's coming!"

"I'm on the clock, buddy," the cab driver mumbled as he flicked through his newspaper.

"Jesus!" Axel sprinted across the road, onto the property and up to the porch. He took Lily's arm from Rio and started dragging her up to her feet. "What's going on?!" he spluttered again. Instead of answering, Rio turned and slammed the front door closed.

Lily shook her head dizzily. "Hannah...Christian...Aylin..." she couldn't concentrate enough to say more than a few names.

Denny peered through the keyhole and saw an unknown rat dragging his wife away. The presence of a taxi stopped him from trying to retaliate. Instead, he chose to cut his losses and lock his door.

For now, he'd reseal everything, ensure his children never spoke of this incident, and report an overzealous Lily-impersonator to the police. That would get him some protection for the time being, and give him time to plan for her return.

Because if there's one thing his twisted activities taught him about properly tortured people, it's that they always came back.

Vergil was getting a bit restless, and finally stopped trying to burn a hole in his computer screen with his eyes. No matter how much he looked at pictures of Zaloga, he needed those schematics. He cursed his failure to obtain Triste's contact info before leaving Cafe Verona earlier today. Standing up and stretching his arms over his head, the gecko headed for the kitchen to make himself a sandwich. Without those schematics, this whole operation was in jeopardy.

Pulling the fridge door open with a clink of glasses and cardboard cartons on the door's shelf, Vergil proceeded to make a simple peanut-butter and jelly sandwich, which he found he liked for some reason. Perhaps he was fond of them before he'd become amnesiac.

Deciding to make good use of time, he headed back to his computer after finishing construction on the sandwich, and opened up his personnel files, which had arrived via email and a secure log-in about an hour ago. Smiling to himself, he began poring over the information while he munched, looking at his early life and some of his career with the Federation's military, noting he had been decorated for various operations under Rex Sardolemuel's command. Such an idealistic life, serving under such a famous commander... but Vergil admitted, it made him want to learn about Rex all the more, and why he'd strayed from his path to turn traitor. There was an answer there... he just knew it, and he wanted to find it.

Carrying Lily back across the road, Axel piled into the cab with her, then pulled Rio in after them. "Go!"

The cab driver rustled his newspaper, then slowly put it down on the seat beside him. "Anywhere you want to go, in particular?"

Rio thumped the back of the driver's seat in frustration. "Just go, fuckwad!"

Later that night, Axel set a cup of coffee on the table in front of Lily as she sat in the kitchen, and lightly pressed a small bag of ice to the swollen lump on her temple as he took a seat next to her. "Well... swelling's going down at least..." he muttered as he inspected the marks on her face. "Jesus, I... I still can't believe..." The fingers of his free hand ground into the wooden table, and the muscles of his jaw clenched. "I'm so sorry I wasn't there..."

There was a small scuffing sound, and Axel looked around to see Rio standing awkwardly in the doorway. The rat's expression softened slightly. "Hey... thanks for helping out."

Rio gave a small shrug and looked down at his shoes. "I wasn't the one he was trying to beat the shit out of."

Triste reached Vergil's floor, and walked down the corridor until she came to a door with the same number as on the card he'd given her. Shrugging the backpack she wore further onto her shoulder, Triste reached out and thumped on the door briskly. About to make contact with him now.

Good. Be sure to relay his plans to us.

Vergil jumped alert at the sound of the knock, his heart racing. OK... he was overreacting. Trying to collect himself, the gecko moved to the door whilst smoothing his feathers back subconsciously. He wasn't even aware he had done it (and of course, his feathers didn't really get smoothed back, as they popped back to their swept back and slightly upright position), and hustled to get the door open. Stopping himself just before he did so, Vergil finally pulled it back and smiled as he saw Triste on the other side, then tried to get somewhat serious.

"Ahem... I was waiting, but I'm glad you're here now." he said, the smile returning to his face. "So... whatcha got?" he asked, stepping aside and motioning for her to come in.

Lily had been spending a lot of time since they got back sitting at the kitchen table and staring out the window.

"Axel..." she said. "We need to find Ejlert. If he's anything like the other children, he's not suited to surviving on his own. Denny implied that he was 'smarter' than the others, and in that case he may help us rescue the others. Denny will have called the police by now, and Rio's right, there's not much we could do to fight Denny head on, especially since I'm supposed to be dead."

She took a deep breath. "That house had a lot of Ejlert in it. I could sense what he had to go through...and if I got the chance I think I could sense him again. I've got these psionic powers, might as well put them to good use."

(Corollis Clinic)

Anne's group session had been finished. Thanks to the effect of the drug withdrawl, her hands began to tremor.

Her door clicked as a nurse entered and gave the mare her the detox drugs and some water. He watched over her to make sure she swallowed the pills, even inspecting inside her mouth. When that was done, the door clicked shut as the man exited.

Anne sighed and peered through the armored window. The lights of the huge skyscrapers could be seen against the dark sky.

(Mott Place)

Soren arrived back home to his empty apartment. He had left CafÈ Verona to go shopping for a bit. In his bag were some fresh catfish filets, some algae crackers and some fruits and vegetables.

The apartment was deserted. He then noticed a note taped on the fridge:

Quote

> Soren:
> Me and the rest of the girls are gonna visit Anne.
> -Rose

Soren looked out the window. Two frameflyers flitted by, a police hoverbiker in hot pursuit.

Sighing, he headed to his bedroom to do some work on some guy's badly damaged augment leg.

Axel nodded. "We'll find him, Lily. And we'll find some way to help the others. There's no way they can stay with that psycho." He looked down at his hands for a moment. "Did you... find anything at the house? Any clues or... or pointers where Ejlert could have gone?"

"I've got what you asked for. Why else would I be here?" Triste gave Vergil a small smile and stepped past him, looking around his apartment as she made her way further in. "Nice place. A little more... cozy that I would have expected." Walking over to the couch, she sat down and pulled off her backpack, unzipping it.

She pulled out some large, rolled up papers and dropped them onto the coffee table next to the laptop. "Plans for the building. Every floor. Should be useful for your master infiltration plan." Triste smirked, then reached in and pulled out a small stack of plastic cards, held together with an elastic band. "And security inspector identification. Identical to the real thing, and they should give us access to most areas." Pulling the band off, she spread them out on the table next to the floor plans. Each member of the team had their own card, with a small profile picture on the right, and their fake title on the left. Triste looked up at Vergil. "Remember anything else while you were waiting?"

"Oh! Well thanks! I do try and manage on my own, after all. It's all I could afford really but... now that I'm back with you guys... guess my pay's gonna increase." Vergil smiled here as he followed her over to the couch.

Paying close attention to what she was laying out on the table, the gecko's orange eyes scrutinized it all with a new light. "Well I don't think I used that specific terminology but yes... it is a master infiltration plan." He chuckled here, unrolling some of the schematics to give them a look over. "Hmm... no schematics of the sub-levels... but not surprising, since I'm guessing Mace didn't exactly make that knowledge public." he murmured.

But what he was really pleased with were the security inspector badges. "Oh Triste! I have to say... this is above and beyond what I was expecting!" he exclaimed happily. "This'll get us anywhere we need to go, without having to worry about security too much, AND it provides us with the perfect cover!" Looking over at her now with appreciation, he let a wide smile crease his features. "Great work! I'm really gonna have to repay you for the extra thought..." he trailed off here. He knew technically this part of the job, but still, he felt she had put in an extra touch here that most others wouldn't have thought about.

"Well I haven't remembered too much more about myself, except some things here and there about Rex's meeting with his brother... his brother seems... familiar to me for some reason, but I'm guessing it's just because I was present there. I can't think of any other specific times I saw him, after all. I think we'll have to gain access to the elevators to reach the sub-levels, and I might remember how exactly to do that as well." he nodded.

Seeing everything was in order, he took a seat next to her on the couch. "Well I have to say... this is fantastic! I now know exactly how I'm going to approach tomorrow! Ahem... oh yes, can I offer you anything while you're here? Food? A drink?" he inquired, holding back for the moment until he could gauge what she wanted.

Lily shook her head. "No idea. I don't know if we have the proper skillset to sleuth a missing child out on our own."

She took a deep breath. "But if you remember, there was a mutual acquaintance of ours who, if you recall, used to be employed to find people. She told us so herself..."

Title: Racing the Storm

Axel's breath caught. "You... you don't mean..." He swallowed and leaned forwards. "Are you sure that's a good idea? I mean, she didn't exactly attract the best kind of attention... and besides, how would we find her? The last we saw of Emilena, she was running off who-knows-where..."

Rio made a small noise.

Axel turned to look at him. "What?"

"Uh..." The boy stepped further into the kitchen. "Well, you just said you were looking for someone called Emilena. Do you mean Cock Eater?"

Axel smirked slightly. "No... it sounds like you're thinking of someone else..."

"Well, how many Emilenas could there be? It's not exactly a popular name," Rio tried, approaching the table and sitting opposite them. "She started up her own gang a few months ago near where I used to live, running drugs around, that kind of stuff. Come on! It's what everyone calls her, you've never heard of Cock Eater?" Rio's face grew deadly serious, and he leaned in. "Word is, when she was starting up, some guy tried to fuck her over on a deal. So she cut his dick off with some scissors and made him eat it."

The smirk on Axel's face vanished quickly. He looked at Lily. "That, ah... that actually sounds like it might be her," he said numbly as he subconsciously crossed his legs .

Triste smiled and leaned back. "I guess a drink would be nice." He doesn't remember anything about Mace. Looking down, her eyes passed over the faces of the individuals Vergil had picked to help them on the mission. "So... you actually think they're going to be useful?" she asked doubtfully. "It's just... odd. Before, you never would have wanted to work with civilians."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on May 14, 2014, 06:16:31 PM

"Sure!" Vergil hopped off the couch and began making his way to the small kitchen. "Well... to be fair... I had my full memory before. This group of individuals... I trust them with my life. They helped me out in Lanthae, and they're more than capable of holding their own. Sure... one or two had some rogue tendencies but... I think that's beyond us now." Vergil pulled open the door to a small wine fridge he had, and brought two glasses down to the counter top. Pulling the cork out of a red wine bottle, he smiled to himself, and poured the contents into the two glasses, the wine swirling a bit with the pouring.

"They all agreed to help, and they all realize the gravity of the situation, as well as what's riding on this mission." Taking the glasses, he walked back over to her and offered her one. "Here... to a better tomorrow... and to us." he ventured here, clinking his glass against hers and taking a hearty sip from it.

Settling in beside her, he let out a contented exhale and looked down at the notes. "Don't worry... we can rely on these guys to get the job done. They single-handedly infiltrated the Purifier base and extracted a civilian from the facility. They're good to go the distance. But..." he moved one picture of Axel to the side, revealing Tony underneath. "Ahem... I feel like maybe we should reconnect a bit before this assignment. I'd like to know more about you... and us, before we start this whole thing. You seem serious and heavily focused on your work... and that's good... but was it a mutual attraction from the start between us? Did it develop over time? Sorry... if this is too personal right now. I'm just trying to reconstruct my memories from scratch after all." he admitted. "Remembering bits and pieces here and there. Any little bit helps."

The door on Anne's room clicked open. The mare's ears pricked up as she turned towards the noise. There, she saw three familiar faces in hospital scrubs.

"Rose? Maria? Marita? The fuck are you doing here?" she whispered.

(Bak Long Headquarters)

Rory sighed as he looked over the paperwork. The scent of burning joss sticks hung in the air. The three 49ers had recovered his lost creds. But he just had recieved reports from his superiors that Corona was really starting to crack down on street vendors.

Anne's ears splayed as she heard what the trio were telling her. "Yeah, I knew I fucked up big time."

She turned to Rose and put her feet on the bolted down metal desk. "Not bad. Found out that a lot of the patients are Lanthaeni."

The mare then sighed as Marie relayed the news. "Again?" She gave a bitter laugh. "Well, I'm out of the running. Good luck to you though."

(Mott Place)

Soren had just finished repairing the leg. He looked at the clock: 9:00 PM. He sighed as he put his tools away and picked up his cell phone.

He dialed his latest client's number. "Mister Batty, your leg's finished. Would you like to pick it up now or later?"

"Now!" Soren held the phone away from his ear. "Fucking hell, you don't have to shout!" he muttered.

The Human hung up and carefully strapped the augment to a trolley.

The doorbell rang as he wheeled the augment to the front door. He peered through the peephole, revealing a middle aged Green Anole.

He opened the door slightly. And the Anole began to speak. "I'm here to pick up my leg." He handed over his ID card.

"Ah yes, Roy Batty. Your leg is right here."

"Thanks for being open this late." He pulled out two credit chits and was about to pass them over when something at the far end of the stairwell grabbed his attention.

His demeanor suddenly changed. The Anole suddenly tossed the two credit chits to the Human and bolted.

"Mister Batty! Youró" Soren picked up the two credit chits that had been tossed at him. As he did so, he saw four figures clad in black armor and equipped with firearms.

He shuddered as he closed the door and bolted it. He muttered some profanities under his breath.

Rio blinked. "You... you actually want to meet her?" He gulped. "Well... yeah. Yeah, I know a guy who could set up a meeting. I could find him tomorrow if you want, he used to hang out where I live."

Looking at Lily, Axel squeezed her hand slightly. "Are you sure there's no other way? This doesn't sound... well, it doesn't exactly sound safe..."

He's still hooked up on this? Triste took a sip from the wine glass and leaned back. "Well," she started, looking down at the glass and swirling it, "If I remember right, it was more of a mutual thing. We noticed each other in combat training, and since we were at the top of the class they always used to pair us together. Always used to be a draw though. You had more reach, I had more flexibility."

She took another sip, cocking her head as she stared into the distance. "So we started meeting up after training to... try and come to a clear winner." Triste smiled slightly. "But we still had the same problem."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on May 16, 2014, 10:09:44 AM

A thin smile spread across Vergil's lips here as Triste described the start of their relationship. "Heh... must've been quite the... 'rivalry.'" he stated here. He couldn't remember specific instances, but he certainly could picture it very easily enough in his mind.

As she described their meet-ups afterwards to try and settle on a clear winner, it was obvious to him what had transpired afterward. Most certainly there was a desire within him to re-experience it, but he was also debating if now was the right time for it. He couldn't remember if he was the aggressor or the one being seduced back then. Taking another drink from his glass, he swallowed and gazed out into the distance as well. "Well... that definitely sounds like something we need to settle at some point, wouldn't you say?" he asked here, his orange eyes moving over to her now, testing the waters. "I mean such an indecisive engagement... has to have a resolution at some point. A... 'climax' if you will." he smirked, and took another drink. "Still... thanks for the refresher... every little bit helps."

Tony was still hanging around Anne's room, having kept her company for a few hours. He was reading a book, and had just flipped the page when the trio came in. "Oh... hey again!" he said them, nodding as he closed the book after bending the corner of a page.

He listened to the exchange between the girls, and finally spoke up. "Yeah... and also, if you need anything, I wouldn't mind helping you out, Anne. No strings attached either, not for you." Drumming his claws on the book's cover, he looked over at her here. "I want to see you better, after all, and I won't spare anything in helping you get there. I'll be visiting as often as I can, whenever I'm in town." he reiterated, hoping he didn't sound too repetitive, but felt he wanted to make sure she knew he wasn't just going to leave and forget.

"I'm positive," stated Lily firmly. "Rio, the sooner you can get me in touch with Emilena the better."

She crossed to her room and withdrew a can of hairspray from her bathroom cabinet. Unscrewing the bottom, she pulled out about 9000 credits*. They were the collective tips she received from a part-time job at a Chinese restaurant where she occasionally worked as a waitress. Hopefully it would be enough to sway Emilena...

As they waited for Lily to return, Rio looked across at Axel, wide eyed. "So you actually knew her? Do you think it's true? About the dick thing?"

Axel grimaced. "No. Probably not. I hope not."

At the sound of Lily's footsteps, Rio glanced up. "I could try and set something up tomorrow. Hal... the guy I know... he always hangs out on the same corner." He saw the bundle of credits Lily was holding, and a small part of his mind noted that these two probably kept more little stashes like that somewhere around the house.

Axel's fingers drummed nervously on the table. "You know I can't go with you, I have to help Vergil. And... and I know this is something you have to do, but... promise me you won't take any risks you don't need to, Lily. Please."

"Don't worry about it," Triste said. "And you might be right. We never did find out who was on top." She grinned. "Or at least, top of the class." Triste ran her eyes over him, then looked away and straightened, finishing her glass. "But not now. We've got a long day tomorrow, and I don't want you getting... tired."

Vergil tensed up a bit as he caught her eyes wandering over him, roving up and down his form, but it came to nothing ultimately, and he knew she was right. As fun as a fling would be right now, it wasn't the appropriate time for such things. Exhaling slightly, he finished his wine and got up, stretching his arms out behind him as he headed for the door. "No... you're right of course. I need to be on top form for this. This issue can be settled later, after all." Despite the rejection, he maintained his optimistic outlook on it, and opened the door for her.

"Thanks for the schematics and passes. It was absolutely invaluable and it'll help us for sure, tomorrow... and... thanks for dropping by in general." he told her here now, offering her a small smile. "Well... have a good night, Triste. I'll see you tomorrow at Zaloga and we'll find out what's what with the path to Torment's Cataract."

Tony waved his paw at the others now. "Oh it's nothing. Least I can do for you guys, after all. And hey! I could cover the detox without even batting an eye! Why bother spending your hard-earned cash? Let me cover it... I don't mind." Tony informed them, smiling and tapping the cover of his book with a claw.

"Ah yes... I'm reading a book entitled 'Bremen and Europa: German Speed Queens of the Atlantic.' It's about two liners made by North German Lloyd during the 30s that I would've loved to travel on. Art deco at its finest and all that." he chuckled. "Anyway, I'd be happy to cover the cost for Anne so you girls can save your funds." He got up out of his chair now and looked at the pony. "I think I'm gonna head out for the night, as we got some work to do tomorrow with Vergil, but I'll stop by as frequently as I can." Tony told her. "Not going to forget about you, after all." He shook his head here.

Anne sniffled and embraced the three women in a massive hug. Despite her being slightly shorter than Soren, her incredible strength was revealed.

"Thanks for being here for me!" She wiped away some tears. The mare then embraced Tony and lifted the Ferret clean off the ground.

Her ears then pricked up and then pinned back and her tail began to swish back and forth as she heard footsteps. She glanced around. "Oh no, the night shift nurse is coming! You four need to hide or we're gonna be in deep shit!"

(Mott Place)

The door shook as someone knocked on it. "Open up or we're breaching the door!"

Soren peered through the peephole. It was that squad of black clad infantry. Two Primates and two Felines. Or at least he could tell from the rough shapes of their helmets and their reflective visors.

"What's your business?" he asked through the door.

"You have something that belongs to Serami Heavy Industries. Turn it over or we will recover it by force."

Soren gulped as he put the pieces together. That's why Mr. Batty was so skittish and willing to leave behind a rather expensive augment. He had stolen it, damaged during the theft and wanted a cyberneticist who wouldn't ask too many questions about it.

The locks clicked as the Human undid them and opened the door. The four armored troopers filed in.
Three of them carried H&K MP-7 subguns at the ready while one of them carried a Kel-Tec KS-CQB shotgun.

Soren undid the leg from the hand truck it was strapped to and backed away. One of the soldiers picked up the augment and placed it in a duffel bag.

"We've recovered the augment. Returning to HQ now. Recuva Leader out." The infantryman with the shotgun radioed. Soren couldn't hear the words as it was transmitted via a throat mike.

Recuva Leader then turned to Soren. "Thank you for your cooperation." The four men then marched out of his apartment, even having the courtesy to close the door after themselves.

Soren locked the door and sighed. "Remind me never to agree to repair augments from shifty looking dudes."

She got out of bed and rapped on the door. "You and Tony better leave before the nurse comes back," she whispered.

"Right! We're outta here, then! It was good seeing you again, Anne!" Tony told her, noting her strength in lifting him off the ground. "Heh... take care of yourself, and I'll see you again soon!" Grabbing his book, he paused as he noted the rather intimate kisses passing back and forth between the trio and Anne. He stared wide-eyed, a big "what the hell" look on his face.

He was about to say "Oh yeah, sure, no problem. I'm paying for her because you know, I care a lot. Sure, I tried to bed her whilst hyped up on pain meds but... the feelings lingered." Now he was just crashing and burning inside worse than a loaded 747 crashing to Earth. So much for his shot at this... damn... struck out again. But when did this happen? He wasn't even aware the trio had feelings for Anne! Luckless in love... that was him all right.

Swallowing hard, he darted out of the room now and gave a quick "Yeah I'll be sure to loan it to you sometime!", he acted as casually as he could, whistling to himself as he sauntered down the hall and towards the building exit. He acted like he belonged there, and it worked. No one stopped him on his way out to the Delahaye, and it was over and done with before anyone could think twice about the strangely well-dressed ferret in the clinic. What he didn't show anyone was the fact he was fighting back tears, which only rolled after he'd gotten into the car and drove off.

The Next Day

Vergil stood outside the corporate headquarters of Zaloga and glanced at his watch. The others should be arriving soon. He'd caught the metro here, not yet owning a car in Corona due to lack of real income. Behind him, the towering headquarters of Zaloga rose up like a black castle perched high atop a cliff.

Like the points on a compass, Corona's Cronin Plaza (which was a cross shape) contained a massive corporate headquarters building at each of its four ends. Zaloga stood at the southern end, and was the second tallest building in the plaza. It was like a layered mountain, built in a stepped back design; waterfalls tumbled from its various pinnacles and splashed into pools on lower levels from which trees and grass sprouted like makeshift botanical gardens. Part of its architecture was literally designed to make it look like it was a building molding with a giant crag. It was certainly one of the more architecturally stunning buildings in Corona.

The west end of the plaza was taken up by the smallest of the buildings (though that wasn't saying much given the height on each): Serami Heavy Industries' headquarters. Heinz Dupette Serami may have been modest in his choice of headquarters, but he was miles ahead of his next closest competitor, Derami Enterprises, whose headquarters stood at the east end of the plaza. Serami's building was mostly glassy in appearance, a pale blue exterior reflecting all around it on a sunny day. Derami's building across from Serami was a plain black affair, all militaristic and spartan. It was practical, and as it stood taller than Serami's building, rumor had it that Derami stood at the top of his tower looking down with envy at his much more successful rival.

Finally, the most ostentatious and overly showy building on the plaza was Judaken Industries' headquarters. Standing at the north point, it was like a giant sword rising out of the ground. Constructed of a crystalline substance, it reflected pinks and greens rather well in the sunlight. It was over a mile high, and surrounded by four smaller "turrets" as it were. Small was a relative term though when it came to Judaken. Nothing about his presence was small. The building resembled a space shuttle in its shape in a vague sense, but looked mostly like a sword because it wasn't bulky like a shuttle.

Hearing the sound of an approaching old "burner" now, Vergil smiled as he saw a beautiful maroon and silver classic car approaching the Zaloga parking lot. The car was one of Tony's finest, a 1951 Daimler DE-36 that he had decided to drive today as it made him look like he was on official business. The car (http://www.barthworks.com/cars/cussler/photos/1951daimlerde36c.jpg) was a convertible, and as it was a pleasant, warm afternoon, Tony was driving with the top down. Honking as he pulled the big British boat into one of the spots marked as "Guest, Tony killed the engine and got out to pull the top up.

"Sweet ride." Vergil smirked.

"Yeah... the Daimler's always been one of my personal favorites. I almost always use it on business trips. Serves to show I'm a serious kind of guy." the ferret replied, looking at the gecko. "And we're very serious today, after all." he added, with less mirth in his tone now.

Soren was busy making some peanut butter and applesauce sandwiches for everyone. The sun shone brightly through the windows.

"So how was the visit with Anne?" he asked as he poured himself some hot tea. "Is she doing okay?"

soon after a modern hovercar powered into one of the guest spots, a couple of spaces away from tonys car, which was beautiful to look at. Marita got out of the drivers seat, rose got out of the pssenger seat and marie from the back. They were dressed in clothes that suggested business manager or similar professional attire. ' morning Tony, morning Vergil' Rose said in a kind voice ' hope everything is going well with you. ' she added as they gathered around the ferret and gecko. 'so I take it everything is ready/ Marito asked Vergil.

Soren drove his antique (and stolen) Fisker Karma into the parking lot. He emerged from the car and locked the door. Unlike the usual uniform he wore, he was wearing a set of khaki pants and a white, button-down shirt.

He looked around and noticed that Vergil, Marita, Marie, Tony and Rose were already present. "Good morning to you all."

The Human looked around in case someone was listening in or otherwise spying.

The sun's heat beat down on Rio and Lily as he lead her through the grimy streets that networked their way through the sums, promising yet another boiling day. From somewhere in the distance loud rap music was being blasted from a radio, the sound echoing off the worn down buildings and alleyways coated with graffiti.

"...And the food they do there is really good! Once you pick the bug bits out I mean," Rio was telling Lily as they turned off from the street they'd been following and made their way down a twisting, uneven stairway. He knew he was babbling, but being able to walk through this area and talk to someone who wasn't constantly thinking about the next store to rob, or where they'd get their next fix from was... different. Nice. At the bottom of the stairway was a rusty metal gate, which lead through into a large market square. Several stalls had been set up where people were selling all sorts of things, from dubious looking food to knock-off clothing. At this time in the morning, the market was virtually empty. Rio waved at a vendor he recognised, then looked across to the far end of the square. Sure enough, a thin, dark coloured duck was leaning against the wall, his attention focussed on something he was doing on his phone. Rio pointed him out to Lily. "There he is. Same place as always." Leading her across, Rio nudged the duck on the arm. "Hey, Hal. How've you been, man?"

Hal gasped and looked quickly down to see who'd nudged him, and the alarm on his face lessened when he saw it was Rio, though it didn't vanish completely. Rio wasn't sure Hal was capable of looking relaxed. "Oh! Hi, er, hi Rio." His eyes glanced nervously over Lily before returning to the boy. His voice was strained, anxious, and his adam's apple kept bobbing visibly as the duck swallowed almost compulsively. He was small for his age, and unlike most other adults, the jittery duck didn't loom over Rio. "Hey, I, I heard what happened. With the money. What, er, what happened to you? What are you doing here?! They could, could still be looking for you!"

Rio shook his head. "It's kind of a long story. I'll tell you some other time. Look, you know Cock Eater, right? Emilena?"

Hal started. "Emilena. Emilena. She hates, hates being called that... other thing." He paused. "Yeah, I, er, I know her. Why?"

"We need to see her. It's... it's important." Rio glanced at Lily. "Just tell her Lily needs to speak with her. They used to know each other."

Hal wrung his hands nervously. "I don't know... she doesn't like being, being disturbed..." Twitching, he looked back at Lily, and something he saw in her eyes softened his expression. "Oh... okay, fine. I'll, I'll see what I can do. Just wait here. Oh jeez..." Swallowing again for good measure, the duck turned and disappeared up a narrow alleyway that led off from the market square.

Rio turned back to Lily and scratched his head. "That went well. At least we found him on one of his confident days."

Fifteen minutes later, Hal re-emerged from the alleyway, his eyes blinking rapidly as he beckoned them over. "Come on, she, she says she'll see you."

Rio looked up at Lily and gave her an encouraging smile, then started to make his way across.

Axel payed the cab driver then stepped out. Across the street, he could see Soren, Tony and the others hanging around. He bit his lip, his tail flicking uncomfortably as he tried to stop worrying about Lily. He knew the chances of Emilena doing anything to hurt her were low, especially after all they'd done to save her but... he still wasn't comfortable with the idea of her seeking out a gang of drug runners. She'll be fine... she can take care of herself... the rat told himself firmly. Taking a deep breath, he let it out then jogged across the parking lot to where the group stood.

"Hey guys, sorry I'm late!" He waved at them as he drew close. "Lily's still, ah, busy so she can't make it." Axel looked around. "Where's the other one? Er... Tistery?"

"Triste," said a voice behind him, "And I'm right here." Axel jumped, then looked behind him to see the spider gecko making her way over. She made her way around the group and stopped next to Vergil. "So you all turned up. Good." Triste looked at Vergil. "I assume you've got a plan?"

Tony nodded at the girls but didn't say anything, and he greeted Soren with a smile. "Hey, Soren. Good to see you."

Vergil was pleased to see everyone show up. Good... he knew they had his back, and smirked as Triste suddenly put in an appearance. He nodded solemnly. "Of course I have a plan. Tony's going to have to meet with Mace to avoid arousing suspicion, but once his meeting's finished up, instead of taking the elevator down to the ground floor... he'll keep going, and meet us in the sub-level. He can also tell us if any alerts have been raised. Soren..." Vergil looked at the human here. "Since you seemed reluctant earlier, you may accompany Tony if you wish to the meeting, posing as his aide. Otherwise, the rest of us will act as if we're a security inspection detail... these..." He began handing out badges to everyone. "Will get us in as such. We're conducting a surprise inspection of Zaloga's security systems, and will be acting the part. Once we're inside, we make for the elevators, and I'll..." he paused here. "I know it'll come to me... but I'll recall how to access the lower levels once we're inside. I saw how to do it once... and I know it's there... I know I'll be able to recall it."

"Why not just ask about it?" Tony suggested, shrugging.

"Well I'm not sure anyone outside Mace knows about the lower levels. But if you want to risk bringing it up in conversation as perhaps a potential business deal... maybe a smuggling route or something..." Vergil trailed off.

"Hmmm... nah, better not." Tony shook his head.

"Now then... I don't know what we're gonna encounter down there... it may be dangerous. I think this civilization took great care to hide this waypoint... and possibly even protect it. I asked Tony to bring us some weapons, just in case. With these badges, we'll be able to bypass security carrying weapons, but all the same... I think it's best to conceal them, at least until we're down below the building. Don't want to alarm the employees unnecessarily after all."

Vergil instructed.

"Right... so... without further ado..." Tony went over to the Daimler's trunk and popped it open. Help yourselves!" he declared, standing aside to reveal a weapons crate. "I obviously can't carry anything inside, so I'll probably try and hold down the exit for you guys, or join you depending on what's up down there."

"Might want to take an extra weapon for Tony then when he gets down there, and Soren if he's joining Tony." Vergil suggested. "Everyone following so far?" the gecko asked, looking the group over.

"Nice to see you, too." He shook Tony's hand. When Triste arrived and began to speak.", he listened intently.

Soren pondered. He had enough crazy shit happen to him when he was in Lanthae. Figuring that posing as an aide would be a relatively sedate task, he agreed.

"Okay, I've got everything down. So all I do is just essentially take notes or do things like carry Tony's portfolios and other things?" he asked.

Hal led Rio and Lily into an increasingly seedy part of town. Windows were boarded up, shadowy figures loitered in alleyways, and the only sign of friendliness came from the urchins playing Kick the Can in the street.

Hal reached a boarded-up warehouse and knocked five times in a distinct pattern on a rusty door labeled 'KEEP OUT'. After a few minutes, the door audibly unclicked and someone knocked twice in response.

"Don't," Hal warned as Lily stepped forward. "This door shoots you. We use the one around the corner."

After a brief climb up a fire escape, Hal led the two of them into a dingy, cavernous room. Crates, posters and other lived-in makeshift furniture dotted the darkened expanse. It was deathly quiet.

"Hello--?" Lily said tentatively, and was immediately greeted with someone in the blackness hissing "Shhh!" All of a sudden a stagelight snapped on, revealing a thin light-haired fox with his head bowed solemnly and his hand on a microphone stand.

"Nairda!" gasped Lily, pleased to see a familiar face.

Suddenly a beat struck up from the nearby speakers, quick and base-heavy. Snapping up as if in a trance, Nairda busted some passionate raps.

What do you do when you've got a newcomer but no brains to figure them out
You're all wrapped up in the main game, you don't got time for new clout changing the rules and rewriting the plan throwing you on your ass harder than a Lazy Susan...

Lily couldn't stop a wry smile from playing across her face at his inane but heartfelt lyrics. A few minutes later, the rap ended and the lights rose up on the warehouse to reveal the other gang members clapping their hands. Lily quickly joined in, to which Nairda bowed and threw a rose at her feet.

Feeling encouraged, Lily stepped forward. "I need to speak to--" she paused. The only audience members were a bright fuchsia teenage canid and a human running the speaker from his laptop. Where was...

"Who dares to enter the headquarters of the Black Bullets?" Emilena hissed in her ear from the darkness to her left, making her jump.

"You know who I am," Lily responded reflexively, stepping away, "and can I say I'm incredibly disappointed in how you turned out?"

Gone was the military-style crewcut and stiffly pressed wardrobe of the Emilena Lily had known in Lanthae. This Emilena wore a tank-top and baggy sweatpants, her hair was scraggy and uncut. About the only familiar thing was her commanding and condescending attitude.

Emilena glowered back at her through bloodshot eyes indicative of casual drug use. "I thought we agreed not to see each other after last time."

"I need your help. And frankly, you need mine." Lily glanced disapprovingly at the stains on Emilena's clothes. "I recently learned that I had children before the events where we met. The oldest, Ejlert, has gone missing. I want you to help me find him."

"I don't owe you anything!" Emilena stalked around her, back hunched and muscles tensed like an animal. "The past is behind me, and I'm not interested in dredging all this shit up again!"

Lily sighed. "I thought you better than this, but fine." She withdrew the 9,000 credits from her dress pocket. "Half once you've accepted, half once you've done everything you can to find him. You don't even have to succeed."

Emilena's eyes lit up, but she maintained her poker face and sniffed derisively. "We get at least twice that much from the most basic of drug runs."

"I'm not bartering with you," Lily countered firmly, eyes narrowed.

Emilena locked eyes with her. Obviously she was used to debating with drug addicts, who were a bit easier to push around. Finally, she smiled, revealing stained yellow fangs. "You know what? Let's put it to a vote. The Black Bullets always use democracy to choose their hits. No way around it."

The human on the computer sighed audibly, and Hal bristled next to Lily. "Votes are always the same..." he whispered when Lily glanced at him. "She's got her girlfriend and boytoy who always side with her, so doesn't matter what we vote."

Lily took his wings in her hands. "Regardless, please. Vote with me here."

Beads of sweat formed on his forehead. "I, uh, vote we do it."

"Well I don't!" Emilena replied defiantly. Sliding a knife out of the seat of her panties, she began picking dirt out of her nails.

The fuchsia canid sidled up to Emilena's side. Lily couldn't quite place her species. "Neither do I," the canid fawned, wrapping her arms around her leader. Emilena ignored her and instead looked expectedly at Nairda.

Nairda stepped down from the stage, giving Lily a polite curtsy. "I vote that we assist the lovely Lily in her time of need."

"What?" gasped Emilena, flinging the purple apostle off of her. She looked ready to throttle Nairda. The final gang member, sensing an opportunity for Emilena to lose a vote, quickly chimed in "I vote yes too!"

Emilena snarled, suddenly brandishing her knife more threateningly. Lily didn't even flinch. After a few strained seconds, Emilena sheathed her knife. "Goddammit, fine." Stepping forward, she held her hand out expectedly, and Lily handed her half of the credits. Frustratedly looking for someone to display dominance over, Emilena's eyes rested on Rio. "Hey, what do you think you're doing here, tyke?" she hissed unpleasently, eyes glowing. "I never gave you permission to enter our hideout. What do you think I should do about that? I think you should should pay an...entrance fee. How about one ear?"

Axel nodded along with Soren, holstering one handgun and taking a spare. "Alright, that sounds simple enough... I guess," he said as he took his badge from Vergil. "So the rest of us get down to the lower levels, and then what? Do you know what we'd be looking for? How these, ah, coordinates are being kept? Computer?"

As he spoke Axel reached into his jeans for his wallet to store the ID, and frowned when he felt that his pocket was empty. He felt the other side of his jeans. Nothing. Hoping he'd forgotten it at home, Axel slipped the badge into his shirt pocket instead.

Rio had been hanging back as Lily and Emilena had their tense conversation, catching sly glances at Emilena's chest when he thought nobody was looking. When she addressed him he started, paling slightly. "I'm sorry, don't cut off my ear! Or anything else!"

Grimacing, he pulled a wallet out of his pocket and threw it reluctantly over to Emilena. As it arced through the air, it opened and Axel's driver's license was made visible. "See, there's probably money in there!" Rio looked shiftily at Lily. "I... found it."

"I know what we're looking for, but I'm not sure where it is." Vergil confessed. "It's going to be a challenge, I'm sure though. It's in an old... projector is the only way I can think to describe it. But not like from the 60s or anything. I mean like... a holographic projector. That I do remember."

"OK... good. We're all set, then." Tony shoved the trunk of the Daimler shut, and nodded over at Soren. "Yeah basically just act like you're a member of my family here on business. Take notes, and I might 'consult' you from time to time as well. All right everyone... let's do this!" the ferret exclaimed, and he set off first with Soren while Vergil indicated the others should wait a few minutes so as not to give the impression they were together.

As the ferret and human departed, Vergil looked over at Marita. "All right, but don't get caught! Zaloga is a multi-billion dollar corporation that has the best security systems money can buy. If they even sense an incursion, they might go into high alert. I don't want to give them a reason to do that. They're well protected against hackers, after all. A look should be all you get." he cautioned.

Checking his watch to ensure enough time had passed, Vergil finally nodded at the others. "OK... let's go!" he ordered, nodding for them to follow him inside. The interior lobby of Zaloga was beautiful, to say the least. It was like an homage to the great rococo palaces of the past. Colorful black and green marble columns rose up like trees, and a waterfall cascaded down from a hole in the ceiling into a pool in the center of the lobby.

Heavy security checkpoints were at every door however, and the receptionist behind the desk greeted them with a nod, but grew alarmed at the pistols strapped around the trio's legs. She went for the alarm but Vergil held up his pass. "Sorry for the overtness of this, but we're conducting a security check on your systems. Unannounced, so carry on as you were." Much to his chagrin, the gecko's head just barely came over the top of the desk.

"Let me have the card, please." Vergil handed it over, and the receptionist scanned it on a machine. Tense minutes ticked by as the machine read the minute details on the card, and finally, it was over. "Your credentials check out. Sorry about the suspicion sir, but I saw guns and immediately thought the worst."

Vergil smiled as his pass was handed back to him. "Not a problem. Zaloga hasn't been around as long as it has by taking foolish chances, after all." he answered her reassuringly.

"One thing... if you're gonna carry your guns around on the outside, you need your badges visible at all times." the receptionist reminded him.

Marita and the trio had blatantly ignored his advice about keeping the guns concealed, so Vergil nodded. "Of course. We'll mostly be out of sight though, so you'll hardly notice we're here. No worries on that end, as we're only checking a specific section of building security."

She nodded, and temporarily deactivated the scanners as she waved them on through. Fortunately, the elevators weren't too far away, and they would soon be out of sight of building security. Pushing the down button, Vergil waited along the banks of elevators patiently before one dinged and they were able to board.

Vergil stared intently at the set of buttons now as the door closed. OK... time to remember the sequence... what was it? His mind was hazy, but as he glanced at the familiar rows of buttons and numbers, the fog began to lift. "Yes... that's it..." he uttered softly, and he reached out and hit floor 67, B2, 45, 72, and emergency stop in that order. The elevator did nothing at first, then a grinding noise sounded, and suddenly, the elevator began descending. Basement levels 1, 2, and 3 all ticked by, but the elevator didn't stop, and continued descending, going deeper than the B3 level, which was the last one on the indicators. "It worked!" Vergil exclaimed happily.

Barely containing his excitement, he was all grins as he looked at the others. "Oh! So I guess I should ask... Triste and Axel... and hell even Rose and Marie too, since I barely know you, what would you say your skill sets are? When we get down there... we might be tested by defenses or some other thing the civilization left behind. We need to be on our toes down there, and knowing what you're good at will help me out as we proceed forward." he stated. He was particularly interested in Triste's answer, for being one of the government's top agents meant you were no slouch, and he figured she could probably not only kick ass and take names but perhaps bring some other things to the table as well.

The elevator carrying Tony and Soren up passed the floors rather rapidly as they drew higher and higher. Zaloga's headquarters was the second tallest building in the plaza, and Mace's office was on the top floor, along with his penthouse suite. "Hey Soren... you've been living with Anne, right? She ever mention me?" he asked here, tapping his claws on the handle of the briefcase he carried. "Oh! I should probably give this to you, since I don't typically carry my own baggage... it'll make you look official too, like one of my legal aides or something." the ferret suggested, holding it out for Soren to take now.

'i wont really risk it then' marita said before they entered. she showed her id to the receptionist and waited for the all clear. after thatt was given she followed Vergil down the passageway '
well i'm pretty good with getting through small spaces. and i'm pretty good with a firearm. had to show you were competent with a taser to get the job. sometimes players try to pocket and run and then you had to tase them before they leave. ' she said _ well i'm pretty good with a club, i guess' marie said. i havent had much opportunity to use it though.. so this will be a new experience,, see what i'm made of, so to speak.
marita watched them descend well past the B3 listed on the dial ' so how far down does this elevator go? she asked.

Soren nodded. "Yeah. Usually when she was sleeping off a high or something."

He then picked up the suitcase. It was surprisingly heavy for something that was ostenibly filled with papers. He didn't put it above Tony to make the suitcase bulletproof, weighted so he could bludgeon someone with it or even tuck a gun or two in there.

"Anyways, how's Corona treating you?" He shot a glance at the elevator's indicators. They had already climbed past the 70th floor.

Muyee "Marion" Wu was in the company cafeteria of Zaloga Cybernetics. Her powerful metallic arms deftly handled a set of metal chopsticks as she used them to scoop some fried rice with dried fish into her mouth. Of course, she was far from the only Augment in the cafeteria.

While she was clad in the visible ballistic vest of the other security officers, she did not have a holster. Instead, her standard Beretta 92 pistol was tucked inside her prosthetic right leg.

"Hey, Mary," a Vulpine said as he sat down at her table.

Marion gently put down her chopsticks and shot him a withering gaze. "My name is Muyee, or if you can't pronounce it, call me 'Marion'. Get it right." Her voice had the faint Chinese accent that hinted at her birthplace of Shanghai, China."

The Vulpine raised his hands in a defensive posture. "It's cool. I forgot!"

"What are my skills? You mean, apart from my winning smile and kicking ass at Sudoku?" Axel grinned awkwardly at the others. There was a pause.

Triste crossed her arms and stared up at him. "You're an idiot."

"Yeah..." Axel sighed. "Ah, I'm good with computers, so I guess that makes two of us," he said, indicating Marita. "I'm also pretty good with anything electrical." Axel's eyes changed from blue to bright red. "I used to use this when I worked with augments. It lets me see in, ah... energy, I guess you'd call it. So if you want me to find, fix or disable anything electronic, I'm your guy."

"At least it's a little more useful than your smile, rat."

Axel looked down at Triste, and saw a light orange pulse emanating from her form. He flipped his vision back to normal. "Well, what's your deal?"

Triste rolled her eyes, and the next second she was gone. Axel blinked and looked around. "Did she..." The spider gecko reappeared on the other side of the elevator, leaning against the wall. She waggled her spindly fingers. "Peekaboo."

Axel grinned as he realised what caused the orange glow he'd seen. "Cloaking aug..."

"Right. Implanted into my skin." Triste nodded. "Bends light around me. It needs time to recharge, so I can't use it for long stretches of time but... I'm sure it'll come in useful." She neglected to mention it already had, when she'd scouted out each member of the team that Vergil had recommended the night before the meeting.

"Rio!" gasped Lily indignantly. She folded her arms. "I don't know which of you is worse!"

Emilena caught the wallet, withdrew the money out of it, and tossed it back to Lily. "Eh. Guess that'll do. But you better have more next time," she sneered at Rio.

Lily didn't feel like defending him. "Now, what's your plan on--?"

"Have you visited?" interjected Emilena.

"...I beg your pardon?"

"His house. Where his room is. Or met him. Or anything."

"I did visit the house. After he'd gone missing."

Emilena sighed and snapped her fingers. "Flora, I'm gonna need help focusing..." The fuchsia canid came rushing, holding a needle. Without flinching, Emilena grasped it and stabbed it into her arm. "Alright, ready to hear the whole story," she sighed, relaxing her muscles and giving Lily a languid look.

Lily bristled. "Maybe I should come back--"

"The story, sweet cheeks. Now," snapped Emilena. "Or you can take your money and get the fuck out."

Lily wrinkled her nose, but sat down and told the entire story of hers and Rio's visit to her children's house. Nairda, Hal and Flora proved to be an excellent audience, wincing and gasping at all the right moments. The still-seated human, the last gang member whom Lily had not caught the name of, seemed to have better things to do on his laptop than listen.

"Luckily, after that Axel arrived with a taxi after we'd locked Denny in his own dungeon..." she concluded. "It killed me to have to leave my children, and by now he's almost certainly obtained police protection--"

Emilena cut her off dismissively. "Christian's room. What furniture was there?"

Lily thought. "A bed, chest of drawers, um, and lamp."

"What size was the bed?"

"Just twin."

"Describe it."

"Uh, white blanket. Two white pillows. Wooden headrest. Four legs, I don't know."

"Decorations?"

"A few. Some model planes on the ceiling. Top Gun 3 movie poster. Why does Christian's room matter?"

"Did Christian strike you as the sort to care about movies or planes?" Emilena asked pointedly. "You mentioned three doors on the second floor. Logically, we can assume a bedroom for the master, a bedroom for the girls, and a bedroom for the boys. Beds with legs can store an extra mattress under them, and he had two pillows, Denny must have gotten rid of Illard's bed when he scampered off. Illard liked planes, and he abandoned a high school education. You know who doesn't require a high school education?"

Lily folded her arms, not going to grace Emilena with guesses.

"The Air Force," Emilena supplied her own. "Our first step is to check the local recruiting office and see if Illard approached them. Hell, if they accepted him he could have gotten himself overseas in a week, they're desperate for coast guard and border patrol after all the weird shit happening on the news with warships."

Emilena got to her feet. "Let's move out in five. Foley, by then I want a map printed of all the recruiting offices in town. Hal, you hold down the fort while we're gone. Anyone asks, we're signing tyke up for the Army."

"Beats me." Vergil responded, shrugging. "I don't think even back then I knew, as I can't really measure distances from inside an enclosed space." he commented. They were descending for a good few minutes, and Vergil was able to hear everyone speak, and was particularly impressed with Triste's ability to vanish. "Heh... bet that comes in handy for more than one function." the gecko chuckled here, smirking. "Augments are useful... surprised I wasn't augmented to be honest with you... unless of course my mental abilities are an augment in my brain." He tapped his skull now.

After what seemed like maybe three or four minutes, the elevator finally stopped, and then did nothing as the power was cut, plunging the group into darkness. "Uh..." was all Vergil said before the customary "ding" sounded and the doors ominously slid open, revealing a dimly lit corridor stretching on ahead of them. The walls were stone, and sported carvings of ancient buildings and spires that rose to the sky, many pyramidal in design. The carvings were primitive, but still had a certain artistic quality to them that Vergil couldn't help but admire. "Well... let's go." Vergil nodded, starting off at the head of the group and unsure what else to say.

The floor was cold to Vergil's bare feet, and it definitely felt as if no one had been down here in awhile. A brighter light could be seen ahead of them, shining at the end of the tunnel. It drew the gecko forward, like a moth to a flame. Perhaps it was because he didn't like the confined space down here, or perhaps he wanted to get into a more well-lit area, but the gecko quickened his pace down the corridor.

At the end, the tunnel widened, and opened up to reveal a sizable room, much better lit than the tunnel. The source of light however was a mystery, as surely it couldn't be natural light filtering this far down. But nonetheless, beams of what looked like natural light poured in from holes in the ceiling, illuminating several murals on the walls. "Get a load of this!" Vergil gasped, eyes wide as he looked around the room. The murals depicted various things, including what looked like cities and paintings of everyday life from this old civilization. But the dominating feature was the mural in the center. The paint still looked as if had been applied yesterday as a great representation of a massive aerial battleship dominated the entire wall. It ran Vergil's blood cold to see its gray sides, angular and sharp, like knife blades conjoined together by a massive pyramidal structure in the middle of it all. Well it was more like two pyramids joined at the base, one right side up, the other upside down. But it was definitely the central structure of the ship. Painful flashes suddenly entered the gecko's mind, and he clutched his head, closing his eyes and bending over a bit. "Agh! Dammit!" he uttered, trying to shake his head to clear it.

"That's it..." he pointed. "That's what we're looking for." The sheer size of the mural was awe-inspiring, but Vergil noted too that the smaller murals in general were extolling the civilization's accomplishments... including their military conquests, which appeared quite brutal, and very prominently displayed.

Beneath the central painting, Vergil could see a computer console, and beyond that, two heavy steel double-doors led deeper into the facility. To their left and right were doors as well, but much smaller than the ones in their front. "OK... let's see..." Vergil said softly, approaching the console now. Before he could even touch it, it sprang to life, clicking and beeping at him in what Vergil could only assume was some sort of computer language. A garbled voice sounded out, but Vergil couldn't recognize the language. As he glanced down at the command prompts on the screen, he sighed in an exasperated fashion. "Uh... I don't suppose any of you computer whizzes can reprogram this thing to speak English?" he asked hopefully.

Looking behind him at Axel, Vergil nodded at the rat. "Axel... can you get any energy readings behind these doors?" the white gecko inquired, an uneasy feeling washing over him now.

"Sleeping off a high?" Tony asked here. "Yeah... I guess I could settle for that. Huh... well Corona's been pretty fantastic so far. A lot of opportunity here, and it's a lot safer than Lanthae was too. Lanthae you only had designated areas for the rich, and sure, to an extent Corona's got that too, but it has a lot more areas you can walk around in without fear of being mugged or jumped by some drug dealer." he commented, smiling dryly.

As the elevator reached the 200th floor, it opened to reveal a suite just as pleasant as the lobby, almost 3,500 feet below them. Plants grew out of the floor, kept healthy through some sort of biological process contained within the very heart of the building. All the nutrients were fed into the greenery from conduits that ran upward, and sunlight was provided through a glass ceiling directly above their heads.

Another reception desk (this one marble) greeted them at the exit of the elevator, with a female human secretary busily tapping away at a computer. She didn't even look up at first to acknowledge them, nor did she need to, as standing before them was a dignified looking blue skinned gecko. He wore a confident smile on his face, but it was warm as well.

"Tony Stracci! In the flesh! It's so nice to finally meet you!" Mace Sardolemuel extended his hand warmly in greeting, his natty business attire looking sharp on him, but he was always wearing a slightly dress-down style too, as if he saw this meeting as a more casual affair.

Tony heartily shook Mace's hand, and responded. "Yes! It's great to meet you as well, Mr. Sardolemuel!"

"Oh please, call me Mace!" Mace replied humbly, as if he were no big deal. "And this is?" he asked, looking at Soren.

"Ah yes, one of my most trusted legal attaches..." Tony didn't name Soren though, in case the human wanted to present his own false name to Mace as Mace held out his hand for Soren.

I'll get working on it ' Marita said crackling her fingers and headed up to the console. ' 'shouldn't take me more than a couple minutes to get a rough translation' she said and began typing away at the console, her claws flying over the keys. Gradually the console and voice changed to English ' those who would enter , speak the code' said the voice in a soft, garbled and distant voice ' speak the code? great, Vergil do you remember any sort of password that was used to get past those doors?' Marita said motioning to those doors 'think, Vergil, we need to move quickly and locate the other waypoints..

Rio frowned. "Hey, I've got a name, you know!" he protested, feeling a little more confident now that he could see Emilena really was going to help Lily. "It's Rio, not tyke. Tyke, tyke, tyke!" Spying an open crate at the top of a large stack, he wandered over and scuttled up, spider-like, to the top, perching on the edge and sifting through its exposed contents.

"I think there's some kind of army recruiting place about fifteen minutes from here," Rio called down to the rest of them over his shoulder, as he dragged out a handgun that seemed practically as big as he was. "I'd be awesome in the army," he muttered to himself as he hooked the trigger around his finger and started spinning the gun, just like the actors in the old westerns he'd seen. As the barrel rotated towards the people stood in the room, the gun clicked several times - luckily, it wasn't loaded.

As Marita worked on the translation, Axel walked around the console to the large set of double doors. He blinked and his eyes clicked, swapping to red. He didn't see anything - no pulse, no signs of anything beyond. "Hmn... I'm not picking anything up..."

Standing beside Vergil, Triste crossed her arms. "So there's nothing waiting for us on the other side? No traps?"

Still looking the large, steel doors up and down, Axel eventually shook his head. "Not that I can tell, but..." He reached out a hand and gingerly knocked on the door's surface. There was a heavy, dull clunk. "Yeah, these doors are, ah, pretty thick. Could be blocking out any signal behind them. We should probably be careful, just in case." He shrugged, starting to turn. "Whoa!"

"What?" Triste demanded, her hand edging cautiously towards her knife.

Axel was looking at the smaller set of doors to the right. "There's definitely something behind here though..." Something on the other side of the door was emitting a bright orange glow, almost taking up the whole doorway. "Whatever it is, it's got a lot of energy." He turned to look at the doors to the left. "Crap... same here, too." The rat looked at the rest of the group. "Should we, ah... open them?"

Soren looked around the elevator for any traces of bugs or other potential . Ever since the incident in Lanthae, he had become much more paranoid. While the augment worker's gear he wore underneath his loaned business suit wasn't bulletproof, it was capable of dispersing any impact short of getting hit by a car.

The elevator emitted a gentle ding as it reached the 200th floor.

He stood back as Tony introduced himself to Mace. This was for two reasons: 1.) to further reinforce his role as Tony's subordinate; 2.) to react if something wrong.

When the Human was introduced to Mace, Soren took the Gecko's hand in his own and offered a firm shake. "James Miardan."

The gecko shook his head at this. "No... I don't remember anything like that!" he insisted. "There was no code last time! It was... it was something else... more like a trial or test..." he murmured, trying to remember.

He looked over as Axel reported high energy readings on both side doors. "Mmm... I don't see how they can be opened without interfacing with the computer." he responded. He nodded for Marita to stand aside, and he looked down at the screen. "Hell if I know about any code... nothing like that sounds familiar to me at all." He noticed now that one of the command prompts was a bypass, and he reached out and selected that option. "Screw it... just bypass the code."

"Only the worthy may proceed." the computer stated, this time in a stronger, more resonant voice that echoed throughout the room. A light blue beam shot out from the terminal and danced over Vergil's white form, lines playing about him as it was no doubt scanning him. "Welcome, traveler. Those who seek the awesome power of the Retarans must prove themselves worthy. Three challenges await for those wishing to prove their worth. The worthy shall proceed... the unworthy... shall die." the machine stated coldly, and the doors on the left and right began to slide up and into the wall now with a hiss.

Vergil turned to glance inside the right-hand door, and could see another computer console within, but also something else... something moving within the darker room. Spindly legs unwound from a circular body as the sickly pale blue light of the console revealed a multitude of robots. They each sported a single red eye that glowed like a burning fire as their heads rotated to fix the party with deadly glares. Deadly indeed, for a red beam shot out right for Vergil's head, and the gecko just barely managed to flip backwards and upwards over the beam before it caused a small explosion in the floor behind him.

Landing with a pant, Vergil could see the machines advancing on them from either side of the room from the two doors, marching out in formation and into the light, fully revealing their bodies to the party. They stood on six legs, and had a circular body of some material that looked like polished chrome. A long, serpent-like neck extended from the top of the body atop of which rested the head, which was flat and resembled an arrow-head and was a duller tan in color. The tip of the arrow-head contained the eye, which whirred as it moved.

It was like a grotesque combination of an insect and snake and like nothing found in nature. At the "knees" of each leg rested what looked like a laser cannon of some sort, and they began leveling themselves at the party.

There were three on each side, for a total of six surrounding the group. Pulling out his energy blade and igniting it, Vergil adopted a combat stance. "Whatever it is they're selling, I don't want!" he exclaimed. "Let's take these things out!" he shouted, and leaped towards the nearest one as the machines began to open fire...

Tony commenced the proceedings with Mace as Mace had his guests sit across from him around a coffee table in his suite. It was in stark contrast to what was going on thousands of feet below the ferret, human, and gecko as they talked. It was the absolute lap of luxury up here, and Mace was negotiating with Tony for his company's shipping rights whilst offering them tea and select finger foods.

Tony was attempting to negotiate a reasonable rate for his services, and for the most part, Mace seemed interested. During a lull in the conversation, Tony asked if he and his "aide" could take a restroom break, and the request was granted. Tony was shown towards the bathrooms for visitors, but before they entered, he motioned for Soren to stop. "So I'm not sure if he bugs his own suite, and while I doubt it, I don't want to take any chances. I want to know how things are going below us, so maybe once we return, you could pretend to get a call and excuse yourself, then see if you can reach the others just to check in. Text me what you've found out before returning back, OK?" the ferret asked.

So i;m guesing these.. things' are the test" marita said as the robots entered the roof. after one of them fired at tony, marita pulled out her gun. Rose and Marie drew their weapons as well, and began opening fire on the Machines bullets impacted against the chrome covering the central parts of the bodies, and casings began falling to the ground. the girls were forced to shoot on the run as they dodged the machines return fire. with 36 cannons and all, they were being forced to constantly move..

Soren took notes throughout the meeting. He maintained a detached but yet confident expression as he watched Tony and Mace. Most of the conversation, he barely understood but all he needed to do was record and "consult" with Tony.

Of note was that he politely nibbled the finger foods and drank the tea. But fearing it might have been laced with drugs, he took very small bites and sips, taking care not to swallow but to keep the food under his tongue.

When the request for the bathroom break was granted, the Human went inside to relieve himself ó and spit out the food and drink he had secreted under his tongue. After washing his mouth out, he exited and listened to Tony's command.

"Gotcha," he said to Tony, programming his smartphone's alarm to go off, hoping everyone would assume it was a call. He then looked around the opulent hallway to make sure no one was coming. "You didn't touch any of the food or drink, right?"

While waiting for Emilena to come back, Lily became aware that the fuchsia canid, whom Emilena had called Flora, was sneaking up behind her smiling.

"Er, hello...." smiled Lily weakly.

"So you and Emi promised not to see each other again..." murmured Flora, winking coyly. "Were you two...an item?"

"No, no we weren't," Lily clarified hastily. "That is not what we were. Also, I'm happily married.

"I figured," Flora giggled softly. "You're not really her type, no offense."

"None taken." Lily took a few steps back; Flora had rather obliquely invaded her comfort zone. "So, uh, what do you do around here? For the gang? If you don't mind me asking?"

Flora blushed shyly and covered her mouth. "I'm the team driver. I'm certified to drive over fifty different types of vehicles, including most construction equipment, trains, and school buses."

"Are you? Where exactly did you get certifications for all of those?"

Flora only giggled. Lily didn't quite like the looks she was getting.

"Um, nice talking to you Flora, but I'm...gonna go say hi to Nairda. It's been a while."

Flora sidled off acquiescently, leaving Lily to gratefully go greet the light-furred fox resetting the microphone back up. "Hey Nairda!" she smiled.

Nairda's eyes lit up. "I am blessed to have your beauty grace my sight again!" he bowed and chivalrously kissed her hand. "I wish only that our meeting could come under less strenuous times."

"Maybe after this Emilena will be more interested in keeping in touch." Lily glanced at the other gang members. "Quite a crowd you two have wound up with."

"Too true..." chuckled Nairda. "They're all supportive friends. How did you like my power ballad?"

"It was very...powerful."

"My goal in life is to be a rapper. I've been performing on the streets, waiting for the day a record label exec hears me and gives me the venue to show the world my passion!" A single tear trickled down Nairda's cheek at the thought.

"That's the spirit!" Lily patted him on the back. "You put your mind to it, there's nothing you can't accomplish!"

Nairda beamed appreciatively, but just then Emilena returned. Gone was her baggy sweatpants and tank top, now she was dressed in crisp officer's fatigues, smartly pressed with gleaming buttons and golden epaulettes. Even Lily had to admit she'd cleaned up quite nicely.

Nairda beamed appreciatively, but just then Emilena returned. Gone was her baggy sweatpants and tank top, now she was dressed in rugged black jeans and a crisp dark jacket over a white button-down shirt. Even Lily had to admit she'd cleaned up quite nicely.

"At attention!" barked Emilena, drawing a riding crop and smacking Nairda across the face to encourage everyone to actually follow her order. Even Lily jumped in line and straightened her back. "Now, the story is that we're from the Rockwell Community College, hoping to get community service hours at the dig site. Young Rio Grande is our trump card; to get another sap into the ranks they'll ignore everything to let us through the front door. Once we're in, Nairda and Flora, you are in charge of doing something stupid to give Foley a chance to get his hands on some tech. Lily, your job is to get Rio back when we leave, before he signs something and writes off the rest of his life. Ideally we do this clean, keep it simple, and get out with what we need to know. Now move!"

"Is she always like this?" Lily whispered to Nairda, as the gang members marched out the warehouse door.

"Only when there's money or an orgasm involved," Nairda muttered back, smirking, then got hit with the riding crop again.

As the doors slid up and the machines revealed themselves, Axel stared up at them blankly. Standing between the two groups, he was quickly surrounded, standing amongst their spindly legs. He blinked at the warning given by the console. "Ah, Vergil... I think you pressed the wrong button..." The cannons mounted on the legs started to swivel towards the group, and Axel's ears flattened. "Aw, fuck!" They opened fire and Axel, having nowhere else to go, jumped up and wrapped his arms and legs around the underside of the machine's body, hanging on for dear life as the cannon fire exploded beneath him.

Triste dived to the right as one of the beams flew towards her. Rolling on her landing, she started running around the perimeter of the room, keeping her eyes on both the machines and Vergil. "I feel like this is probably something you should've remembered!" she shouted across, keeping her speed up so she wouldn't be an easy target. One of the beams came too close for comfort, tearing a chunk out of the wall next to her. Triste leaped through the dust and stone chips. "How the hell do we kill these things?!"

Hearing her shout, Axel forced his eyes open. His back felt red hot from the cannon fire exploding just beneath him. He flipped his vision and looked up at the robot, searching its body. There! He could see what appeared to be a denser area of pulsating energy, on the top. Panting with exertion, Axel struggled to pull himself up along the side, and up onto the top of the machine's body. Seeming to sense that something was on top of it, the machine started to buck, trying to throw him off. Now a more exposed target, the others had started firing shots at him too but thanks to the machine's thrashing, none of them found their mark. Swearing under his breath, the rat wrapped an arm around the robot's neck and looked down for the source of energy. Protruding slightly from the smooth surface was a darker coloured compartment, what appeared to be a power source for the machine. Yanking his handgun from beneath his shirt, Axel pressed the barrel against the compartment and pulled the trigger, again and again, the impacts jolting his arm until the gun clicked. The machine he was riding on jerked then suddenly stopped moving. After a second, the legs collapsed beneath it and the main body dropped heavily to the floor, causing Axel to bite his tongue as he landed with it.

"Yougottashootthethingontheirback!" he cried as he rolled off it and scrambled under for cover.

"What?!" Triste yelled back over the explosions reverberating around the room.

"You have to break the things on their backs!" came Axel's panicked reply, slightly tinny beneath the metal he was hiding under.

Gritting her teeth, Triste dodged another round of fire then jumped onto the nearest machine, using her hooked knife to swing herself up on it. Catching sight of the compartment, she raised the knife and plunged it back down as hard as she could.

Rio watched from above as Emilena rounded everyone up and went through the plan. When she ordered them to move out, he dropped the gun back into the crate and jumped down, landing nimbly beside Lily and Nairda. He grinned up at the two adults. " This is fucking awesome, I've never been a trump card before."

Glancing at Lily's pocket where she'd stored the rest of the credits, he turned hopeful doe-eyes towards her. "So... am I gonna get paid? I am helping..."

Vergil's blade sliced through one of the legs of his opponent, but much to the gecko's chagrin, he found the other five were more than sufficient to hold the mechanical creature upright. The sharp points at the ends of the legs were potent weapons, as Vergil soon found out. He shortly found himself on the business end of one of the sharp points, and ducked to avoid getting slashed or impaled.

He shot his blade upward, burying it into the underbelly of the drone, but found he couldn't maintain this position long as he was soon forced out from underneath the robot by its legs. Skidding to the side, he wondered about weak points. The carapaces seemed to be bulletproof, as evidenced by the sounds of ricocheting shots he could hear from around the room.

Damn! They must have a weak point somewhere! Their underbelly didn't seem to be as vulnerable as he thought, unlike most creatures who struggled to constantly protect their underbellies in a fight. Leaping up onto the backside of his opponent, he swung his sword violently and sliced off the head from the neck, the neck flailing like a loose garden hose as its head clattered to the floor. But apparently it didn't need its head to see, as the laser cannons swiveled over to him. Damn thing must have cameras or sensors all over its body.

But then the sound came of a machine thudding onto the floor, lifeless. Snapping his head in the direction of Axel, Vergil was surprised to see the rat had triumphed. He yelled something incoherent at first, and Vergil strained to hear. It sounded like something on the backside. Fortunately, Triste asked again what the rodent had said, and it was repeated. The things on their backs?

Tearing his gaze downward, the gecko could indeed see the small hump on the back. There! Crying out, he jammed his sword downward, and shoved it deep into the back of the mechanical death machine. Watching as sparks flied out like a torch to steel, the creature began twitching violently, and finally had its legs give out from under it as it collapsed. "That's it!" Vergil shouted. "Great find, Axel!" he called over.

Triste's opponent began seizing violently as well, and it too fell to the ground. "It's the weak spot on the back!" Vergil yelled, sliding down off the circular body before running towards the other three that were still up and standing, and still very much a threat.

Tony tensed up as Soren mentioned the food. "Well... Mace was eating and drinking too... I didn't see the harm. Why?" the ferret asked now, looking down the hallway to make sure they were still alone. "I mean... Mace Sardolemuel is I'd say one of the more honorable CEOs of the Big Four, or at least, that's the impression I got. You don't think..." Tony trailed off here, hoping their suspicions weren't true. He felt fine so far...

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Serris on May 26, 2014, 12:28:53 AM

Soren narrowed his eyes. "I dunno. Anything's possible here. But either way, something just feels 'off' to me." He pulled out his smartphone and checked the time.

"Speaking of which, we should return before Mace gets suspicious."

The duo made their way back to the boardroom. "After you," the Human said, stepping aside to let his "superior" through first.

Marion was positioned inside one of the watchtowers that ringed one of many manufacturing plants owned by Zaloga Cybernetics. Next to her was Morris Ailee, a Baseline Shorthair Feline. Like her, he was clad in a helmet, ballistic vest and carried LR-24 magnetic accelerator rifle. Topping the gate and high, electrified walls were coils of electrified concertina wire.

"Slow day, today," Morris said, peering through his comp-noculars. For fun, he locked onto a hoverbike that screamed through the airways with a frameflyer in pursuit.

"Don't tempt fate," Marion replied. She kept her steely gaze on the road to the factory. The Human was sitting at a desk that allowed her to remotely control the .30 caliber machine gun turrets that flanked the gate.

"Oh come on, the last time we had a major issue was three days ago when we caught those Derami Enterprises saboteurs at one of railyards."

"Don't. Remind. Me." The words were spoken between gritted teeth. That particular incident earned her a commendation and a 35,000 credit bonus...and a busted right arm that had been locked in the "open" configuration, exposing the deadly blade.

(OOC - comp-noculars are binoculars that combine a rangefinder and zoom functions as well as video recording and still picture recording function. Expensive models have night vision, infrared, UV, HUD displays and even echolocation/sonar capabilities.)

Triste grunted as she yanked the knife from the back of the machine, sparks flying upwards towards her face. Looking across the room, she could see there were still three more up and about. Leaping off, she sprinted behind Vergil towards them.

From under the body of the machine he'd 'killed', Axel could feel the ground vibrating slightly as one of the others approached. If he was spotted, he'd be as good as dead. Swearing, Axel started to crawl out from beneath his cover, and he was almost free... when an explosion from nearby rocked the circular body of the machine, rolling it over and down onto his leg, pinning him down. Axel yelled, leaning back to try and push it off but it was much too heavy. Around him, canon fire continued to explode as the others battled the machines. He struggled to pull himself free, his fingers scratching against the floor's smooth surface as they tried to find purchase. Suddenly, there was a mechanical whirring behind him. The rat turned over apprehensively. Standing over him, another machine stared down at him. The eye focused on Axel, and it raised one of its legs with the point angled downwards.

Axel gasped and pulled out his gun, aiming it up at the robot and desperately pulling the trigger repeatedly. The gun just clicked uselessly - he'd already spent all the bullets on the last one. "Oh, son of a bitch..." The machine darted the razor edge of the spike down at him and Axel cried out, throwing up his arms pointlessly.

Triste rocketed out of nowhere, slamming into the side of the machine's leg and throwing off its aim. The spike crashed into the ground next to Axel's head. Holding onto the leg, Triste wrapped her limbs around and shimmied up to the top of the body. Yelling, she sliced through the robot's neck-like structure, then stabbed the power source on its back repeatedly. It jerked, then started to fall too. She jumped off and landed next to Axel as the machine hit the floor with a crash.

Axel blinked up at her, his ears splayed. "Holy shit... thanks..." Triste rolled her eyes at him and darted off. The rat struggled around. "Hey, wait! I'm still stuck here!" he cried.

Marita had found the weak point on the machines and had felled one with a volley of well-placed shots. she was headed towards the other pair which were still standing.Rose heard Axel's cries and had cut back towards him, reaching him in about a minute. ' these things mean business dont they ?' she said, reaching under the machine and began straining to lift it off Axel enough so he could get out from under it. Marie was climbing up one of the two surviving machines. she had snuck up behind it and jumped onto it while it was distracted by the others. once she reached the weak point in its back, she opened fire, sending 4 bullets into the machine and causing it to stop with a shudder, wobble then fall forward with a loud crash and kick up a row of sparks as pieces of the machine snapped off on impact and rolled away ' just one left' she called out to the others as she landed safely in front of the defeated creature.

Vergil could see Rose struggling to lift the machine off of Axel (and good luck with the weight these things must be), so he helped her out by throwing out his hand and lifting the dead weight up slightly telekinetically as he ran, and then shoving it backwards a bit, giving Axel hopefully enough time to scramble out from underneath.

OK... just the one left... but Marie handled it, though in the chaos of the moment, she accidentally announced there was one left, but there wasn't. All six had gone down at this point. Panting, Vergil was finally able to skid to a halt, and refocused on moving the rest of the machine off Axel, picking it up again with his mind and moving it further off the rat. "Whew! Well... that's one challenge down! Two to go!" he announced. "You all right, Axel? Anything broken?" the gecko asked as he began walking over and extinguished his blade.

He noted now that the two side doors were open and available for inspection, and could also see another computer console apiece in each room. "Hmmm... wonder if these are the two remaining challenges." he stated thoughtfully aloud. "Maybe we should divide up and take 'em both at once." he suggested, glancing down at Axel now.

Up above, Tony nodded, and pulled out his phone as he thought of something last minute. He didn't know if Zaloga had cameras monitoring their parking lots, but he wasn't going to take any chances. He couldn't leave the Daimler loaded with weapons sitting outside for long, so it was time to change cars. Fortunately, he had a service back home for this, and promptly dialed it.

Upon getting an answer on the other end, Tony spoke quickly as they walked. "Hi. I'm gonna need the Daimler to be picked up and brought back to the garage. I'll need a replacement car ready for me at Zaloga though. Let's make it the... Delage." Tony settled on, going with one of his father's luxury French brands. "As soon as you can, OK? Thanks." Hanging up, Tony knew they'd drive the Delage out for him, leave it at Zaloga, and take the Daimler back with one of the spare sets of keys. Of course, Tony could unlock any of his cars by inputting a code on his phone, so he didn't have to worry about them locking the keys in the Delage when they dropped it off.

Reentering Mace's meeting area, Tony wrapped a smile back on his face and sat down. "All right... now that that's out of the way... let's get back to business." Tony recommenced the conversation with Mace, being a tad more aggressive here now that they were down to the nitty-gritty details, and waiting for Soren's phone to "ring."

Just give us a couple minutes to recuperate' rose said beathing heavily as she took a seat on the ground. Marita and Marie came up to them ' nice work guys' Marita said. vergil i'm going to need you to have me trabslate the two challenges into English and give us an idea of what we will be facing. I'll translate the one to the left first-v we can have a few folks tackle that- then i'll translate the right.' She Said.

Triste moved up to stand with the group as Axel pulled himself upright and put weight on his leg gingerly. "No, I think everything's alright... Ah crap!" He bent down for a closer inspection.

"Are you hurt?" Triste demanded. If he was, it could be a serious liability to the group.

Axel straightened. "I broke a shoelace." Kicking the shell of one of the machines, he made his way across and peered into one of the side rooms cautiously. Given what the previous one had summoned, the consoles in these rooms now seemed positively ominous. "Call me crazy, but if that was the first challenge, I've got a bad feeling about the rest of them..." He swallowed. "But hey, what's a Monday if there aren't giant killer robots trying to murder you?" Axel turned. "Splitting up would save us time, I guess."

Sheathing her knife, Triste nodded. "Agreed. Seems like three for each room would be fair." She glanced at the three women. "I take it you don't want to split up? If that's the case, that makes the second team Vergil, Whent and me." Triste looked at the gecko. "Unless you had other ideas?"

Soren took notes and listened as Mace and Tony negotiated the finer points of their potential business deal.

It was then his phone went off. "Excuse me," he said, rising from his seat and exiting the meeting room.

He entered the bathroom and looked around to ensure that no one was coming. Satisified that all was clear, he took out the phone and texted Axel and the others: "Tony's in meeting with Mace. Status down there?.

He then switched over to the Internet browser, checking the local news.

Vergil was only breathing slightly heavier than normal, his body still in good shape despite having been in that tank for who knows how long. He regarded Marita in profile as she suggested she translate the other two consoles. "You translated the master console, so I don't think any further translation is necessary. But I'll let you know if it is or not." he informed her.

Vergil chuckled at the joke Axel made after initially letting concern wash over him at the prospect of the rat being injured. "Heheh... oh no! Not the shoelaces!" he exclaimed, smiling here. "How are your shoes gonna stay on now?"

Triste interrupted him with a question about who should go where. "Uh... nope! That sounds good to me!" Vergil responded, nodding. "We'll take the one on the right, and you girls can take the left-hand one." the gecko suggested.

Leading the way, he stepped into the door on the right hand side. He was acutely aware of something above him, and shifted his gaze upward, noticing hundreds of gleaming bodies above him. Even in the dim light, they were unmistakable. He froze in his tracks, his eyes wide as he gazed up at the shiny ceiling. Hundreds of those robots they'd just fought were above them, but not moving... they almost appeared like they were sleeping. They didn't seem to react to his presence either, and Vergil immediately surmised that they only activated as part of the first challenge, and it certainly explained how this place had plenty to challenge potential seekers of the warship. Gulping, Vergil inched forward, but still got no reaction. "I guess... they only wake up on certain triggers." the gecko stated nervously. "Still... let's not make any sudden moves." he suggested.

He closed his eyes, trying to remember this and yes... it did ring very familiar with him. He felt certain he was right about this. He wasn't sure how... he just knew. Approaching the console cautiously, he touched it, and it sprang to life. A foreign language quickly dissolved into English as Vergil read the screen.

Greetings, traveler. Only the worthy my proceed. Answer the question and proceed on your quest: What three biomes most support life?

Oceanic
Desert
Volcanic
Arboreal
Grassland
Tundra

Vergil smiled here. "Heheh, a biology lesson it seems. I guess the Retarans valued uh... biomes?" he asked here. "Anyway, I'm guessing oceanic, arboreal, and grassland. What do you guys think?" he asked, looking behind him now, and then glancing warily upwards.

marita followed trieste suggestion and turned her attention to the left console and headed over there ' the question it asked was similar to the question asked on the right, but with one big difference... "which three biomes support death?" Marita said staring at Rose and Marie as they crowded around to look at the possible answers ' volcano' marie said holding up a finger ' because when one erupts it destroys anything in its path' ok that makes sense marita said punching it in. desert' Rose said ' especially if you get lost iin it. ' there are hot and cold deserts, but yeah thats another' marita saisd selecting it, and for her last selectuion she picked tundra ' it gets to 100 below in parts od the arctic. you get caught out there without protection you're dead within a few minutes.' marita said and presed the button for that, and waited for the console to reply. the three girls looked up at the hordes of quiet machines above them.

Axel followed Vergil and Triste into the room, grimacing as he followed Vergil's gaze and took in the mass of robotic bodies above them. "Holy crap..."

Triste folded her arms as she thought over the question posed by the console. "Sounds about right," she nodded at Vergil's answer, keeping her voice low. "Tundra, volcanic and desert biomes would offer more extreme conditions, so..." She looked over at Axel. "What do you think?"

The rat tore his eyes from above and blinked at her. "Erm."

After a pause, she muttered, "You don't know what any of it means, do you?"

"Not enough to risk, like, a million machines dropping on us."

Triste sighed. "Would it kill you to open a textbook every now and then?"

"Hey! Biology was never my... you know, thing," Axel hissed. "You two sound like you know what you're talking about. Go for it." At that moment, Axel's phone chirped happily as a text message came through. The beep echoed around at the room, and Axel felt his fur stand on end as he snapped his neck upwards, expecting to be met with a deathly hail of cannon fire. But it seemed like the machines were still inactive. Letting his breath out slowly, he looked down at the two geckos and grinned sheepishly. "Guess I should put this thing on silent..."

Triste gritted her teeth and resisted the urge to slice his head off.

Pulling his phone out, Axel read the text from Soren and quickly tapped out a reply. Big killer death machines down here, but we're all okay. Looks like we're getting close. Place is weird as hell. Keep safe, should be done soon.

"Oceanic, arboreal, and grassland," Triste said, turning back to Vergil and shaking her head. "It has to be those." Even so, she kept a claw on the hilt of her knife, cautious of a trick to the question.

The phone buzzed as Soren recieved the text. He exited the web browser and read the text.

He then texted Tony. "Others okay. Fought machines. Think they're getting close."

Flushing the toilet to divert suspicion, he pocketed the phone and washed his hands. A Fruit Bat businessman exited the other stall and washed his hands as well. Soren avoided eye contact as he deliberately took his time in washing his hands. It worked; the man left.

That finished, Soren exited the bathroom and returned to the meeting room.

"All right... let's go with it." Vergil stated, and pushed down on the three choices. The options disappeared, and the words on the screen appearing now read "Congratulations. The worthy may proceed." The console shut off, and while there was a tense moment before when Axel's phone went off, it didn't seem to disturb the mechs above them, fortunately.

On the other side of the room, opposite Axel, Vergil and Triste, the trio's answer was also correct, and the console deactivated. The middle doors began to grind open now, a deep rumbling sounding as they parted and started to slide away from each other. "Hey! I think that did it!" Vergil exclaimed, moving out of the side room and towards the center now. "Good work!" he called over to the girls, and began walking towards the center doors. Inside, he could see what looked like a holographic projector which matched the one from his memory, and the white gecko couldn't help but to smile widely at it. "Excellent! I think this is it!" he declared, growing excited as he quickened his pace.

The projector suddenly sprang to life, and a decent sized projection of the planet Earth was suspended above then now, blinking to life slowly as various continents were mapped with thousands of dots to create images. As the map came into being, it started to rotate, much like the Earth. Vergil narrowed his eyes, and noted the emergence of four red dots, bright and prominent upon four separate locations of the globe.

One was in the deserts of Egypt, but not near the famed Great Pyramids. Instead, it was further south, in Upper Egypt, and might even possibly be in the Nubian Desert. The second appeared in the jungles of South America, and Vergil had to guess it was around Bolivia or Peru; he wasn't great on geography of that region of the planet. The third was located in a remote region of the Atlantic, about midway between Brazil and Africa. Finally, the fourth one was over in southern China, and if Vergil had to guess, he'd say Hong Kong.

"OK... yes... I remember this now... we got the first one... all five will reveal the location of Torment's Cataract... now... I remember we get to select one at each waypoint... but only one. The coordinates will be revealed, and then the map shuts off. So... the question is... where do you guys want to go next? We can select any one of these... but only one. We'll need to go to all four eventually, but we need to start somewhere. Now if I recall... I've been to the ones in Egypt, South America, and the Atlantic. I can't recall anything about the Chinese one, so I'm unsure if I've been out there or not. It's possible that's the one Rex didn't locate before he was killed. So yeah... what's it gonna be, guys? Any preferences?"

The globe continued to slowly spin in front of them, doing nothing until it was interacted with.

"By the way, who sent the text message?" Vergil asked Axel here, raising his brow.

Up above, Tony received Soren's text, and knew he'd have to start wrapping this up. Machines? Damn... it must be serious down there. "Ahem..." he nodded as Soren reentered. "Well, Mace. I think we're getting down to the final details. I'd be willing to go at a rate of 35% of the expected cargo value, plus you cover tolls and fees. In return, you get clean shipments, no questions asked, and of course, the added bonus of having the mob come down on anyone who screws with your shipments. Wouldn't be anyone alive out there who'd be willing to touch your stuff after that, what with your power and our power joined. What do you say?"

Mace frowned here thoughtfully, and tapped a finger on the glass table. "Well..." he said, trailing off.

"I'll throw in a 5% discount for the first three months as a sign-up bonus to give you an idea if you like it or not! How's that?" Tony quickly put in, seeing Mace was hedging.

The gecko continued to hesitate, and then finally nodded. "Deal!" He reached across the table, and Tony shook his hand firmly.

"Excellent! You won't regret it! My aide will present you with the necessary documents to sign. Thanks for the consideration! It'll be a real pleasure doing business with you!" Tony looked over at Soren here. "Let the others know the deal was a 'success.'" Tony stated, giving the human a look the ferret hoped he would catch. The others being everyone down below, as Tony would of course be breaking the news to his family himself.

Aboard the Red Castle, Kalis stood on the bridge of his mighty flagship with narrowed eyes, gazing out into the sky as he plotted his next moves. He needed to get his hands on two things: the warship at Torment's Cataract, and Agent Triste Acyle. These two things would ensure his total victory over the Federation's forces, but so far, both had eluded his grasp.

Suddenly, Admiral Carrack was beside him. "Lord Kalis." Carrack began. "The tracking device we installed on the waypoint under Zaloga has activated. Someone's accessing the waypoint as we speak."

Kalis's interest suddenly rose, and he looked over at his fleet admiral now. "Really? It's been years... any information on who is doing the accessing?" Kalis inquired, his eyes alight with fire now.

"Mostly unknown neural signatures, but one in particular has a 95% chance of being Agent Triste Acyle." Carrack responded, glancing down at his datapad.

Kalis's breath came out in a wheezing exhale of satisfaction, and he nodded. "Gooooood!" He clasped his hands together in front of his chest. "Find out where she's going next... I'll dispatch one of my newest and brightest to hunt her down."

"And the others?" Carrack asked.

"They'll be killed. They're of no use to me." Kalis said dismissively, waving his hand. "This is perfect... I can kill two birds with one stone. Summon Varanus. I want him here within a day." Kalis ordered.

"Yes, my lord." Carrack bowed his head respectfully, and headed off to complete the order. Kalis shifted his gaze back out the front viewports. If his mouth wasn't concealed by that metallic lower jaw, he'd be grinning right now. But as it was, he settled for an intense look forward, towards what he knew was his destiny.

Soren opened the briefcase and presented the papers to Mace. He glanced at Tony.

As he watched Mace look over the papers. He hoped that things hadn't gone horribly wrong down there.

(Corona streets near Zaloga Cybernetics Manufacturing Plant #21)

A klaxon wailed as Marion and a Baseline Cheetah sprinted after a saboteur. While Mace was negotiating a deal with Tony, a few Bak Long 49'ers had managed to bypass the factory's defenses by having frame-flyers fly underneath the elevated platform the factory was on and using plasma cutters to cut through the concrete floor. Once they were in, they proceed to plant explosives.

Marion looked around. She raised her rifle and fired a few shots at the 49er who was flying above them, using the elevated walkways and highways for cover. The bullets sliced one of the flying frame's control lines, causing him to careen into the side of a building ó with messy and fatal results.

Marion slung her rifle across her back and sighed as she activated the throat mike in he uniform. "We killed one suspect."

Her prosthetic feet began to reconfigure themselves from a metallic "hoof" into something that resembled a a Human foot clad in a combat boot.

She sighed and began to lope back to the factory, the actuators on her robotic feet morphing them back into a hoof as she picked up speed.

"It was Soren," Axel answered Vergil as he stared at the globe spinning in front of them. "Sounds like the meeting's going okay." He rubbed his chin then shook his head. "I have no idea where we should go first, but... maybe for now it'd be safer to go somewhere you remember. Save the one in China for when we're more... I dunno, prepared." He shrugged his shoulders. "South America sounds as good as any to me."

"Makes no difference to me. We'll need to visit each in any case." Triste dropped her gaze from the globe to Vergil. "I'll go with the majority." Mission is a success so far. We've found four more locations which are going to help us locate the Cataract.

Excellent. And his memories?

Still fragmented. Don't worry - I'll keep it that way. Triste cocked her head at Vergil. "So, South America then?"

"What the hell! South America it is!" Vergil declared, noting the decision seemed to be unanimous. He selected the dot, and immediately, coordinates appeared on the screen, blooming up like flowers as Vergil quickly snapped a photo with his phone. "That's it... all right..." he said softly, watching as the map faded and shrank back down into the projector. "One down... four to go!" he exclaimed. "Guess we can bounce our way around to the others, and find out where the final resting place of the ship lies."

"All right... let's get the hell out of here." Vergil suggested, and turned to begin making his way back to the elevator. "I don't know about you guys, but this is one creepy place. If I recall... I don't think the one in the jungle is like this. I think it was something different. We'll find out when we get there, though. I'll let Tony know we're good to go down here."

Mace looked the documents over, and began signing after showing them to an attorney that suddenly appeared out of seemingly nowhere. Tony affixed his own signature to the papers, and it was a done deal. "Great! Well then, on behalf of my father, it was a pleasure, Mr. Sardolemuel. We'll start shipments in one week's time! Thank you so much for your hospitality; it was overwhelming!" the ferret stated, heartily shaking Mace's hand.

"Well it was the least I could do for the Straccis." Mace responded, smiling warmly. Tony's phone began ringing, and he politely excused himself as he let Soren collect the papers. "Excuse me for a moment..." he said, holding up a claw. He saw it was Vergil. "Yeah?" he asked, being vague.

"We're done down here. Got the coordinates for the next waypoint. Meet you out front." The gecko's deeper voice sounded in his ear, and Tony smiled for effect.

"Great! See you see soon! Everything went smooth here! Looking forward to catching up!" The ferret hung up, and nodded at Soren. "Well Mr. Sardolemuel, I'm afraid I have a previous engagement, but we'll be in touch!"

Several minutes later, all concerned were once more out in the parking lot. Tony's Daimler had been replaced by a gorgeous silver 1937 Delage D8-120 (http://files.conceptcarz.com/img/Delage/37_Delage_D8-120SS_DV-07_AI-03.jpg). The weapons were now gone, just in case Zaloga monitored its lot. Vergil brought Tony and Soren up to speed on what had happened below the building, and Tony listened in almost disbelief at the story. "Jeez... glad I wasn't down there." the ferret commented. "Not of course to say you guys couldn't take care of yourselves... but still. So... South America?"

"Uh-huh. I'm gonna plug in the coordinates and find out exactly where we need to go." Vergil informed the ferret.

"Well I can arrange transportation, no problem on that end. Speaking of which..." Tony grinned here and motioned to the Delage. "Anyone need a ride home?"

"Heh, I'll think about it." Vergil replied, wanting to give some others priority if they really wanted to ride in the fancy car. "Hey Axel... what's Lily gonna do?" the gecko asked, turning to the rat now.

Up in his penthouse, Mace Sardolemuel received a security call from his chief coordinator. "Sir... it seems someone accessed the lower level."

"What?" Mace gasped, surprised at this revelation. "Who?"

"We're not sure, but looking at the records, we think it may have been a team masquerading as a security check on our systems... which we haven't authorized for today, by the way. Whoever they were... they were good. Their badges checked out and everything."

"Goddamn government pukes!" Mace replied acidly, gnashing his teeth. "They'd be the only ones capable of pulling something like that off! Get me their faces on the security feed!" he ordered, and in seconds, the team's faces sprang up before him on a ceiling mounted HUD. Three dogs, a spider gecko, an augmented rat, and a white gecko with... wait were those feathers? Squinting, Mace narrowed his eyes at that last picture. "What the hell?" Mace asked. This was only the second time in his life he'd seen feathers on a gecko. And eerily enough, this gecko seemed... familiar to him somehow, but Mace couldn't place him. He was positive he'd never seen this particular gecko before recently. But there was something else Mace found disconcerting about his face, and he wanted to rule his suspicions out. "OK..." Mace replied into his headset. "I think I've got a new project for you to work on..."

Tony tried hard to suppress a smile here. "And what about the car you came in?" he asked, motioning to the car Marita had driven the trio here today with. "Surely you don't intend to just leave that here. I know my wheels are nice but, hopefully not so nice you'd sacrifice your own ride." he joked. "You're fucking kidding me," Soren said, shaking his head in disbelief. "You fought battle droids a few thousand feet below where Tony and I were negotiating business deals?"

He then let out a whistle at the mention of a trip to South America. "Well, if that's what it takes." Inwardly, he knew that most of South America was de facto owned by a few large mining conglomerates. And these conglomerates were not above literal hostile takeovers ó and civilians were often caught in the middle.

Marion fumed as she undid the latches of the suitcase containing her company issued flying frame.

Soon a blinking green light appeared on the suitcase and two footprints were projected on the hard tile floor of the armory.

The Human Augment stepped into the footprint and the frame began to unpack itself, matte grey struts and tubes emerged from the suitcase and began to encase her in a metallic shell.

After a minute, Marion was inside a skeletal framework of metallic struts. Folded against her back were two metallic wings with engines and manuevering thrusters at the tips. Two more engines were at foot level. Her flight helmet was already on.

She casually loped out of the entrance and onto the sidewalk. Her wings unfolded and with a roar and a whoosh, she shot into the sky, leaving behind a small section of scorched concrete. And in total defiance of a nearby sign that read: "No takeoff zone".

Axel frowned, rubbing a hand through his hair as Tony mentioned Lily. "Ah... that's going to be complicated. I mean, I guess she's going to stay..." He knew now wasn't the time to go through the problem in detail, but he felt the group deserved at least some explanation. He looked at Soren. "Remember that time, back in Lanthae, when we saw someone claiming to be her husband on the TV? Well, it... turns out that was true, and now one of her kids is missing. And to top it off, her husband is a complete freaking psycho." He bit his lip. "And there's that other kid who was staying with us... Shit. I need to talk to her." Axel looked at the ferret and nodded. "A ride would be good."

Triste shrugged and turned away, apparently not too interested in the rat's problem. Starting to walk away, she pulled out a small, torn piece of paper with a number on it and placed it on the Delage's bonnet as she passed, tapping it with a claw. "Here's my details. I'll be preparing. See you all soon," she called over her shoulder as she made her way over to her motorbike and hopped on. Gunning the engine, she looked back at the group. "If any of you need anything, you can contact me. If it's important enough, I'll see what I can do." It was directed as if to the group as a whole, but her eyes flickered over to Vergil as she said it. Raising a hand in a lazy wave, she pulled away, shooting out of the parking lot and speeding away out of sight.

"Yeah, believe it or not. Battle droids came to life and attacked us. Pretty sophisticated security for an ancient civilization." Vergil chuckled here. He nodded as Triste caught his gaze for a moment, and gave her a small wave as well, watching her speed off. "Uh... hate to ask then, but I guess I could use a ride too." Vergil confessed. "I'll take backseat though... I'm smaller and Axel can stretch out in the front."

"Not a problem." Tony replied, shaking his head.

Walking over to the Delage, Vergil picked up Triste's contact information and stowed it away in his pocket. He opened the driver's side door and folded down the seat so he could slide into the back. "Right, well you're getting shotgun then, Axel." Tony stated, and slid behind the wheel of the luxury French car. Sliding the key into the ignition, the ferret listened with satisfaction as the straight-eight came to life. "All right... let's get outta here before they catch on. Soren, we'll see you soon I think for South America!" the ferret suggested, and threw the car into gear to exit the parking lot as quickly as possible.

Fortunately, they weren't stopped, and the Delage was able to exit the parking lot and head for the highway, though not completely unobserved. Mace Sardolemuel was interested to learn that his new shipping partner had some strange bedfellows, what with his offering to transport government agents away from his headquarters. It was information he'd have to file away for later, as he never figured the Straccis were government sellouts, and he'd have to dig further into this to get to the bottom of it and find out if any coercion had been used or not, or if Tony Stracci had been in on the whole infiltration. He hadn't given any indication of it during the meeting, but that didn't mean anything necessarily.

The sun was beginning to set by the time Tony pulled the Delage around to Axel's street and idled in front of his house. "Well... here we are. Stay in touch, and we'll let you know where in South America we'll be heading to. Let me know what's going to be happening with Lily." Tony told the rat. "And hey... it was good to have you along today. From what Vergil told me, sounds like you guys were in a real scrape, but it was you who figured out that weak spot after all." the ferret pointed out with a nod.

"Well, I, ah... I guess it was about time I did something useful," Axel grinned, fiddling with his ear awkwardly. "But hey... we all worked well together. None of us even lost a limb! Here's hoping it'll go this well every time, huh?" He smiled again, then turned to look out the window at the house. "Alright, well.. I'm going to go explain things to Lily." He glanced back at Tony and Vergil and nodded. "When I know what's happening, I'll get in touch. See you both soon and... you know, be careful until then."

With a final nod, he got out of the Delage and shut the door behind him. Waving goodbye, Axel turned and started making his way up towards the house. He ran a hand through his hair, wondering how he was going to explain the upcoming trips. He knew it was for an important cause, but leaving her to deal with her own, huge problem by herself really put him on edge. Taking a deep breath, Axel opened the front door and stepped through. "Hey, I'm back! Anyone home?" he called into the corridor.

(Zaloga Cybernetics HQ)

Marion landed on a platform several hundred feet off the ground. The transponder in her suit caused the bulletproof dome to retract and allow her to land.

Upon landing, the wings on her flying frame retracted and folded up against her back. she took off her helmet,letting it dangle from its strap and exposing her short cropped black hair and the face of a woman in her mid-fifties...despite being only in her late 30s. The Human casually strode through a door that opened in response to the transponder in her uniform. Despite the fact that the flying frame weighed over sixty pounds, it fit so well and supported its own weight that Marion moved as if it weren't present at all.

She passed by several office workers and guards on her way to Mace's office. When she arrived, she knocked on the ornately decorated wooden door.

(Mott Place)

Soren took off his suit and pants and hung them up. He was now clad in the STF inpregnated long-sleeved shirt and track pants that kept him from injuries when working with augments and now served as impromptu armor.

"I hope that Mace didn't find out that Tony and I had other motives that weren't related to a business deal."

At Marita's words, he glanced to the rifle, armor and combat helmet in the bookcase, ready in case things went to shit. He swallowed.

"Okay, I have something very important to say. While you were visting Anne, four corporate security troopers from Serami Heavy Industries came in here and took an augment I was working with. They claimed that it had been stolen from them."

"I'm in the kitchen," called Lily. She had just finished a large bowl of pasta with sauce and stuck it in the middle of the table; not her greatest dinner she'd ever prepared for the two of them, but she'd had a rather long day. "How has your day been?" she smiled.

Axel smiled and hugged her, kissing the top of her head. "Hey." He looked down at the table and saw the pasta she'd prepared. "Aw, you didn't have to. We could have ordered something in." He paused. "As long as it wasn't from that Italian place up the road. That didn't... go down so well last time." Shuddering, Axel sat down at the table and sighed. "Eh, today was... different..." Haltingly, he started to explain what had happened. About how they were trying to find the location of the Cataract, and how today they'd managed to determine the first clue of its location. He left out the part that included killer machines trying to rip him apart, deciding that probably wasn't something that would calm her down.

"So... I'm going to need to go away for a bit. The coordinates pointed us to somewhere in South America so, ah..." Axel reached across the table and touched her hand, then swallowed. "But how did it go for you? Did you find anything to go on? Where's Rio? Is Emilena still as, ah..." The rat tried to pick the right word. "...Intense?"

"She is her same insane self..." Lily shook her head. "Drugged up and psychotic, and her gang is some of the most eclectic people I've ever met. Rio stayed with them, he wants to join, and somehow everyone seems warm to the idea."

She grabbed another serving of pasta. "I will give Emilena one thing; she's got this gang of hers wrapped around her finger. She had this stupidly convoluted plan to break into the army recruitment center to get information on Ejlert, and the whole thing somehow worked like a charm. We found out he was rejected by the Air Force for flat feet, but his cockpit evaluation demonstrated extensive prior flight training. Emilena only knows one other place where someone could get flight training for free. Kalis..."

She took a deep breath. "I think you and I might be searching for the same thing. Is there room for one more person on that flight to South America?"

((Sorry for briefness, but not much time!))

Mace heard the knock on his door, and an augment in his brain allowed the door to open seamlessly. "Come in." he ordered warmly. "May I offer you a drink of something?" he asked Marion, motioning with his hand to a table of refreshments, including alcohol.

Vergil was doing research back at his flat. He'd plugged in the coordinates, the blue of the monitor bathing his white face in eerie light, and his expression was twisting into confusion as he saw where exactly the waypoint was located. "Ohhhhh man." he murmured, studying the exact position of the waypoint on the map. Well... this would make things... interesting.

"No thank you, sir," Marion replied. She sat down in a chair and looked at Mace. "I had recieved reports of an infiltrator in the headquarters. What are my orders with regards to them?"

"You... you're going to come with us?" Axel asked, taken aback. He knew where they were going could, or more likely would be dangerous... but then again, since her son was linked to Kalis somehow, the chances were that her own mission wouldn't be without its own dangers. And if that was the case, he was glad he'd be there for her. Axel grinned. "Well, sure! Of course there's room for you! I mean, I'm not sure where exactly in South America we're heading yet... still need to wait for word from Vergil... but I'm happy you're coming. And you know I'll do whatever I can to help you."

"Oh!" Axel blinked. "I just need to let Tony know..." He pulled out his phone and dialed the ferret's number, leaving a message. "Hey Tony, it's Axel. Turns out that Lily... ah, she's actually going to be coming with us. It looks like Kalis messed with the wrong mother... anyway, let me know if Vergil finds anything more on where we'll be heading."

He hung up, then reached across for a second helping of the pasta, feeling a lot better. "So, Rio's staying with Emilena's gang?" he said, chewing. "Doesn't seem like the most, ah... child-friendly place to be..."

Marita looked at Soren."its quite possible it was in fact stolen. laundering augments is big business. better to let then think you didnt know it was hot, and it got to you by mistake.. as for Mace, well i dont think it would be wise for any of us to go back there, any time soon. they have cameras all over the place, so its likely they have images of us now. this is why i prefer to do business - electronically, shall we say.. nothing to put a face to. if i were you Soren, we're going to need to bring your stuff with us . we had to fight 6 murderous machines, that was a small taste of whats to come..i have no idea what the next waypoint has in store, but i'd guess things are only going to get harder going fiorward.

Mace swirled a drink around in his hand, and studied it, as if it fascinated him. "I'm downloading profiles to your phone, but the one you need to focus on is the lead infiltrator: the white gecko with the feathers. I suspect he's a government agent so... no messy interrogations... or any interrogation really until you can ascertain who he is. You are to follow him, and try and learn as much as you can. If he's not government... bring him in... if he is... await further orders." Mace instructed her.

"I have personal reasons as well for not wanting him harmed... I'm sure I've seen him somewhere before... I just can't place him. Until I remember or you find out for me... just make sure no harm comes to him, understood? And DON'T make it obvious that you're with Zaloga, got it? Do you think you can handle this?" Mace asked her now, looking over at her as he took a sip. "This assignment requires a certain degree of... discretion after all. I'm not out to antagonize the Federation after all, but I need to know why they're suddenly interested in me... or if it was just to find..." he hesitated here, not finishing that sentence. "Anyway, are you up for this?"

Tony got off the phone with Vergil, an ashen look on his face. "Shit...!" he exclaimed slowly, now knowing where they were heading. Looking down at his phone for a moment, the ferret dialed Axel, who he'd gotten a message from a few minutes ago. As soon as the rat picked up, Tony began speaking. "Axel, it's Tony. I know where we're heading... but you're not gonna like it. The second waypoint is uh... in a really remote region that you can really only reach down the Camino de la Muerte or... the Death Road. The North Yungas Road in Bolivia. There's really no other way to get to it. And it's OFF the damn road, so we're gonna have to do some jungle trekking it seems." Tony explained, letting that sink in for Axel.

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: bushwacked on June 01, 2014, 02:58:59 AM

"The North Yungas Road?" Axel wrinkled his face. "Sounds familiar... hang on." He put the call on hold for a second and flicked onto his phone's internet. "He says we have to get to it through Death Road," he reported to Lily across the table as he searched for it. Axel snorted. "What's so deadly about a road?" Then he found pictures, and his face dropped like a bag of rocks - or, potentially, like him over the edge of the road. "Well... that's actually pretty deadly..." he croaked after a pause.

He re-connected with Tony. "Oh no. This might not be the thing you want to hear but, ah... well, I'm not exactly the best with heights. Actually, that's being generous. I'm really, really bad with heights," Axel groaned, turning a sickly expression to Lily. "But hey, maybe this could help me overcome it. Maybe. And I'm sure the jungle trek's going to be awesome too. Ah, thanks for letting us know anyway, Tony. Any ideas when we'd be leaving?"

Lily silently waited patiently for Axel to finish his phone call. In her mind she was trying to picture what could possibly be so scary about Death Road, and her imagination proved more than up to the task of filling in all sorts of terrors. "Ejlert, I hope you're okay..." she murmured.

I'd give it two days. I'll try and secure us flights to La Paz... unless of course the Federation's paying for it, which very well may be true." he chuckled here, trying to lighten the mood. "Uh... about the fear of heights... let's not worry too much about that. I'll be driving... and you know I'm a good driver. We'll try and keep you on the side away from the cliff. And Lily's coming? Really? Well... great!" Tony was happy for the morale boost this would be for Axel, and would help to keep both of them going in fact.

"Her son... is with Kalis? Really?" the ferret was stunned by this news. Of all the forces to join when you run away from home... he picked Kalis's empire? "Hey... we'll find him then. Something tells me our quest for the waypoints isn't going to remain secret for long so... I expect to see some appearances put in by Kalis's forces at some point along the way. Anyway... I think we'll leave in two days; give everyone a chance to pack and prepare and get the households in order. I'll let you know when our flight is. I'll take some cash so we can equip ourselves down there... it's pretty much dominated by mining conglomerates, including our friend Zaloga having a presence down there as well. So yeah... we're gonna need some hardware. I'll keep in touch, OK?" he asked. "We'll accomplish both our objectives and try and find Eljert. Talk to ya soon." The ferret hung up, looking at the phone after he did, unsure about this new information, but knowing that before long, they'd be face to face with Kalis. He had no doubts about that...

On the bridge of the Red Castle, Kalis saw a black-scaled monitor with yellow underbelly approaching now. He too was clad in robes similar to Kalis's, but these were pure black instead of the red Kalis wore. Bowing his head respectfully to Kalis, he stood before his lord serenely, though with an intensity in his eyes. He was a killer, plain and simple, and looked as if he had no respect for life. He was a Nile monitor, and a fierce looking one at that.

"Lord Kalis, you summoned me?" the monitor asked.

"Yes, Varanus." Kalis responded. "It seems Agent Acyle is accessing the waypoints to Torment's Cataract. This is perfect... we can use this to plot her movements and take her. Remember... she must be taken alive. She is traveling with companions however... companions you may terminate. I have no use for any of them except her. And... should you fail to seize her here... we can simply use this to locate the Cataract as well."

Varanus smiled here in a deathly fashion, grinning as he bowed again. "Yes, my lord. Such a task will be... simple, I think."

"Do NOT grow overconfident!" Kalis chided him. "She's a strong opponent, and we know at least one of her companions is worthy of respect as well. Don't blindly rush into this!"

"Of course not, Lord Kalis." Varanus apologized, bowing his head again and closing his eyes.

"Good... now... assemble your team... they're going to Bolivia... I want you there." Kalis ordered, narrowing his eyes.

"As you wish... my lord." Varanus nodded, and turned to depart. from the bridge. Kalis watched him go, his eyes still narrowed. Varanus had to learn to curb his enthusiasm in some regards, as impatience would be his death if he wasn't careful. Still... he was fiery and ruthless, and was most of what Kalis looked for in a subordinate. Time would tell if he would live up to the expectations Kalis had placed on him or not.

La Paz's El Alto International Airport was a bit crowded to start the week, but as summer was right around the corner, vacationers were coming down to Bolivia to get a taste of the Amazon and enjoy the start of their breaks, as well as escape the heat. Escape the heat? La Paz was up in the mountains, making it cooler than one might expect for June in Bolivia. Heading downhill on the North Yungas Road would be another story, as they'd be getting closer and closer to the sweltering jungle the further down that road they traveled, but for now, Tony wasn't going to knock on the pleasant weather here in the capital. Temperatures stood at an almost chilly 60 degrees, but Tony knew that would go up the further downhill they went.

Vergil found he rather liked the climate of La Paz, and thought that South America was nothing but a hellhole of a jungle before this, so he was pleasantly surprised to find he was wrong. "Well... this isn't half bad." Vergil commented with a smile as he picked up his bag from baggage claim.

"Not half bad at all!" Tony responded. "Hey Axel, want to go rent a vehicle with me? I think we'll be needing something all-terrain and big enough to hold everyone. Just a shame I couldn't import one of my cars down here." the ferret joked. "Still, we might even need to make it two vehicles since we have uh..." Tony did a mental count real quick, "Nine with us now. Probably WILL need two vehicles in fact."

Vergil unzipped his bag and retrieved the GPS out of it. He'd programmed it before they'd left with the coordinates of the waypoint, and he powered it on again to make sure the thing was working. "Hmm.... so it's about an hour's drive down the highway towards the North Yungas Road and from there... another hour and a half to two hours to the waypoint... depending on how fast we go... which I doubt will be very fast given that road's... layout." the gecko stated, tapping his chin with a big bulbous finger.

Soren shivered as the cold air bit through the short sleeves and shorts he wore. He knew Bolivia would be hot and humid. Except he had counted on being in the jungle, not high in the mountains.

He looked around the airport. Snatches of rapid-fire Spanish punctuated the air as artisans hawked locally made crafts and cuisine. Tourists mingled with people in business suits and obviously armed soldiers (probably from one of the many mining conglomerates that had a stake in the country). He was well aware that while the nations and governments existed, they were pretty much government in name only. The mining conglomerates were so powerful that they pretty much became the de facto government.

"Well," he said, leaning on his luggage. "Shall we get going?

A few meters away, a middle-aged Chinese woman dressed in a long sleeved shirt reading "Jungle Sky Tours" and shorts was apparently playing with her cell phone.

Thanks to the advanced directional microphone in it, she had recorded Vergil's every word. She had also taken his picture and matched it with the photo Mace had uploaded to her phone.

Marion smiled. She could easily beat the group to North Yungas Road. All she had to do was get her luggage with its flying frame and other gear. It had been an easy task to get them into Bolivia. All she had to do was pose as an extreme sports junkie. The augments helped as it led people to assume she had lost her limbs in various extreme sports misadventures.

Axel looked around the airport and took a deep breath, enjoying the crowded atmosphere, the loud voices, the energy of the place. Shrugging his bag, which contained such life-saving essentials as plasters and bug spray, further onto his shoulder he turned to Lily. "This place seems nice! Maybe when this is all over, and your kids are safe and the world isn't going to be taken over by a crazy guy, we could vacation here?"

At Tony's suggestion, he turned and nodded. "Yeah, sure. Like a, a big Jeep or something?" He looked around at Soren, Marita and the others as he started to head off with Tony. "We'll be back soon, guys. Meet in the parking lot?" Axel glanced at Lily. "Want to come, hon-" He was cut off as a large, elderly man in a wheelchair rolled over his foot.

Triste looked over at Vergil and spoke up over Axel's wails of pain. "So when we get there... you have any memories of what we'll be up against? Anything at all?" Behind the dark sunglasses she wore, her eyes searched the gecko's face. Her hands were bunched into fists. Unlike Axel, the crowds made her extremely uncomfortable - it was perfect cover for anyone following them.

Marita was wearing a summer shirt, jeans and a camera, mostly as a ruse so onlookers would think she was just a tourist. ' at least we have a wide open period now, Roses show doesn't open until November' Marita said. Both Rose and Marie were dressed for the jungle, but their fur provided insulation from the cold air. Rose had a brochure with facts about the country snd a map with roads.

"Dammit!" Tony exclaimed as he saw Axel's anguish. "Hey! Watch it!" he reprimanded the guy in the wheelchair, who profusely apologized to the rat. "Ugh... come on, let's try and arrange our transport." Tony said, helping the rodent for the first few feet until his foot started to feel better. "We'll try to get two Land Rovers, maybe." he suggested as they started making their way toward the rental row, as Tony liked to call it at every airport, as all rental agencies were lined up in a row typically. As it turned, Vergil's agency was paying for it, which was nice as Tony didn't have to worry about family funds... though his father wouldn't hesitate if it meant saving the world of course.

Vergil noticed Triste appeared... nervous, but whether that was just her cover or not he wasn't certain. He knew agents were trained to blend in... and she certainly was doing that. "Uh... well as far as I remember... not much." he stated. "I don't think there was much to it aside from uh... you know I can't remember, I'm sorry." he sighed, looking down, then back up at her. "You uh... all right?" he asked, noting her anxiety.

Nodding at Soren, the gecko agreed. "Yeah... let's head out to the parking lot, let the others pick us up." he suggested, pulling up the telescoping handle on his bag and beginning to roll it towards the airport exit now.

As Tony headed for one of the rental agency desks, a large monitor bumped into him. "Hey!" Tony said again, snarling a bit as the lizard brushed past him. The big fellow had a baseball cap pulled down low over his eyes, and gave an apologetic wave.

"Sorry!" he hissed, moving on without a glance backwards.

"Dammit... what is this, run into our group day?" Tony asked, shaking his head as he watched the monitor walk off, then turned to continue on his way with a sigh.

Behind him, Varanus smirked, and nodded to a group sitting around a newsstand about 50 feet away in the airport. One raised a magazine in front of him, as if he were reading, but that was the signal for acknowledgment.

Tony managed to secure rental of two Land Rovers, and as each could seat five, it was enough to carry the group. After filling out the necessary paperwork, Tony looked over at Axel and grinned. "Let's pull up and screech the brakes like we're some big important limo service in front of our group. What do you think?" he asked, teeth flashing.

Lily was waiting patiently for the cashier of the small funnel cake stand to return so she could buy a post-flight snack.

"Sorry for the wait, ma'am!" A perky fuchsia folf in a tight apron bounced back over, holding a round clear-plastic tin containing her food.

Lily double-taked. "Flora! What--?" Gingerly, Flora put a paw over her mouth, grinning.

"We took a lil' road trip," she whispered, "After you told us where you'd be going. Things got a bit hairy, at one point we were lucky Foley knew how to hotwire a tow truck with a pair of nail clippers--"

"I can't talk right now!" Lily interrupted, glancing surreptitiously at her teammates near the cars. "Whatever you're up to, great, let's find a way to communicate later! but I gotta go!"

Flora winked. "Stay safe. I miss you when you're gone..."

Lily walked back over to the group, slightly shaken but hiding it well. "So, I never found out why it's called the road of death, or whatever," she said through mouthfuls of dough. "What life-threatening hazards will we be facing?"

Axel was leaning on the counter as Tony finished signing the forms. When he handed them back, Axel stood up straight and grinned back at the ferret, holding out his hand for one of the sets of keys. "You read my mind... I call dibs on the black one though. It looks cooler."

Triste glanced over at Lily as she returned from the vendor. "You haven't heard of La Carretera de los Yungas? It's a road that winds around the La Cumbre mountain pass, and... well, I'll put it this way. It's really narrow, and really high up. If whoever's driving isn't careful enough, we'll be sent plunging over the edge to our deaths. So you'd better hope that our drivers are up to it."

She looked back at Vergil as they emerged out into the parking lot. "I'm fine. Just... we're not exactly inconspicuous, and if anyone's following us, this crowd'll make it even easier for them. Keep your eyes open." Triste sighed. "As long as we don't do anything to draw attention to us, I'll feel better."

At that moment, a pair of Land Rovers roared up and screeched to a halt in front of the waiting group. The driver's window of the rear car rolled down, and Axel poked his head out, tooting the horn loudly. "Did anyone order a taxi?" he grinned, putting on a mock southern drawl. The crowd milling around all started to turn their heads towards them.

"I'm not the best when it comes to world knowledge," Lily confessed. Losing her complete memory from before 2 months ago will do that to a person. But after what she went through to get her human body back, she couldn't see herself being particularly scared of anything.

"I don't believe we've really met," Lily held her hand out to Triste, smiling. "Axel said you were pretty awesome at Zaloga Corporations. Thanks for keeping my husband safe, he does tend to jump into things a bit over his head."

It'll be nice to get to have a girlfriend who isn't psychotic for once, she thought happily to herself. Speaking of which, she wondered where Emilena had gotten off to. She, Rio and her gang hadn't even contacted Lily after the recruitment center raid. It's quite possible they decided to make off with the money they'd already gotten.

Tony practically did the same, driving a light blue Land Rover right up to the group and blaring the horn at the same time Axel did. Vergil closed his eyes and dropped his head, shaking it in disbelief. There goes the not drawing attention to ourselves...

"All right, your rides are here!" Tony exclaimed, getting out to open up the trunk of the Rover so the others could load up their luggage. "And ah... we're gonna need a driver for the second Rover, since Axel's afraid of heights... and probably won't want to be doing the driving down the Yungas Road."

"Count me out." Vergil chimed in as he placed his bag into the trunk. "I can barely see over the steering wheel on most vehicles, and have a problem reaching the pedals on good days." he explained.

"Yeah well... I didn't mean you." Tony replied, looking down at the white gecko with a smile. "So yeah... any volunteers to drive one of the world's most dangerous roads?" he asked, half-joking but mostly serious. Vergil climbed into Tony's Rover and took one of the three backseats. Each Rover could sit five, so it would require five in one, four in the other.

Triste looked at Lily's hand then shook it, returning the smile slowly. "Nice to meet you too. And you're welcome. Gets himself in over his head, you say?" She looked across to the second vehicle, where Axel was hopping out and sticking his tongue out playfully at Marita as she took over. "I'd... never have guessed.." Triste said hesitantly, turning back.

"Hey girls!" Axel said cheerily, making his way over to them. "Ready for our date with crazy thin roads and disgusting bugs?" Triste's expression darkened, and he shrank away slightly. "Ok, not a 'girls' type of person... good to know..."

Rolling her eyes, Triste looked at Lily. "I'm going to join the others. See you at our destination, and good luck with..." She pointed a claw at the rat, then turned and made her way over to the first vehicle, stepping aside as Marie made room for her. "Any strategies in mind?" she asked Vergil as she settled in next to him.

Axel watched her leave with a critical expression. "She's a real ray of sunshine, isn't she." Bending down to pick up their heavier bag, he grinned at Lily and started to walk back to the Land Rovers. "Want to take Marita's car? I'm almost 90 percent sure she won't send us over the edge to a painful death."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on June 03, 2014, 11:10:50 AM

Tony started up the Land Rover, and pulled out onto the airport loop once he was sure the others were set and ready to follow. Vergil passed the GPS up front to Tony, who set it up along the dash. "OK..." Tony said as he read the route. It wasn't just a GPS, but a navigational assistant as well, as it could take one right to an off-road spot deep in the jungle if one wanted, and that's just what it was going to do now. First though, they had to exit La Paz, and get onto the highway leading to the North Yungas Road. It was fairly straight-forward, and wouldn't require much navigating once they left the city. They could get on Ruta Nacional 3 right from the airport, and from there, almost three hours later, they'd reach the Death Road.

Of course, Ruta Nacional 3 also bypassed the North Yungas Road, and if only such a thing could be done, Tony would gladly take that option, but as it was, the waypoint lay off the Death Road, so the Death Road was where they needed to go. As he passed the row of cars loading and unloading their passengers, two Jeeps in particular pulled into the lane behind them, but at a good enough distance that it wasn't suspicious. They had been loading up bags and passengers, and looked like any other vehicles pulling out behind the Land Rovers. They continued to maintain their distance, keeping at least six car lengths back as Tony pulled onto Ruta Nacional 3, which was one of the major highways that serviced the airport.

Inside the lead jeep, Varanus tapped a claw on the passenger door's side panel, smirking to himself as he instructed his driver to maintain a safe enough distance behind the Land Rovers. No need to crowd them after all; it was a long drive.

"Thanks." Vergil thanked Marie after she had moved over. "Well... in regards to my strategy... I seem to recall Rex reprogramming this waypoint... and I'm trying to remember..." he said distantly, closing his eyes and rubbing his forehead with his fingers. "He wanted to make sure no one else could follow this path... yes... he uh... he reprogrammed it to speak English... and he... he uh... I think he put in a program that would lock anyone out that wasn't him... which may be problematic... but I'm hoping anyone in his group, myself included, would be part of the 'access group', so to speak." The white gecko explained. "Which would be me, Kalis, and himself. I'm hoping it'll recognize me and allow me access."

"He reprogrammed it?" Tony asked, glancing at Vergil in the rearview mirror. "What an asshole."

"Yeah well... he was a smart cookie, from what I remember. He wanted to ensure only he would be the one obtaining this battleship. And this jungle one I specifically remember as the one he reprogrammed. I don't think... he did that to any others." Vergil commented here, looking out the windshield at the highway ahead. "At least... I hope not." he murmured.

Lily smiled. "Sure. And I like Triste. She speaks her mind, and she seems very competent. A lot like I pictured from what you'd told me of her."

She beamed when she saw Marita again. "Marita! Long time since we last met! How have you been?" Lily had mostly kept to herself during the plane ride, but now that they were assembling into cars she hadn't much of a choice.

lilly! So good to see you again!' Marita said as she looked at her before pulling out after Tony " as for What I've been up to, well i've been living with rose and Marie and making ends meet really. Corona is much much better than Lanthae, you can actually make a decent living there. So what have you been up to, and what brings you along on this little journey?' she asked the car moved on down the road..

Triste swallowed and looked concerned as Vergil mentioned Rex's reprogramming. "Well... we'll just have to hope you're right. If the three of you did share such a relationship then it does stand to reason you'd have access. And if not, then..." She shrugged. "We'll think of something." He's remembered that somehow the waypoint was reprogrammed. It'll only give access to select individuals, but as we have one of the select few, it shouldn't be a problem.

She shrugged again. "Well, at least we won't need to translate it to find out if we fail," Triste said drily.

In the back of the second Land Rover, Axel smiled as Lily started to open up. He knew she'd been feeling slightly self-conscious about seeing the others on the trip over, but he was happy that she was starting to get more comfortable. Leaning back, Axel looked out the window and tried to keep his thoughts from the road they'd soon be trundling down. The rat's stomach started to knot regardless.

Soren watched for threats as the convoy moved through the grimy urban areas that Ruta Nacional 3 serviced. Amazingly, the city looked just like Lanthae. Except with Spanish and Quechuan instead of English. A Scarlet Macaw clad in a t-shirt and jeans, his normally brilliant red and blue feathers muted and greyed with dust and grime, waved at them.

Soren waved back but watched carefully. He noticed that this city's billboards and advertisements mentioned "Dorado Minerals" quite a lot. The Human entered the name of what he presumed to be a mining company into his smartphone and searched for it.

After a wait of several minutes, the results came back. Dorado Minerals was a Bolivian mining comglomerate that controlled half of the country.

((Sorry about the "meh" post. This tour's been a friggin' nightmare so far and it ain't over yet. Didn't have time at all today to plan my post out, so had to improvise.))

Vergil nodded, taking in Triste's words as she tried to reassure him. "Yeah... we will. Cause we're not going away empty-handed. And yeah heheh... least this time no translation needed." he commented mirthlessly, though cracked a smile all the same. It was kind of funny, in a demented sort of way.

"So uh... you know there's something I've been meaning to ask, Agent Acyle." Vergil said, growing a bit more formal now. "When Kalis's guys attacked us in the Archives, were they after me... or you?" he asked. "I mean I kind of get me but... he doesn't even know you, right?" the gecko asked here. "Or... does he?"

Tony studied the road they were heading out on. It was a two-lane highway that was winding its way through the mountains, but at least it was a paved road. The ferret knew pretty soon they'd be traveling on dirt and rocks and hanging dangerously close to the edge...

An olive green Jeep tore by them and passed them in the opposite lane; a dangerous move, but a common one here in Bolivia. It slowed down a bit after passing them and kept on ahead, gradually pulling further away but staying within sight for the moment. About six cars back, the second jeep was keeping well behind them as well.

In the lead Jeep, Varanus smiled to himself as he adjusted the sideview mirror and gazed at the leading Land Rover. "Thaaat's it. Got 'em sandwiched now... but no crowding. No need for that right now. Put that backhoe in between us and them!" the Nile monitor ordered his driver.

"Right, boss!" Speeding up again, the leading jeep overtook and passed a truck hauling a backhoe on a flatbed ahead of the Rovers. They knew where the group would be headed after all, so there was no need to stay close. Even if by some chance they weren't heading for the North Yungas Road, eventually they would be.

Marion soared over the jungles of Bolivia with her flying frame. No one paid her any heed, thinking that she was just another tourist enjoying the jungle. Indeed, a few other frame-flyers waved at her; she of course, ignored them.

Obviously, she made sure to avoid the no fly zones that the mining conglomerates established ó the last thing she wanted to do was piss them off and get shot down in the process.

Her GPS indicated that she was en route to North Yungas Road, right where her targets were headed.

Triste frowned at Vergil's question. "No... no, that wouldn't make sense..." Although, thinking back on it, Kalis' men had seemed more focused on her during the attack, rather than Vergil. And they'd seemed more intent on capturing her than killing her outright... Triste's eyes narrowed. Why? Why would Kalis be concerned about me? Especially when he's here, she thought, her gaze flicking over to Vergil. Unless... no. No, there's no way Kalis could know about...

Exhaling slightly, Triste met Vergil's eyes and shook her head, not paying any attention to the green Jeep that overtook them. "As far as I know, Kalis doesn't know anything about me. Before the assault on Rex Sardolemuel's ship, where you were... lost, he never discovered you were working as a double agent for the Ivitz. At least, not to our knowledge. So I don't see why Kalis would pay any particular attention to me." Her lips tightened. "In any case, my assignment is to protect you. You're the only one who has knowledge of these waypoints, our only hope of finding the Cataract before Kalis. I can be replaced. You can't. So the priority is protecting you."

Lily nodded slowly. Above the car she noticed an individual on a flying frame whiz past, but she didn't pay them any heed, thinking that she was just another tourist enjoying the jungle.

"I've been fine," she replied to Marita. "Just living. Something I hope to continue doing...why are you and Rose going on this expedition anyway? Just wondering what stake you've got in it. Marita, how are you enjoying your job?"

"Oh... I see..." Vergil trailed off. He wondered if Rex had found out he'd been a double agent, and had somehow also found out his contact was Triste... but she didn't seem to think it plausible. He chewed his lower lip as she told him she was expendable, and he wasn't. He frowned, his brow furrowing. "No... that's a terrible thing to say." he said now, looking up at her to meet her eyes. "You're no more expendable than I am." he said sincerely. "What good am I if all my companions are dead? They're all I have... and you... you're the only link to the past I have." he admitted here. "I feel like if I lose you now... that link will be gone... but not just that... I don't see you as expendable. Maybe I used to but... not anymore." He shook his head here, lowering his eyes and gazing at the floor of the Rover.

He wasn't sure what to say after that, so he just kind of remained quiet and let her take that as she would. He barely knew her... barely remembered her... but still, every one of his teammates was valuable to him now... he'd hate to think of even one of them dying.

Tony turned on the radio, and adjusted the volume so it permeated the car in a mellow sort of atmosphere. The region they were driving through outside La Paz was mostly dusty and brown, and quite mountainous. They were in the Andes after all, and to see snow-caps on some of these mountains was truly awe-inspiring for the ferret. To be this high up and and to feel how chilly it was but knowing they were heading for a jungle was something he just couldn't wrap his head around yet.

Kalis turned around to gaze upon Sujeno with a look of death. "Not presently." he responded in his rasping metallic voice. "However, I may require you as backup should Varanus fail. Of course, you may be sent in to replenish any of his group should they fall. Still... I have confidence in him to handle it." Kalis informed Sujeno. Of course, he also knew Varanus to be brash and impulsive, but he'd wait to see what the monitor would accomplish first before leaping to conclusions. This would be his real test after all... to see if he was truly worthy of succeeding Kalis one day.

"Well...we can't legally get married, since I'm supposed to be dead..." Lily responded softly. "But we're as close as you can get without a minister saying so."

She debated passing out photos of Ejlert to the girls; you never know what they might find. But ultimately she decided against it. The odds of Marita or anyone chancing across Ejlert was slim, and she didn't want news of her looking for him getting around. It might even put him in danger if Kalis were to learn that his mother was an active ally of Vergil's.

"You might not like it, but it's the truth. It's what we have to live with." Triste raised her eyes and looked at Vergil as he stared at the floor. The gecko's tone sounded genuine, like he actually cared, and it was so unlike how he'd been before that it threw her. Looking at Vergil now, he appeared so... vulnerable. For a second, she felt almost sorry for him. Triste's jaw clenched. What the hell's the matter with me?

After a second, her expression softened. "Hey... I'm not exactly planning on getting killed. And I'll do my best to make sure everyone else stays safe too... although I've got to admit, they're more competent than I thought they'd be." Triste glanced at Tony and gave a thin smile. "Except for their taste in radio station, maybe. Look, as long as we keep focused, we should all be fine."

Axel nodded. "Right. And besides, planning for it would be a nightmare." He grinned. "We've just been living quietly, keeping to ourselves. I, ah, never thought we'd get involved with anything like this again. Lanthae was crazy enough..."

Title: Racing the Storm

Vergil looked up, and smiled here. "Well, I'm glad to hear that." he stated with some relief. He looked at Tony and Marie here and nodded. "Yes well, we've all been through a lot. A ragtag bunch but we're a good crew. I'm just glad to know you'll look after yourself in addition to me. It's kind of our creed, yea." He nodded again here. "I'd hate to see anything happen to you." he added in a much quieter tone, averting his eyes again in a shy fashion.

Tony frowned. "Hey! No backseat driving!" he chided humorously to Triste. As the group rolled on, the minutes turned into hours. They began descending, and entered into a more tropic region of Bolivia. Lush greenery surrounded them on the mountain slopes, and Tony was forced to crank up the AC as the temperature started rising. "Hoo! Remind me never to move here!" Tony exclaimed, wiping his brow. Vergil had spent the past two plus hours asking Triste about his life, and soaking in as many details as she could offer him. From what he'd gathered, he'd had a pretty good if dangerous life. He was courageous, if not a little reckless, and generous too.

The white gecko also spent time researching more of Rex's life, but felt he still wasn't gaining a better understanding of why he'd turned traitor in the first place. This story needed further study.

"Holy shit!" Tony said slowy as he took the exit for the North Yungas Road. "I gotta drive through that?" he asked reluctantly. Ahead of them lay a small dirt road carved out of the mountainside. On the left was a sheer drop, and Tony poked his head out the window to get a better look. "This... Is insanity! Whoever built this road should die!" he exclaimed in a choked voice, noting the jungle was hundreds of feet below, like small emeralds in deep bowl.

"Many of them did." Vergil murmured. He knew the Bolivians had used Paraguayan prisoners to construct this road, and many had fallen to their deaths. It used to be the only way to descend to the Amazonian lowlands until Ruta Nacional 3 had been built. Behind them, Tony could see Marita's Land Rover and a green jeep, with a second jeep approaching too. The jeeps had gotten mixed into the order, so that a jeep was behind each Rover. Great... Tourists.

Tony called Marita in the other Rover. "Uh... You uh... Ready for this?" He asked hesitantly as he gripped the steering wheel tightly, exhaling slowly to try and soothe the adrenaline racing through him.

Axel turned his head to the left and looked out the window. He perked up at the view that stretched out on that side. "Hey! Hey, honey!" he nudged Lily and indicated. "Look at the..." His eyes wandered down, and he saw how far the drop was. "Oh." Looking away, he caught a glimpse of the road ahead... and how narrow it became. It looked like a small breeze could blow them over the edge, sending them to a fiery, violent demise on the sheer and deadly cliffs stretching below. "Oh..." Sinking lower in his seat, Axel's normally white face took on a green tinge and his ears flopped limply.

Weakly, the rat looked over at Lily. "Maybe I shouldn't have taken this side... Marita, please don't go, ah... you know, off the road."

Lily glanced outside. To be honest, she was perfectly okay with heights. "Just wondering, why do you think Axel and I could be married after this?" She asked. "I'll still be a fugitive hunted by the government, thought dead, and I'll still legally be married to another man."

Further behind the convoy, a tow truck bearing the logo of a company that only operates in Mexico drove along the road.

Tony gulped, and nodded (a pointless gesture since Marita couldn't see him anyway) before hanging up. "Oh man... uh... here we go..." he said slowly, and began pulling out onto the Death Road as slowly as he could, but noticed he couldn't exactly hug the mountainside either due to not wanting to damage the Rover against the rocks and Bolivian rules of the road stating those going downhill had to take the side closest to the cliff to allow those coming up to hug the mountainside. The ferret of course was only going to follow these rules if he saw an oncoming vehicle.

He glanced in his rearview mirror at the olive Jeep following after him and Marita's Rover behind that. Feeling the rocks slide and tumble out from underneath his wheels was a very unsettling feeling and caused his stomach to leap and flop all in one sickening motion He glanced over the edge again but then jerked his vision back to the road. Stupid! Great way to get vertigo here! He felt like his Rover would just slip off the road at any moment and plummet to a fiery fate below them, but these were mostly silly fears he'd have to get on top of. He had to face them if he was going to conquer this road.

According to Vergil's navigator, the waypoint was about halfway down the North Yungas Road. Greaaat. That's exactly what he wanted to see... not. But the ferret didn't have much to think about it: the rear window of the Rover suddenly exploded in a burst of glass that sent shards sailing into the rear seating areas, causing Tony to duck down and Vergil to cringe as fragments struck his right arm and his backside, scrapes forming that crisscrossed his otherwise white skin. "What the HELL?" Tony shouted, peering behind him to notice a shotgun sticking out the window of the olive jeep. "What the shit is these guys' problem?" he asked, realizing as his heart rate increased that he'd need to pick up his pace if they weren't going to get shredded.

Pushing the accelerator down, the ferret let the Rover pick up speed as he started driving faster down the Yungas Road. The Jeep followed suit, starting to accelerate as another blast from the shotgun was fired, this one impacting with the back of the Rover with a sickening thud. "Grrr! My luggage better be safe back there!" Tony yelled as he increased speed, trying his best to avoid having a heart attack as he slid the Rover around the edge and continued downhill with a slight screech of the brakes.

The second Jeep had opened up heavy assault rifle fire on Marita's Rover behind the first two vehicles, and unlike the first Jeep, which was looking to slow the first Rover down, the second Jeep was looking to kill the occupants of the second Rover.

Varanus grinned wickedly as he kept after the leading Rover that he knew contained Agent Triste Acyle within. Opening up the top of the Jeep's roof, the big monitor hauled himself out onto the top of the Jeep and balanced himself as he shouted down to his driver to get him close to the Rover. The driver complied, pushing the pedal down to pull up fast behind the charging SUV. When he judged the distance sufficient, Varanus leaped off the roof of the Jeep onto the top of the Rover, landing with a thunk before his energy blade ignited and began slicing off the top of the roof like a can opener peeling back the lid of a can of sardines.

Vergil glanced upwards as he could see the roof of their vehicle being torn into, the heat of the blade a mere inches from his cheek as suddenly most of it was ripped off and thrown over the side of the cliff, Varanus having used his telekinetic abilities to shear off the bulk of it and toss it away with a mighty roar. Glancing down, he sneered at the occupants within, glaring right at Triste. "'ello poppet!" he exclaimed, and immediately thrust a small syringe downward right towards her.

"No!" Vergil's eyes widened and his tail lashed out, looping itself around Varanus's wrist and forcing it up against part of the roof, causing him to cry out and drop the syringe on reflex, where it rolled into the back passenger foot wells.

"You little rat!" Varanus shouted, and overpowered Vergil's tail before backhanding the gecko fiercely across the side of his head, snapping it off to the left and causing the lizard to almost black out. Lights danced in his eyes as he gave out a gasp and slumped a bit forward against the back of Tony's seat, temporarily dazed from the force of the blow.

"Son of a bitch! I am SO not insured for this!" Tony said with exasperation, struggling to keep the Rover on the road. He wanted to turn around and help, but he was powerless to do anything without giving up control of his ride, and that kind of chance was way too risky to take on a road like this. The only thing he could think of was to slam on the brakes, causing them to screech and throwing Varanus off his feet, but the Nile monitor held on, his claws shooting out to grip what was left of the roof before hauling himself up as Tony sped up again, dirt and rocks flying out behind the Rover's tires in a great spraying gush that dinged off the windshield of the Jeep behind them...

Triste threw herself back as Veranus plunged his hand down, the syringe glinting in the sunlight - but in the confined space of the Land Rover, she could barely move to avoid it. Luckily, Vergil's tail jerked it away from her just before the needle could pierce her skin. She heard a heavy thwack as the monitor's hand connected hard against Vergil's face, and in the corner of her eye she saw the gecko slump over... but she didn't have time to check on him. Using the distraction to her advantage, she jerked down and made to grab the syringe lying on the floor - but Tony hit the brakes to try and shake Veranus off the roof, and the momentum caused the needle to roll further up, out of reach underneath Soren's seat in front. Triste herself was thrown forwards, her shoulder twisting painfully as she fell awkwardly into the foot well. "Damn it!"

Looking up, she saw that the monitor was starting to turn his attention back on the rest of them. Triste tried to pull her knife out, but her arm was still numb. Swearing, she activated her camouflage augment and rolled over, underneath Veranus. Leaping up, Triste wrapped arm around the lizard's neck and swung her head forwards, headbutting him as hard as she could in the face.

Slouching back in his seat, Axel was trying to distract himself when around them the windows started shattering, glass raining down on them. From in front, he heard the unmistakable rattle of gunfire. Gasping, he leaned down even further and reached out with his right arm, making sure Lily was down too. "What... what the fuck?!" he yelled. Why did this have to be happening here, now, of all places?!

"Jesus christ... alright, I'm on it!" he shouted back to Marita, looking around desperately for her purse, but he couldn't see it. "Where?! Where is it?! I don't..." Craning his neck, he suddenly caught sight of it on the floor. Lunging, he snatched it up and ripped the handgun from it. Blinking in the dust that was being thrown up from the Jeep in front and flying through the broken windscreen, he tried to get a good aim... but another volley of bullets tore through the Rover, pounding the rear seats and he was forced back down out of sight. Damn it... never gonna get a good shot like this... Feeling sick, he glanced back at Lily. "Hold my shirt! And stay low!" Lying flat in the foot space, he reach up and pushed open his door, then started to lean out precariously. Craning his neck, he could just manage to peak under the door and catch a glimpse of the Jeep in front... and its tyres. "Oh, son of a bitch..." Trying not to think about the deathly drop meters from his face, or the fact that a bullet could rip his head off at any second, Axel squeezed the trigger, trying to aim for the rear left tyre. But the Rover was jolting around over the rough road, throwing his aim off, and the first few bullets slammed uselessly into the side of the Jeep.

Varanus grunted as Triste slammed her head into him and sent him reeling, but his foot claws tore into the third of the roof that remained on top of the Rover, and he snarled at her, sweeping his tail out to try and fell his unseen assailant. He knew it had to be Agent Acyle, since he'd seen her vanish using some sort of adaptive camo no doubt.

Vergil groaned and held his head just as Varanus activated his energy blade again and began hacking in the direction Triste had attacked him from. "Triste..." Vergil said weakly, not seeing her anymore. "Triste!" he yelled out, snapping back into consciousness in a rush. He searched frantically for her, but not seeing her, he steeled himself as he leaped onto the roof of the Rover and ignited his own blade, Varanus just barely able to block it in time as Vergil attacked him. "What did you do with Triste, you bastard?" the gecko demanded angrily as the monitor swung on him and Vergil ducked aside and parried the blow, using his agility to his advantage. Of course... he also had to be careful not to topple over the side, as standing up on this vehicle was hard enough as it was without it bouncing and swerving as Tony struggled to keep it on the road.

"Why don't you ask her yourself!" Varanus growled back as their blades locked, bounced away and locked again.

Behind them, the gun battle still raged, though Axel's first shots had been pretty ineffective. That being said, many shots went astray as the vehicles rattled on down the road. One of the assailants tried to hose the passenger areas of the Rover in front of him, but only about half made any real contact. Still, they got the same idea, and started attempting to target the tires of Marita's Rover, hoping to at the least disable it and at the most send it over the edge out of control.

Soren screamed profanities as the gun battle raged in and around the Land Rover. Rose was huddled in a ball next to him.

"Not this shit again!" He ducked down and dragged his automatic rifle from its position under the rear seat. Slapping a magazine into the weapon, he chambered a round and set the fire selector to burst.

He took aim at the jeep behind him. Not an easy task considering the bouncing and swerving that Axel was doing to try and evade the gunfire and stay on the road and he was leaning out the now shattered rear window. Neverthless, he managed to draw a bead on the center of the windshield and fire a 3-round burst.

Unbeknownst to everyone below on North Yungas Road, Marion was watching the gun battle unfold. The Human was clinging onto a sheer rock face several hundred feet above them. Her left arm had morphed into a set of four diamond tipped claws that dug into the rock and anchored her in place. Her legs also extended their grappling claws, anchoring her onto the rock face.

She nodded as she peered through the compnoculars. She spotted the white Gecko fighting with a Monitor atop one of the lead vehicles. Behind them, a few other vehicles were in a rolling shootout.

Marion snapped a few photos with the compnoculars and sent them to Mace. She then stashed them inside her bag.

"And now, time to fly." She released her anchors, allowing her to fall backwards from the rock face. The flying frame's wings extended and the engines sputtered slightly before she rocketed ahead of the battling vehicles.

But as she fell, her frame's wings briefly cast a shadow over the vehicles.

Marita was forced to weave as the cars in front of her tried to shoot out her tires. rocks and debris trickled off the sheer ledge, as the cars swerved back and forth. here the road was getting slightly wider but not by much.

Still cloaked, Triste ducked underneath Veranus' tail as it swung viciously towards her, falling back onto the seat. She winced as her hand came down a shard of broken glass, the jagged edge slicing into her palm. Beside her, Vergil called her name but she didn't respond - at the moment, her cloaking was one of the only advantages they had over the attacker. Jerking the sliver of glass from her hand, Triste pulled herself forwards, moving further up in the car as Vergil and the monitor battled above.

Clambering across the front passenger seat, she swung herself out the open window and onto the bonnet. Resisting the wind that was buffeting her from behind and the wild momentum of the car, Triste crept up behind Veranus as he swung his energy sword at Vergil and brought a knee up between his legs, hard. At the same time, she wrapped an arm around his right leg and tried to throw him off the roof... but the car suddenly swung to the side and she lost her balance, sending the two of them tumbling backwards and onto the bonnet. Triste felt a tingle as her cloaking augment deactivated. Staring into Veranus' eyes, Triste snarled and shot her elbow forwards, aiming to crush his trachea.

Axel fired off another shot, swearing loudly as it missed the Jeep completely. "Godammit! Marita, try and keep it still-" he started to yell. Then he cried out as the Rover swerved to the right and he slid forwards, almost tumbling right out of the car. Just before he did, his wildly kicking feet caught up in one of the seat belts and he was jerked to a halt, the rat's face inches from the rough dirt road speeding past.

Shouting, Axel's arms flew about wildly as he tried to reach back to pull himself back in, and his finger squeezed compulsively on the trigger of the pistol. The gun fired, and the rear passenger window of the Jeep in front shattered, blood spattering across the glass as one of the gunmen was hit. Axel didn't notice. "Gah! Help me!" he shrieked, tensing his caught leg and praying the seat belt didn't give out.

Soren ducked down as bullets whizzed past him. He grabbed Axel with his free hand and helped pull him into the vehicle.

"It's okayóshit!" He fell back into the seat as a bullet smashed into hia chest. Luckily, he was wearing the ballistic vest that had been helpfully provided by Tony.

The Human was scrunched against the backseat and breathing heavily. He clutched his injured ribs. Even through the ballistic vest and the augmentworker's shock absorbant clothing, the impact was still quite harsh.

"Rose, take my rifle and return fire. I'm not sure if I have a bruise or busted rib," Soren said between gritted teeth. He unslung his rifle.

Rose Grabbed the rifle from Soren ' Stay down " she said." She checked the ammo to see how much ammo the gun had left then she took a position Rose took aim at the Jeep and fired. and was rewarded with a loud pop as one of the jeeps back tires blew out. the jeep began swerving erratically.

Even though the Jeep's tire was out, the driver was skilled, and slammed on the brakes to prevent any skidding or swerving. The Jeep ground to a halt broadside to the road, and even though the gunman in the front passenger seat had been killed by Axel's lucky shot, the other gunmen exited with perfect, stationary shots to make at Marita's vehicle. Squeezing off a burst, one of the attackers was rewarded with the satisfying sound of both rear tires on Marita's Rover bursting, despite the moving target.

Above the first Jeep (the one Varanus had come from), one of the gun-toting assailants glanced up to see Marion high above them. "The hell?" he asked, pulling the slide back on his rifle and pumping rounds off into the sky, trying to down this mysterious "newcomer."

Up ahead, Varanus suddenly found himself keeled over from a blow between his legs. Vergil backed off, wondering what had happened, and then watched as both Triste and Varanus were thrown onto the bonnet, Triste suddenly becoming visible to him. That's what she had done! Used her cloaking device! Of course! But unfortunately, the swerving of the Rover caused Vergil to lose his balance as well, and as Varanus and Triste went down, so too did Vergil, the gecko flying off the side and just barely managing to grab on to the Rover's mostly open roof with one hand. Yelling out as he looked below him, he could see the fall was not insignificant... it was a long way down.

Varanus grinned wickedly and swiftly caught Triste's hand as she tried to go for his trachea. Roaring out, he smashed her hand down onto the roof and held it fast, squeezing it as he tried to crush it. "Not so fast!" he called, throwing a punch at her head now with all the strength behind it he could muster, which was a lot considering his build.

Vergil ground his teeth as Tony began slowing to see what was going on with Marita's Rover in the back. Groaning, Vergil stuck his sword on his belt and hauled himself up, getting a better grip thanks to the slower speed, though Tony wasn't backing off too much just yet. "Get off her you son of a bitch!" Vergil said through clenched teeth in his threateningly deep voice as he pulled himself back up onto the Rover.

Triste yelled as something popped in her hand and she felt a sharp pain run up her arm. Throwing up her remaining free hand, she tried to stop Veranus' attack, but his fist powered through her defense, crunching against her cheek and slamming her head down against the roof.

Dazed, tasting blood, Triste tried to pull away, but the monitor still held her firmly by the hand and she couldn't move. Numbly, she reached for her pinned forearm. If she could only get to her knife...

Axel gasped with relief as he felt hands pulling him back into the car. "Th... thanks!" Pulling the door shut, he bent down and checked how many shots left in the pistol. Three more, and he didn't know if Marita had any spare clips - they were going to have to count.

He heard a rattle of gunfire from the driver's seat, and he jerked his head up to see Rose fire off a burst at the Jeep in front. Axel heard the tyres burst, and he cheered. "Yeah! Nice one!" As they passed the slowing vehicle, he held a finger up to them. "Fuck you all!" he cried, a slightly unhinged grin plastered across his face. The gunmen opened fire, and he ducked down... and heard a loud pop as the rear tyres on their vehicle were torn apart. Swearing, Axel held on tightly as the car started to swerve, veering dangerously close to the edge. "Aw, crap! Don't stop!" he yelled to Marita, firing the last three bullets off at the gunmen as they disappeared in the distance. If they stopped here, he knew how quickly they'd be outgunned... and there was only one way that could end.

Marita Swore on both rear tires blew. metal scraped against the ground as she struggled to keep the car on the road ' up ahead the road was widening as it headed down, it was maybe 100 feet to go before they could breathe a bit easier.. and try and ditch the jeep.
Rose checked how many rounds were left in Sorens Gun ' Ok, I have 9 shots left' she said as Axel fired off a few more rounds..' better make them count..' she said. She took aim and fired at the Jeep ahead of them, the one menacing Tonys Rover. the back window of the jeep exploded in a hail of glass, who tricked both out of the vehicle and inside. screams from the vehicle indicated there had been some injuries from flying debris ' but Rose wasnt ready to celebrate just yet.

Vergil grimaced as he saw the monitor's fist connect with Triste's face. She seemed to be clearly dazed now, and Varanus had the upper hand. Swatting her free hand away, he went in for another blow before Vergil stood over him. "I said... get off her!" he ordered, igniting his blade again as Varanus was forced to roll to the side as Vergil swung at him (carefully though to avoid Triste).

Bringing his own blade out, Varanus once more connected with Vergil's sword, but this time, momentum wasn't on his side. Vergil used the blow of the two swords to cause his own to rebound and slice downward, connecting with Varanus's right leg, causing him to scream out in pain as he went down on one knee. Vergil didn't aim to cripple, but he did aim to disable, and the gecko was able to move to interpose himself between Triste and Varanus now, the monitor hanging on in this fight as he swung again, but much weaker this time. Vergil easily turned aside the blow and sliced into Varanus's arm, causing a burn that led to the bigger lizard dropping his sword off the side of the Rover.

Vergil saw his chance, and raised his hand even as the persistent Varanus moved to both telekinetically grab his sword and throw his fist into Vergil's chest. The gecko wasn't anticipating it, and the two of them connected almost simultaneously: Vergil managed to psionically throw Varanus off the back of the Rover right as the monitor's fist connected with his chest. The gecko had barely managed to beat Varanus though, making Varanus's blow less fierce, but it still knocked Vergil backwards and onto Triste with a big "Oooof!" escaping him as he went down.

Varanus was tossed backwards and slammed into the windshield of the Jeep behind him, cracking the glass and causing the driver to swerve dangerously as Veranus toppled and rolled off the Jeep. Both turned towards the cliff's edge, and the Jeep's momentum carried it onwards even as its brakes screeched. "SHIT!" the driver yelled, seeing oblivion before him as the Jeep drove right off the cliff and tumbled over the edge to impact with trees and vegetation on the way down, the force of the blows rattling, severely crippling and outright killing the occupants before the Jeep crumpled into a compact shell as it finally struck the bottom with a sound like a thousand panes of glass shattering at once. By the time it was over, the Jeep looked as if a giant's fist had slammed it into the Earth, and there was no way any of the occupants could've survived; the Death Road had just added even more victims to its record.

Tony began slowing the Rover down now to help out his companions behind him, as he saw they were in serious trouble with their tires. Varanus was nowhere to be seen: he had managed to roll over the side but had fortunately for him landed in a smaller tree growing off the side of the mountain. He'd managed to break his fall somewhat, but was still badly injured. He decided to remain stationary to avoid detection, and was barely conscious at this point anyway, the warrior struggling to remain aware of his surroundings even as blackness threatened to engulf his vision.

Tony fumbled with the trunk of the Rover, throwing it open and tearing into his luggage to retrieve a pistol he'd packed away in there. He'd opted for an older projectile weapon, since lasers would've raised more questions at the airport. "Come on!" he shouted to Marie. "We've gotta give the others some cover!" Taking shelter behind the Rover, Tony fired at the second Jeep off in the distance, doing his best to avoid Marita's Rover in between the two.

Vergil was winded, gasping for breath as he lay on top of Triste. "Damn..." he managed to wheeze. "Are you... are you all right?" he asked her, thinking only of her first as he battled to regain his breath. Some drops of water fell on his face from a small nearby waterfall that cascaded down over the Yungas Road. The water felt good to the gecko, and he closed his eyes, just barely having the strength to roll off of Triste and onto his belly.

Only the rearmost Jeep remained, but they weren't going anywhere with a blown tire. Although they continued firing on Marita's Rover, the distance was gradually increasing, and they were taking fire now from Tony up ahead as well. Suddenly, they heard Varanus's voice in their ear buds. "If any of you assholes are still alive, I'd really appreciate an extraction!"

"Uh, right boss!" the driver responded. "Get a new tire on this thing!" he ordered, and one of the three surviving gunmen moved to get the spare off the back of the Jeep and change it out, even as Tony managed to hit one of them in his neck, causing him to fall backwards behind the Jeep and leaving only two remaining.

Marie searched around in her belongings before locating a handgun buried underneath her makeup kit. You take out the guys I'll go for the tires" She said to Tony.Marie managed to get in a hit after a few misfires, hearing a pop as the front left tire went out. ' thats one down' she shouted as she saw the two survivors trying to change out one of the back tire.

Lily's eyes went wide as she noticed Soren take a brutal hit to the chest. Quickly she reached around the passenger front seat and grasped Soren's hand. "Just try to stay still," she whispered softly in his ear.

Closing her eyes and seeming almost oblivious to the gunfire and the car chase, she traced his chest with her hands and took a deep breath. Slowly the pain in Soren's chest began to siphon away, the swelling going down and the skin over the rib regaining its normal color. At the same time, blood started to trickle down Lily's nose as an identical bruise started to discolor her chest underneath her dress. She gasped and shuddered in pain, but continued healing Soren.

Soren gasped as he saw what Lily was doing and from the fact that his chest no longer ached.

"Lily, stop before you harm yourself! I'll be fine!" he exclaimed.

The gunfire mostly missed Marion, but one bullet lodged itself in her flying frame's wing but doing no damage. She engaged the boost on her frame and sped forward, quickly taking her out of range.

"Mace," she said into her throat mike. "I have located Vergil. He is with the other infiltrators. However, they were attacked by a group of unknown alliegence. I am sending over the photos now."

She then pressed a button on her compnoculars to send the contents of the memory card to Mace via an encrypted satellite uplink.

Groaning, Triste sat up slowly, ignoring the sounds of gunfire as Tony covered the approaching Rover. She extended her arm outwards, and winced at the unnatural angle that her dislocated index finger was pointing. "Yeah. I'm fine," she muttered lowly, gripping it tightly and snapping it back in place with a crunch, breath hissing through her teeth. "Bastard." Triste paused, and probed the interior of her mouth with her tongue. One of her teeth was hanging loose, the gum torn from where Veranus' fist had knocked it out of place. Rolling her eyes in frustration, she reached in and yanked the tooth free with a grunt of pain, dropping it on the floor and spitting a mouthful of blood beside where it fell. "Bastard," Triste growled again.

She rose to her feet and staggered over to where Vergil lay on his front. "Are you okay?" Looking down at him, the gecko didn't seem like he was hurt too badly, at least. Triste offered a hand down to him. "Thanks for the help. He was... stronger than I thought he'd be." The acknowledgement of her failure left a sour taste in her mouth.

Axel glanced ahead through the broken windscreen, and saw with a rush of relief that Tony's Rover was drawing steadily closer. Looking back, he saw the gunmen from the second Jeep, dwindling in the distance, take cover from the bullets rocketing their way courtesy of Tony and the others. The rat grinned. "Holy crap... maybe we're actually not about to die..."

He turned to look triumphantly at the others in the car - and his expression froze when he saw Lily using her powers on Soren. "Hey!" Axel said quickly, sliding across the seat and putting a hand gently on the arm she'd extended to Soren. "Come on! Look, he's fine! You don't need to..." His mouth tightened at the sight of the blood trickling down her nose. "Please Lily... stop. You know I don't like it when you do this..."

"Yes I'm... I'm fine." Vergil nodded, a bit breathless in his speech as he pushed himself up painfully to his knees. "Oooh! I think... I think I'm OK." He held his side, and was pretty sure it'd be bruised. It didn't feel like any of his ribs were broken though... which was probably a good thing, considering they'd most likely have another challenge at the waypoint. "I'm glad you're mostly all right." the gecko told Triste sincerely, noting the fire was starting to die down the closer Marita limped her Rover to the group. "He was... very strong, yes." Vergil nodded here, chewing his lower lip as he got shakily to his feet and look down the cliff. "Much stronger than I was anticipating. We didn't get him... don't ask me how I know... I just do." the gecko stated with concern, scanning the jungle below but seeing nothing.

"Let's get these vehicles around the bend up ahead! We can change out the tires up there!" Tony shouted to Marita as she got close. Fortunately, each Rover had a spare tire on the inside of the trunk... he just hoped neither of them had been punctured. Emptying his clip, the ferret backpedaled and headed for the driver's side of his Rover, sliding in and putting it in gear so they could move around a bend in the cliff and get some protection. That was the nice thing about the North Yungas Road: it had plenty of curves and turns offering concealment.

Leading the way, Tony drove ahead until they were around the corner and then pulled up a bit so Marita would have room to stop in shelter. Exiting his vehicle, Tony rounded the Rover carefully and headed for Marita. "Who were those assholes?" he asked Vergil on the way. Vergil, having managed to stay low on the roof as Tony drove, shook his head. "I have no idea. No!" he said suddenly, light coming into his eyes. "They were... yes the big fellow... he was... um... he was with me back when I served with Rex! Uh... can't remember his name but... he was pretty friendly with Kalis, if I recall. Yeah! So he must be one of Kalis's then!" Vergil exclaimed, pleased he could remember such details.

"Damn... how in the hell did he find us?" Tony asked, shaking his head as he walked over to the second Rover. He put on a grin for the others in the second vehicle, trying to keep morale up. "Lovely afternoon so far, eh?" he asked, shaking his head in amazement as he came around to Axel's side. "You all right?" he asked the occupants, looking inside. "I think we should get those tires changed and continue on our way as soon as we can... no use sitting out here, after all." he pointed out, noting they were still pretty high up on the mountainside.

Vergil hopped down from the roof now carefully, as too far and he'd fall. "Well... Kalis is clearly tracking us somehow... I don't know how but he's tracking us." He looked at Triste in profile. "So... it seems he wasn't after me though... why would he be after you?" he queried, finding this to be most curious. "That's twice now it seems he's tried to nab you. What gives?"

On the cliff side, Varanus was grunting as he was hauling himself up hand over hand, using his claws to their full advantage. He'd slide down every so often, but he was not going to die on this mountain! Snarling, he pulled himself the last few feet and up over the side. Panting, he stood slouched for a moment, catching his breath. Those... those bastards! No one got the better of him like this! How dare they! He was far superior to these worms! But that white gecko... who was he? Varanus thought he looked vaguely familiar... but he couldn't exactly place him. He was skilled with a blade... that was for sure... and was a psion to boot... perfect. But he'd been told Agent Acyle was psionic too. She hadn't demonstrated any of that in the fight... but perhaps that was smart... this way, he wasn't sure just what she was capable of.

Looking up the road to his two survivors, he growled in his throat. No... it wasn't over yet... he'd regroup... kill these bastards and take Agent Acyle to Kalis... he'd accomplish his mission. But first things first... he couldn't fight in such a diminished capacity like this... he'd need to recuperate... and then he'd get them... every last one of them... they'd all die slow and painful deaths for this!

Wiping blood from his mouth, the Nile monitor began heading back up the road towards the Jeep, a look of deep anger in his eyes.

Mace pulled the pictures up on the HUD in his office, and frowned. "Hmm... well hello... who are we here?" he asked, running some of the faces of the attackers through his database. Most of them were matched to soldiers in Kalis's army... perfect. So Kalis was getting involved in this. Mace had met him only once... years ago, and he'd been very timid and shy back then. Now he was a crazy nutcase hellbent on destroying the world. How times change...

Sighing, Mace tapped his chin thoughtfully. "I see... well... those are Kalis's goons. Interesting that Kalis would be after them... are you all right?" he asked Marion. "Were you spotted? You know... I'm thinking of something..." Mace said in quick fire, trailing off and not elaborating at the moment.

"I was shot at but I don't think they recognized me," Marion replied. "Probably thought I was from one of the mining corporations in Bolivia. Anyways, what are my orders?" She was perched on a ledge of rock no wider than a Human hand. Her prosthetic legs had reconfigured into spiked "hooves" that gave her maximum grip. Her left arm had extended its grappling claws, anchoring her to the rock face.

Soren climbed out of the vehicle with the jack in hand. "I got shot but I'm okay thanks to the ballistic vest we packed." He slipped the jack under the Rover and slowly began to jack up the vehicle. "Anyways, anyone know those assholes?"

As he was jacking the vehicle up, he got a glance over the side of the road. He visibly shuddered.

He averted his gaze to avoid losing his lunch or fainting. He turned to Rose who had his rifle. "Could you keep watch, please?"

Triste shook her head, climbing down and landing next to Vergil. They really were after her.. But why? She was sure Vergil would be the focus of their attention - if he wasn't, then there was only one reason why Kalis would be interested in her. But how the hell could he know?

She turned to look at the waterfall, her eyes fixing on the water as it thundered down. If the Ivitz found out that she was about to let this information slip, the repercussions on her could be... substantial. But the way things were going, maybe revealing why she could be of so much interest would be safer. She swallowed and glanced at Vergil. Even to him.

"I... might know why they'd be after me." Rubbing the side of her jaw where Veranus had struck her, Triste turned to Vergil. "If the Ivitz knew that I told you what I'm about to, I could be in serious trouble." After staring at him to make sure he got the message, she took a deep breath. "Kalis might not be interested in me, exactly. It's more the... information I could present him with. My brain's been modified to give me a neural link to the Ivitz Federation's entire defense network. It lets me communicate with the lead members of the Federation, and - more importantly - gives me direct access to the information passing between the various fleets and defense forces. So if Kalis ever managed to get his hands on that kind of data... he'd know everything. All the Ivitz's strategies, all plans taking place - Kalis would be one step ahead of us, and the Federation would be powerless."

Triste clenched her jaw. "It's the Ivitz's greatest secret, how they've managed to secure their power. There's a number of us that have the ability, but nobody else is meant to know - not even other agents working for the Ivitz. So when I was trying to think why Kalis would be interested in me, I didn't think... I still don't know how he could have found out. But we have to work under the assumption that if he's going to this much trouble, then he must know." She looked Vergil directly in the eyes. "Kalis can't be allowed to gain access to it. At any cost. Even if it means..." she pointed a finger to her temple and mimed pulling a trigger. "And if for some reason I'm not able to, I want you to promise that you will."

Axel blinked. "It's okay, don't be sorry. Hey, you're okay, aren't you? Nothing hit you?" He quickly looked her over, but apart from some small glass fragments on her dress, she seemed alright. He brushed it off and gave her a shaky smile. "Okay... it looks like we're fine."

He looked at Tony and grimaced. "Oh yeah... lovely... but not enough bullets and close calls, if you ask me." He saw his legs were shaking, and he willed himself to calm down. They weren't out of the woods yet, and losing his nerve now wouldn't help anyone. He took a deep breath and scratched his head, nodding across at Soren. "Alright, I'll, ah... I'll help put on the other tyre." He flashed a grin at Tony. "Thanks for the cover back there... for a second I thought I was gonna have to get used to looking a lot more, ah... holey than usual."

Axel walked around the car to the second shredded tyre and shrugged his shoulders. "I've got two ideas who those guys were. They were either the worst tour guides in the world or -" he gestured in Vergil's direction, where the gecko was talking with Triste - "It was Kalis' guys trying to stop him. Though I'd be willing to bet on the tour guides idea." He looked over at Lily. "I hope Ejlert's friendlier than they were. Especially when he finds out I'm involved with his mom." The rat stopped himself, realising it probably wasn't the best time to make a joke like that. "Sorry."

Vergil could tell what Triste was going to say needed to be kept secret, so he allowed her to pull him aside so she could relay the information. The gecko habitually chewed on his lip as he listened, taking in the information with a steely gaze, looking for all the world as if his brain were processing it all with the efficiency of a super-computer. "I see..." He said slowly here, digesting it. "You... my god... the entire defense network... that would explain it!" he gasped softly, shaking his head. "So... it's not just the warship he's after... he wants it all... to know our every move before we even make it! That... that makes sense... but how did he find out?" he asked, more to himself than to her, as he knew she didn't have the answer to that.

He tapped his fingers on his snout, drumming them thoughtfully. But then she asked him to kill her if she was threatened with capture if she wasn't capable of doing so herself. "What?" he gasped, going paler than usual as his eyes bulged out at this. "No! I-I couldn't!" he shook his head, almost fearfully here, his voice stammering. "I don't believe in... sacrificing others like that... that's... terrible." he said softly, lowering his eyes and averting his gaze from her.

Swallowing hard, he finally looked up at her again after a moment. "Triste... I can't promise you that... but... I promise if it comes to that... which it won't because I'm going to keep you safe no matter what... then I'll assess the situation and make a judgment based on what I think the best course of action to be. It won''t come to that, OK? It won't." Vergil said sternly. "Because I'm going to keep you safe... all right?" Vergil told her sternly, the conviction of a steel wall behind his words. "No one gets left behind... no one." he said resolutely.

He then turned, and headed towards the others now, flexing his wrist to crack it and exercise it after having been using his blade for the past several minutes.

Tony was smiling at Axel's jokes, and shaking his head. "Yeah... if you can't laugh at your imminent death, what can you laugh at?" the ferret asked, chuckling here at Axel's "holey" comment. "I dunno... maybe they were guides pissed off we didn't take their tour... somehow though... I doubt that." Tony stuck out his tongue and jogged over to the back of his Rover to get the tire out and roll it over to Axel.

As he was performing this task, Vergil spoke up as he rejoined the others. "They were Kalis's men... that monitor... he was friends with Kalis... I remember a little about him. Makes sense he'd be one of Kalis's best after Kalis killed Rex. They were after me." he lied to the others, keeping Triste's secret safe for now. "The waypoint is a few miles ahead... but we're gonna have to reach the top of the mountain... Tony brought some climbing equipment, so hopefully none of you are too banged up to do some rock scaling." the gecko commented here, looking around at the group.

Tony had by now rolled the tire over to the rat. "Sure! I mean what are we gonna do? Turn around and go home? We came this far after all..." the ferret commented wryly.

Mace continued pondering his next move, then finally spoke to Marion over the comm link. "Would you be comfortable making contact with them to gain further information?" he asked her here. "I know you're more a security agent but... is that something you could do?" he inquired.

Lily crawled out of the Jeep, holding her chest and wincing. "Is anybody wounded?" she asked. She glanced at Soren. "How are you feeling?" she asked him.

Still, she couldn't help smirk at Axel's joke despite the situation. It's nice to see most of us still have the same survivalist spirit that got us through last time, she thought.

Triste stared out at the waterfall as Vergil walked away, his words replaying in her mind. He... really has changed... She looked over her shoulder and watched him walk towards the rest of the group, chewing her swollen lip thoughtfully. After a moment, she sighed and shook her head, almost irritably, and turned to make her way over and join the group.

Axel pulled the ruined tyre off, slid the new one onto the frame then started tightening the lug nuts back on. After several minutes, he stood back up and rolled his shoulders. "Right, that's done. I guess I heard wrong down there, but it sounded like you said we're going to use climbing equipment?" He chuckled.

"You've got a problem with that?" Triste asked as she came up behind the others, folding her arms.

Axel's chuckle was cut off with a strangled sound. "You... you're serious? We need to climb?" He gulped. "Climb high?"

"So? You've never gone rock scaling before?"

"Oh no... as a technician, we've all got to pass the rock scaling exam. I'm an expert, trust me." He rubbed a hand through his hair, unknowingly messing it up with black grease, and blinked. "Okay... can't, ah... can't hurt to try new things, I guess." Axel looked at Tony. "Just as long as the equipment doesn't make my ass look big," he tried weakly.

Seeing that everyone else was just kind of standing around, Tony sighed, and went to change the second tire while Axel worked on the first. "Oh I don't think you'll have to worry about that." the ferret grunted, beginning to pull off the nuts with a spanner from his Rover. "Besides... strong guy like you with those augmented arms... climbing rocks should be a piece of cake, right?" he asked, grinning as he looked over at Axel from the other side of the vehicle. "You can't get muscle fatigue like the rest of us, right?"

Vergil shook his head at Lily's question. "No... just some cuts and bruises." He indicated the cuts on his arms from the glass, and rubbed his side a bit from where Varanus had struck him. "Thanks, though." He gave Lily an affirmative nod.

Tony swapped out the tires and began tightening up the nuts. Vergil gazed straight at Axel now, his large eyes calm and reassuring. "You'll be fine, Mr. Whent. If you can survive killer droids and the Death Road, you can survive a less than 150 foot climb. Just remember to stay calm... panicking leads to more chances of an accident occurring. Maintain your cool and stay collected. Just think of making it through... for Lily's sake." Vergil suggested.

"And... theeere we go!" Tony grunted, making sure the last nut couldn't move any further to the right. "Provided we're all good, we got about another 20 minutes down this road and then we'll be at the spot. As for a first aid kit... uh it's one of the bags. Can't remember who packed it though." Tony confessed, scratching his head and wiping his brow. Damn it was humid in this jungle! His fur was practically matted to his body and his clothes were matted to his fur; not a pleasant situation.

Vergil looked to Triste. "Need any patching up before we go?" he asked her, knowing she'd gotten the worst of the exchange between herself and Varanus, unless of course Varanus was dead... but Vergil didn't sense that.

"I'm fine," Soren said as he gently lowered the car back down. He then winced as he heard the mention of scaling a sheer cliff.

"Wait, we climb up there?" He pointed to one of the peaks high above the ground.

"Affirmative," Marion replied. "Marion out."

She released her anchors and fell backwards from the cliff. As she did so, her flying frame's engines revved up and propelled her forward. Thinking that posing as a tourist with a broken flying frame would arouse the least suspicion, she cut the engines and activated a smoke charge in one of the engines.

The Human soon glided towards the group. Thick black smoke trailed from her right wing engine.

Soren happened to look up as he wiped sweat from his brow. As he did so, he saw a line of thick black smoke in the sky and it appeared to be heading for them!

"The fuck!?" He snatched a pair of compnoculars from the bag and trained them on the object trailing the smoke. His jaw dropped. "Shit! Guys! We've got a frame-flyer coming in for a emergency landing!"

Vergil shook his head. "No, no. We're climbing up there." Vergil corrected Soren, pointing to the top of the sheer sides above the road, about 100 feet above them. "The waypoint is on top of the Yungas Road... so technically, we only need to climb above the road." he explained.

But his thoughts and speech were interrupted by the personal glider belching out black smoke. "Shit!" Vergil exclaimed, noting the troubled look of the flying frame. "Get back!" he ordered, waving everyone back. "Give it room to land!" He held up his hand, ready to telekinetically catch the glider in case it threatened one of the Rovers, and to save the reckless tourist's life.

Lily glanced at all the climbing equipment. "Thank you'd be able to help me figure out what I need to put on, and how?" she asked Triste. "I've never willingly gone rock-climbing in my life, at least as far as I know."

While Lily used to be quite fit before she transferred her conscience into a clone body in Lanthae, the logistics of the clone body having never exercised a day in its growth-accelerated life had taken away her muscles and left an awful lot of baby fat around the curves. She'd since repeatedly learned that a body lacking in fitness was far tougher to work out in than the toned, decently muscled one she'd had before.

Triste shook her head at Vergil. "No, I'm fine. It wasn't my favourite tooth he knocked out. Let's just focus on getting up there." In truth, the torn area of her gum where it had been torn out hurt like hell, but there were more important things to worry about.

She looked at Lily. "Of course. It's not hard to get the hang of." Her eyes flicked over to Axel. "Well, not for most people."

Axel, who'd been staring up open-mouthed at where Vergil was pointing, heard her tone and snapped his gaze down to her. "Hey!"

Triste gave a small smirk at him, wincing at the pain it caused in the side of her mouth, and headed over to Lily. She was about to start explaining what piece of equipment went where, when Soren warned the group about the inbound glider. Turning, the spider gecko eyed the figure warily as they approached.

Moving around the car to stand closer to the group, Axel bit his lip as he gazed up at the smoke billowing from the broken craft. Something tightened in his gut. It could be completely innocent... but after all they'd been through he'd learned that it was worth being suspicious around the unexpected.

Marion circled around to bleed off speed from her "broken" flying frame. When she had bled off enough speed, she descended in preparation to land. While most flying frames relied on an exoskeleton to absorb the impact of landing, Marion opted to use her artificial legs instead.

Unfortunately, she miscalculated and came in too fast. She deployed the anchoring spikes on her legs, carving small gouges in the road as they slowed her down. To further slow herself down, Marion used her left arm (which had a line thrower built in) to launch a projectile that embedded itself deep into the nearest rock face.

She breathed a sigh of relief as the cable grew taut and stopped her mere inches from the edge. Tumbling over the edge was not exactly a problem because of her flying frame but if she flew off, that instantly blew her cover as a tourist with a broken flying frame. Marion grabbed the cable with both arms and carefully reeled herself in.

Once she was safely on solid ground, she severed the cable, leaving it to dangle from the rock face.

Soren put the compnoculars away and rushed to help Marion. "Are you okay, sir?"

Marion took off her helmet and tucked it under her arm, revealing a middle-aged Chinese woman. "I could be better." She retracted the wings on her flying frame.

The pilot was revealed to be a woman of Asian origin, and Vergil relaxed upon seeing she posed no immediate threat. With their string of luck lately, you never knew. Clearing his throat, he stepped forward. "Yes well... I'm glad you're safe, but if you need a ride I'm afraid you're out of luck if you're going back to La Paz. We can't retrace our steps at this point unfortunately thanks to some crazy gunmen back the way we came. Bandits most likely." Vergil lied, but didn't feel ashamed in doing so. They were losing enough time out here as was, and they weren't ultimately here to run a charity service after all.

"To be honest..." he continued here. "We aren't going much further down this road, so I'm not sure we're your best bet for assistance out here. But other motorists should be along at some point if you need a ride somewhere. If not, you'll have to wait until we're done with our 'sightseeing' before you can hitch a ride with us back to La Paz, and we'll gladly take you. Sorry for the abruptness, but we're on a bit of a schedule here..." Vergil stated, glancing back down to the bend, behind which he knew Varanus's men lay in wait, repairing their Jeep to quite possibly continue the chase.

Tony finished changing out the second tire and stood up, wiping his brow again and giving Axel a nod. "Right! I think that about does it for the repair. I couldn't find a lug wrench, so I had to make do with a spanner, but I got the tire on there." Brushing his paws off against his pants, the ferret gave out a "hoo!" of satisfaction that the job was over with.

"Good... then let's get moving." Vergil stated. "However..." he regarded the large flying frame with skepticism. "I don't think we can fit that thing into our Rovers. You'll have to ditch it here, so I hope it wasn't too expensive." the gecko commented. "Oh yes... and I'm Vergil... Vergil Speicher." he introduced himself.

"Tony!" Tony waved, not bothering with his last name for the moment, as he knew some tended to react negatively to the Stracci part, even in this corner of the globe.

Marion sighed. She stepped out the frame, leaving it standing on its own. She pressed a button on the frame and watched as it folded in on itself, leaving a heavy but ordinary suitcase.

"It's a foldable one," she replied.

Soren went to pick up the "suitcase" but couldn't even budge the object. He grunted with exertion but only suceeded in moving it an inch.

Marion chuckled and effortlessly picked up the "suitcase", her powerful mechanized arms whirring slightly. "It's a bit heavy. Anyways, I'll follow until I can find an airport or bus stop."

Axel squinted at Marion's mechanical arms as she lugged the compacted flying frame with apparent ease. "Why couldn't I have been fitted with arms like those?" he asked wistfully, noting how heavy it appeared to have been for Soren. Shrugging dejectedly, Axel leaned forwards and folded his arms across the front of the car. "We should hurry. The faster we get there, the quicker we get this climb over with. And the more distance between us and the... ah, bandits." He waved a hand at Marion. "I'm Axel, by the way."

Triste frowned at the newcomer, not giving her name for the moment. "We're not exactly tourists," she told Marion, her brow knitted. "I'm not sure you're going to like where we're heading." Triste looked over at Vergil and lowered her voice. "Letting her follow us to the waypoint isn't a good idea, Vergil. We have no idea who she is - and even if she's just a civilian, we can't risk her screwing things up for us."

"Guys!" Axel called over anxiously, drumming his fingers against the car's bonnet. "We going?"

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on June 15, 2014, 05:59:39 PM

"Of course not, I know that." Vergil responded to Triste in hushed tones. "I'm not gonna let her accompany us up the cliff, after all. She'll have to wait until we get back." he quietly informed the spider gecko. He noticed Axel impatiently calling for them to get moving, and the white gecko nodded his head. "All right! We're coming along then! Let's reach this point!" he called over, jogging back to Tony's Rover. Marion would have to go with them, as there was no room in Marita's Rover.

Starting up the engine, Tony got the Rover rolling again, glad to be moving away from the gunmen as quickly as they could. It wasn't much further on. Only about 20 more minutes of fur-raising driving along the edge of the North Yungas Road, and they arrived at a hairpin turn. There was a slightly wider area here to safely park off to the side to allow for traffic to still move by them while they left the Rovers to go rock-scaling, and Tony graciously pulled over.

"All right! This is the spot!" the ferret declared, putting the Rover in park and killing the engines.

"Right... let's go!" Vergil exited the vehicle now and moved to the trunk to retrieve the climbing gear. "Sorry." he told Marion. "But this is where we're going to leave you for a bit. This is something we've come here to do, and it doesn't concern you." the gecko stated as he raised the trunk's lid up and began rummaging through the luggage. "We'll be back in a few hours, by my estimate. Just wait here... or flag down a passing motorist if you desperately need a ride; the choice is yours."

Taking out several piton guns, the gecko began passing them out to those gathered around him. "We have four of these, so we'll have to make several trips, but basically just point, fire them at a spot close to the top... they have a range of 200 feet, so we should be fine getting them up there. Then..." He pulled out several harnesses. "Put these on, attach them to the ropes, and begin the ascent. Make sure you get good handholds as you go... if you slip, the ropes should hold you, so there isn't TOO much worry of plummeting but... be careful all the same." he instructed them, then turned, took aim, and fired off the piton. The rope lanced out into the air and upward, the metal spike becoming embedded close to the top of the cliff with a satisfying clink.

"Right... here we go." Vergil murmured, beginning to strap on the vest and fit it snugly around his smaller form. It was like a youth wearing an over sized life vest. He was almost engulfed by it, but he did manage to get it on tightly. Attaching the carabiner to the rope, he gave it a tug a few times and then set off on his climb, jumping up and getting both handholds and footholds. Grunting, he bared his teeth and began hoisting himself up hand over hand, climbing higher to start his ascent a get a pace going.

"Pleased to meet you. I'm Mariah Yin," Marion said, shaking Axel's hand.

Soren was strapping himself into the harness. His rifle and a few spare magazines were strapped across his back.

He took aim with the piton gun and launched the metal harpoon. When he heard the clink of the harpoon penetrating the rock, he gave the cable a gentle tug. "Here goes," he muttered clipping himself into the harness and slowly climbing up the rock face.

Marion watched as the group began climbing. She needed to make sure they were all out of sight before she went digging through their cars.

Triste was helping Lily fasten her equipment. "Just do what... he says... and you'll be fine. There." She finished tightening the harness around Lily's body and stooped down to pick up her own piton gun. "And just keep looking up."

Axel had been watching, and strapped his own harness on to match how Triste had done it. "Oh really? We were going to spend the whole time looking down," he muttered, attaching the equipment to the rope.

Looking back at him, Triste fired the gun up the cliff and heard a clunk as the point hooked into the rock. "That looks good on you."

Beaming, the rat looked down at himself. "Really?"

"No." Triste quickly fastened her straps, and looked between him and Lily. "See you at the top." Giving one last suspicious glance at Marion, she turned and started the climb up.

Axel scowled and poked his equipment. "Would this look good on anyone?" Reaching up, he tested the rope's strength - it seemed to be holding well. "Alright... well, let's do this," he sighed, wrapping his mechanical fingers around two handholds and pulling himself up. "Shout if you need any help, honey," he called across to Lily, climbing higher. "20 credits says I reach the top first!"

Title: Racing the Storm

The climb wasn't particularly strenuous, but it was challenging, Vergil would give it that. He grunted as he pulled himself up, figuring the faster he got this done, the sooner he'd reach the top. The rocks were mostly well embedded into the cliff face, but there was a lot of vegetation to navigate as well. Spitting a plant out of his face, the gecko brushed it aside and continued on climbing, hauling himself up as he exerted himself to make this effort.

Suddenly, he found his fingers suctioning on somewhat well to the sides of the rocks. "Hey!" he exclaimed, noting the effect. "I didn't know I could do this!" But then again, it did make sense, as he was mostly a gecko. "Oh this'll make things easier!" he grinned, practically walking up the side of the cliff now, albeit on all fours. Putting his head down, he moved much more rapidly up the side of the mountain's face, not hesitating as he set his sights on the lip above him.

It wasn't too long before the nimble gecko reached the top, pulling himself up into dense jungle before him on a gradual upward slope. Unbuckling himself, he smiled as Axel proposed a 20 credit competition with Lily. Who knew which of the two would make it up first? He dropped his harness down to Tony, who took hold of it and began strapping himself in. "That was quick!" the ferret called upward.

"Yeah well... never knew my fingers could stick to surfaces like that!" Vergil shouted back down.

Pulling the harness over himself, Tony exhaled heavily, looking up at the wall before him. "OK... I can do this..." he said, and ran forward, jumping up and getting a hold on the rock ledges and closing his eyes for a moment to let it sink in that he was securely on and not plummeting back down to the road. "OK... ha! I did it!" he declared happily, grinning widely as he held himself on. But he noticed he still had a ways to go, so he stopped congratulating himself and pushed on, his muscles already starting to burn as he began scaling the mountain, reaching out for a plant that snapped off in his paw, causing his left side to flail outward a bit dangerously.

"OK! Don't grab the plants!" Tony reminded himself, talking to himself to keep him calm. Lashing out with his left arm, he caught hold of a rock, and pressed onward, not intending to quit; he could rest at the top after all.

Lily smiled. "You're on!" she retorted, mainly to keep him in a good mood. Fashioning her harness, she began climbing arm over arm.

In a few minutes she was huffing and puffing. She couldn't see where Axel was, but her completely unfit body was not taking this hike well.

(Congrats on 6000 LBT!)
Rose Marie and Marita began climbing up, each wore a harness and were making decent progress up the cliffside. Rose ripped out some vegetation so Marie, who was beneath her could get a firm hold. Marita huffed and puffed as she climbed up, her claws not really suited for grabbing holds for very long.. but she made do..they were about a third of the way up the cliff now..

Tony was about even with the trio, struggling to keep up his pace. "God! I'm so not in shape for this!" he bemoaned, noting how difficult it was to keep going. "Hey Vergil! I don't suppose you could like... levitate me up there, right?" Tony asked, grimacing as he battled to hold on.

"Sorry! Not really!" Vergil called back down. "I still need to carry your weight mentally the whole time... not something I can sustain for prolonged periods!"

"Dammit!" Tony cursed under his breath. That would've been way too easy. Looking over at Marita, he decided to try and make conversation to keep him distracted from the climb. "So Marita... you uh... you used to be a stripper, right? And I know you like... are with Marie and Rose... but like... do you like guys at all, or not really?" he asked, grunting again as he pulled himself up a bit further, moving onto a small outcropping of rocks which gave him a foothold. Of all the things to distract himself with... but the ferret supposed there were worse things to be distracted by whilst climbing a practically sheer cliff face. But still... why he was thinking of Marita in this moment was a bit strange, but he'd just roll with it... the words were out of his mouth after all, and there were no take-backs.

An Interesting set of questions Tony. To answer your first question, no I was never a stripper, that was Rose' Marita said as she kept climbing.' We both had drug addictions, but went about sustaining our habits in different ways. She sold her body, I sold my talents with computers. As for guys, well I've had relationships with guys before, in high school and college, but I've found my relationships with girls to be.. well more fulfilling, in an emotional sense. In the strictest sense, I'm bisexual, with preference towards women. So I don't hate guys, if that's what you are thinking. And Tony, if you're wondering about that kiss the girls and I gave Anne, fret not, it was just a friendly goodbye kiss, nothing more than that. We're not involved with her in anyway, other that the fact shes a roommate of ours and is a friend. " Marita continued as she kept climbing up. she was approaching the halfway point "So you can rest easy on that score, and I promise I wont kiss Anne like that again."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on June 16, 2014, 08:22:45 PM

"Oh uh... well no, actually..." Tony responded, trying to keep pace with the girls. "The thing with Anne... I dunno if I have a chance with her or not. She didn't really seem... well I dunno. Maybe when I go back I could ask her again but... actually I was asking out of interest for you." Tony admitted now quickly, wondering just what he was saying. "Thought had just crossed my mind really... an innocent little flight of fancy, I guess." he stated nervously, sweating profusely from the heat, humidity, and exertion he was subjecting his body to.

He tried to laugh it off or act like it wasn't a big deal. He guessed the mind could do strange things when it wasn't sure how much longer it had to live. "So just thought I'd ask is all..." he stammered, wrestling with the rock face as he got higher. Vergil was clearer now, and getting closer in his vision.

"Are you interested in me Tony?" Marita's face soon had a smirk on it.. ' Well, if you're asking me out, Sure, I'll give you a shot. Pick out a place to eat and dinner time and I'll mark it on my calender. First things first though, we need to finish climbing.. looking down from heights isnt good for the appetite " She said as she kept climbing. Marita was slightly ahead of Tony now, which Marie and Rose a bit behind him. it was probably another 25-30 feet to the top now.

"Oh! Well uh... sure!" Tony responded with some enthusiasm, or at least as much as he could muster climbing up a near vertical face of rocks. "I uh... how about after the waypoint, before our flight back?" he suggested, straining a bit as he suddenly felt his legs slip. "Whoa!" he exclaimed, fighting to hold on. Closing his eyes, he waited for the dizzying sensation of vertigo to pass, and stared back up the cliff with determination.

"Dammit... not getting stuck on this mountain!" he snarled, and began hoisting himself up paw over paw. "I hear La Paz is nice generally all year..." he said with trepidation evident in his voice. But he was only a few feet away now, and with a last cry, he pulled himself up and over the ledge, Vergil grabbing hold and tugging him up the last few feet. "Thanks!" Tony breathed, rolling over onto his back and gazing at the sky as he placed a worn paw on his belly, stomach rising and falling as he caught his breath.

Soren was sweating profusely as he hauled himself up the cliff face. He wasn't totally out of shape but he wasn't used to this degree of vigorous exercise. Luckily, being a Human and thus of Simian heritage, he didn't find it as hard as he thought it would be.

"Hey Tony, you get a weird feeling about Mariah?" he said as he clung to a small handhold in the cliff face. "Like she's not who she says she is?" Being an augmentworker, he knew that the woman's augments were a bit overbuilt for simple jungle adventuring. Especially how he saw her effortlessly lift the folded flying frame with one arm.

Marion noticed that the group was out of sight. Double-checking to make sure no one else was around, she retrieved a lockpick from a compartment in her left arm. Heading over to the trunk of Tony's rover, she got to work picking the lock.

Rose and Marie climbed up a few minutes later, but were worn from the long climb and needed a couple minutes to recuperate.. ok' we've made it..' Marie said, wiping the sweat from her brow.. ' How far until the waypoint?' She asked.

"Cool!" Tony responded to Marita breathlessly. "Me neither... uh... yeah! Totally!" he replied to Soren now. "I don't trust her at all! Way too convenient and she had some pretty sweet augments for a clueless tourist. I don't think... I left anything in the Rover that'd give us away though..."

"The really important thing is this." Vergil stated, pulling the locator out of his pouch now. "It shows us directly to the waypoint, which at this point is..." He fiddled with it, adjusting the resolution and studying the distance on the screen. "Half a mile in that direction!" He gestured with his hand, chopping it downward and straight out in the direction they needed to head. "But let's wait till we have everyone, shall we?" he suggested, looking down the cliff side to see if he could spot Axel and Lily and especially Triste, who was foremost in his mind right now.

"Well... I don't think I have anything in my luggage aside from clothes and guns... and she's welcome to either, though I might have something to say about that when I get back down... hoo!" he sighed as he rolled over and tried to push himself up to standing. "OK... time to... do this..." he said with reluctance, groaning as he got to his feet. "Ugggh! That was... a workout." he confessed, shaking his head here and brushing his paws off on his pants.

Soren hauled himself up to a small ledge and took a seat to rest and recover. He nodded. "We need to get rid of her."

Marion popped open the Rover's trunk and dug through the cargo. "Clothes, hiking supplies...just a bunch of...hello!" She retrieved a 12-gauge automatic shotgun. She smiled. Maybe these guys were government operatives.

Axel kept putting one hand above the other, reaching up to grip handholds in the rock and pull himself higher. He resolutely kept his eyes above chest level, the wind starting to buffet his hair into his face distractingly. The climb wasn't as hard as he'd thought it was going to be... but he'd still feel a lot better when there was actual ground beneath him, rather than the small, narrow ledges that he was precariously pushing his feet into. Axel raised his eyes and saw that the top of the cliff was getting close. Ahead a short distance, he could see Triste almost up and over. "We're almost there!" he called across to Lily, picking up speed. He felt a small sprinkling of dust and dirt shower his head, then a small pebble bonked him between the eyes and he yelped. "Hey! Watch it!"

"Sorry!" From above, Triste could see she'd arrived at the peak. Reaching up, she clasped the edge of the cliff and pulled herself over with both hands. Standing up and brushing herself down, she leaned back over the edge, grasped the spike and yanked it out. Turning back to the rest of the group that had already arrived, Triste nodded. "That went well." Removing her gear, she made her way over and leaned next to the others as they recovered. "I suppose it'd be too naive to hope the rest of this goes just as easily."

From behind, Axel's faltering voice drifted up. "We're there! Afterburners engaged!" One hand came over, then the other, and the rat heaved himself into view. Shaking his hair out of his eyes, he looked up at the others and grinned. "We did it! I feel like I could conquer a mountain!" He looked back over the edge, and instantly looked unsettled again. "But not right now..." Flattening himself on his stomach, he reached down and stretched a hand out for Lily.

"Get rid of her, eh? Well then we can always dump her with the next motorist that wanders by, and she can be someone else's problem." Tony suggested, straightening up and looking back down the cliff. "Heh... she's going through our stuff... looks like you were right, Soren." Tony nodded. "Anyway, let's get Lily up here and press on. We got a waypoint to find."

"Right... here..." Vergil reached down, and began hauling up Lily's rope, straining a bit as he wasn't terribly physically strong, but he used his mental abilities to provide short lifts to her, making it easier for her to reach the top and reduce the strain on himself. Finally, Axel was able to get her the rest of the way up, and they were good to go. "Let's bring the ropes up with us, so we can't be followed all that easily... though I'm not sure of course what her capabilities are." Vergil stated, yanking the piton out of the cliff and beginning to pull his rope up.

Tony started doing the same with his as well. "Look, if she somehow still manages to follow us, we deal with her then, all right? No need worrying about it if it won't happen just yet."

"Right... well let's press on. We have a bit of a hike through the jungle, and then we'll be there. I imagine we'll start seeing some ruins before long." Vergil commented, slinging the rope over his shoulder. Taking point, he held the navigator out in front of him, starting to follow it as they entered the thick jungle on top of the mountain now. Insects buzzed around them, and the cry of birds could be heard in numerous trees. Vegetation crunched under his feet as he walked, and he noticed by now the sun was sinking as late afternoon wore on. It would be evening or perhaps even after dark by the time they arrived... hopefully that wouldn't complicate matters. "Lovely stroll through the jungle, eh?" Vergil asked, slapping a mosquito on his neck and killing it with a satisfying splat. He didn't have to worry about picking up any diseases down here: the Federation had provided vaccinations for all of them before departure.

Soren followed. A quick yank on the rope and the piton came free. He placed it back in the gun and tucked the launcher back into its holster. "All I can safely say is that we can assume that her strength and stamina are significantly above Baseline levels. Also, judging from what I saw of her arms, she might have tools in them."

He swore as a mosquito landed on him. He flicked it off before it did anything. Sighing, he sprayed himself with more insect repellant.

Marion sighed as dusk approached. All she found were some weapons and usual travelling gear.

"Mace. This is Marion," she said into her throat mike. "The group I'm with is quite heavily armed but there is nothing that suggests they're government or corporate operatives. Right now, all I know is that they ascended a mountain that I'm currently at the foot of. What are my orders? Over."

"Well, they're an exuberant bunch."

In the dense undergrowth several hundred yards from the top of the cliff, a dark form crouched. Sweat rolled down Kaien's back and insects buzzed about her face, but she remained still, watching and listening. She had heard the voices of the group filtering up from the bottom of the cliff, and then watched as each hauled themselves over the precipice. The woman continued to watch as they moved away from her, their conversation fading into the forest. One word, however, caught her attention as they left the cliffside.

Ruins.

So, that was their purpose.

"How interesting," she murmured to herself. Kaien unfolded herself from a crouch and made her way through the jungle behind them.

"Lovely evening for a jaunt, isn't it?" she called nonchalantly, a hand on one of the shoulder straps of her pack. Her jacket was open, and a pistol could be seen clearly at her hip, her augmented right hand resting upon the grip of the weapon. Over her left shoulder an energy blade handle protruded. Her expression was that of light amusement, her body posture seemingly relaxed despite being faced with the heavily-armed group in front of her.

Soren scowled. He kept his hand near his piton gun. While it lacked the range of his rifle, the hardened metal harpoon it fired was just as deadly as a bullet. "I suppose it is a nice evening for a walk. So what brings you here?"

"Yeah well... we'll deal with her when we get back down. I agree though... she seems more heavily augmented than normal." Vergil gave a nod here. A noise came from behind them now however, and a voice to match. Whirling around, Vergil went for his blade, but didn't draw it just yet, his hand only hovering near it as he gazed upon the newcomer.

Tony had to admit, Kaien had caught him by surprise, and he jumped a bit at the voice, spinning around as well with his paw shooting down to the pistol he'd brought along strapped to his side. "Jeez... a lovely jaunt you say?" he asked, noting the temperature was starting to drop as the sun set. They may be in the jungle, but they were still on top of a mountain, and night could bring rather chilly temperatures up here.

Another one Vergil thought to himself, eyes narrowed a bit here. "Ahem... and you are?" he asked. "What brings you to the top of such a remote peak?" he asked at just about the same time Soren did. Somehow, he thought he already knew her response though. He tapped a finger on his blade, ready to draw it if necessary, but noticed she was rather relaxed, and hostile action was not likely to follow given her posture.

Mace heard Marion's query, and sighed a bit here. "No... I suspect rummaging through their belongings wouldn't confirm their status as government agents. If they do work for the Federation, they'd be much too careful to leave IDs lying around after all. I take it you didn't worm your way into their good graces, then? I can't say I expected you would though, given your augments. Hmmm... have to earn their trust somehow... but before that... is it possible for you to ID their attackers? Did you pick up anything useful about them?" he asked here.

Lily staggered to her feet, panting heavily. "Thanks..." she groaned.

"Hey. Turn around."

While Marion was talking and searching, a motley gang of five had crept out of the woods and had an array of handheld rifles and shotguns aimed at her. Their leader, a heavily scarred female fox, pointed an unwavering pistol aimed perfectly between her eyes.

"We're claiming these vehicles and everything in them. You have one chance to turn and walk away, or lock yourself in a trunk and we'll ditch you somewhere. Do I make myself clear?"

Emilena had made it clear to her gang members; if the stranger did anything that they merited to void her one chance, they had the right to fire without waiting for approval. Flora in particular seemed yearning to take that opportunity.

"Lovely?! That's what you call this?!" Axel stood slouching at the edge of the group, his face twisted in discontent. After only a few paces into the jungle, the oppressive humidity had started to work its way through his clothes, making him feel sluggish, and in an attempt to keep cool he'd taken off his shirt and tied it around his waist. Unfortunately, this had made him an even easier target for the bugs flitting around, and he'd spent most of the time cursing and slapping his body with disgust.

The rat fixed a glum expression on Kaien and shook his head. "Lovely... lovely isn't the word..." He felt a tickle, and out of the corner of his eye Axel saw a spider scuttle into view on his shoulder. His face twitched.

Triste folded her arms and stared back at the woman, her expression not changing at the cries and slaps coming from Axel behind her. Eyes narrowing as she focused on the pistol and energy blade, Triste nodded at Vergil's question. She's not here for a 'jaunt' through the jungle... "Have you been following us?"

"Yeah, bitch. Take a fucking hike," Rio reiterated, waving a small pistol towards Marion with one hand. The other was clasped around a blue ice lolly, which he was licking with satisfaction. Still pointing the gun, the boy turned to look up at Nairda and popped the ice lolly out of his mouth. "Can't we just lock her ass in the trunk anyway?" he asked. His tongue had taken on the same colour as the sugary treat.

a lovely hike is not what i would call this.' Marita said looking at the newcomer. " We have business of our own to attend to, so you are free to go on your way." Marita was not keen on adding another to the group.

Marion frowned. There was no way she'd be able to take on all of them and come out unscathed. She decided to cut her losses.

"Fine, you win." She picked up her compacted flying frame and walked away from the vehicles. Routing around a large tree, she looked up at the high mountain and sighed. A climb would be too slow but at the same time, if she flew, her cover was blown. Making sure there was no one around, she unpacked her flying frame and donned it.

The metallic wings unfolded and the engines spooled up with a quiet cough. The woman then began to slowly rise into the humid air.

Soren looked over the woman. He didn't recognize the Augment nor could he tell what class of augments she had. Regardless, despite the weapons she carried, she seemed to be harmless.

"We're a bit pressed for time," he said. "So pardon us for not wanting to chat. The sun was already below the horizon and only the faintest slivers of light could still be seen.

Kaien did not attempt to suppress a chuckle at the reaction of the group. Ranging from surprise to discontent, they responded to her appearance on the trail behind them. She shrugged and tilted her head to the side thoughtfully.

"I heard you come over the cliff. Seems an odd place, this jungle, to go for a group foray." She motioned to their weapons. "Even more odd to be loaded down as you are. It's not often I see anyone here, much less those such as yourselves. So, as a wanderer, currently of these parts," her tone darkened, and her eyes narrowed in the slightest, "perhaps it's best that I inquire as to why you are here."

Vergil stepped forward now, softening a tad. "Well to be frank, it's not your business. It's something we have to take care of, and it doesn't concern outsiders we don't know, I'm sorry." he apologized here, not being confrontational, but making it clear she wouldn't be coming. "We'd prefer it if we parted ways here with you, no offense."

Tony noted her announcement about how heavily armed they were. "Take our word for it... we aren't up to no good... if we were, we wouldn't be talking right now but most likely engaged in combat so... yeah. Time constraint, as said." the ferret reiterated what Soren had stated.

Triste kept her eyes fixed on Kaien, waiting to see how the woman would respond. Something about her set Triste on edge, and she had no qualms about displaying her suspicion openly and unapologetically. The corner of her mouth tightened - in the brief time they'd been speaking to this newcomer, the jungle had darkened slightly. They were losing light. "We really are in a hurry, and we're on important business. So if you know what's good for you, you'll turn around and forget about us." Her eyes narrowed. "And you won't follow."

Rio watched Marion go with a disappointed frown. "Aw. I wanted to lock her up." Looking towards the vehicles, he saw they'd already been broken open and his expression brightened again. "I call dibs on any of the good shit!" he grinned, dropping his lolly in the dust and running over.

Reaching the closest car, he made his way over to the boot and reached in, grasping one of the travel bags kept inside and pulling it closer. Unzipping it eagerly, he started rifling through the contents. "Shit. Crap," he muttered as he went through, pulling out various items of clothing and dumping them unceremoniously around him. "More shit." His expression creased as he realised that all these clothes seemed to be straight out of an old gangster movie. Rio pulled out a fancy looking cap and turned back to the rest of the gang, waving it around. "Who the fuck dresses like this?!" Turning, he tossed it like a frisbee and watched it sail over the edge of the road. Grinning, Rio turned his attention back to the contents of the car and started rummaging through other bags.

Kaien motioned them onward with a waving of her augmented hand.

"Go on then, off with you all. Enjoy the bugs."

With a fleeting smile and tipping an informal salute, she turned and retreated into the undergrowth, quickly disappearing in the gathering darkness.

Soren swatted a mosquito away. "Call me suspicious but I think she's up to something."

He shook his head as it became dark. "Anyone remember to bring the headlamps?"

Marion flew partway up the mountain but then perched on a rock outcropping as she retracted her wings. Her grappling claws were extended to anchor her in place.

Thanks to her helmet having an inbuilt night vision system, the darkness posed no hinderance to her.

Her left arm's panels slid back, revealing her built-in piton gun. She took aim at one of the rock outcroppings and fired.

Vergil watched her go suspiciously, knowing there wasn't something right about this, and he didn't need to tap into her mind to read that. He was wary and on edge, knowing they were getting close to the ruins. "She might be close by, so don't drop your guard. We've had too many newcomers for this to be a coincidence." he commented.

Tony nodded, and the group pressed on into the jungle, the temperatures falling as darkness began overtaking the mountainside. Tony cursed his lack of foresight, but at least he had his fur to keep him warm. As for Vergil, he didn't seem to mind it so much, pressing on with determination in his orange eyes as they followed the navigator.

Before too long, upon a gradual slope, black forms rose up like teeth in the night. The moonlight bathed them in a soft glow, revealing them to be stone ruins that had mostly collapsed over the years thanks to the elements. A large, open area stretched out ahead of them, with some of the same paintings from before clearly visible on what remained of the walls. "Here we are!" Vergil declared, grinning as he made his way forward. He almost stumbled as blocks of stone came out of the Earth to meet his feet, the remnants of an ancient stairway leading up to the ruins clearly visible to him now.

It was strangely serene up here, but foreboding as well. The night air didn't stir as they advanced. The silent ruins were watching them, or at least that's how it seemed to the gecko. The remains of the walls were more like bared teeth or silent sentinels as opposed to a temple. The years had not been kind to this place, and it showed. It was like they were walking through a cemetery for giants, the massive stone slabs resembling tombstones 20 feet or more in height. It was unnerving to say the least.

"So this place looks cheery." Tony cracked, half expecting zombies to suddenly pop out of the ground. He kept his hand on his pistol, planning to go right for the headshots if that did occur. He'd played enough Left4Dead and Resident Evil to be ready for it, after all.

Vergil could clearly see the waypoint in the middle of the ruins. It's chrome-like surface glinted dully in the moonlight, the metal sphere sitting silently atop its podium. There was also a console that was badly rusted in front of it, and Vergil stopped upon reaching it. "Well... moment of truth... let's see if Rex is the only one capable of accessing this thing... in which case we're shit out of luck." Placing his finger on the activation screen, a sickly blue light suddenly burst in his face, causing him to blink. A garbled voice emanated from the console, slowly becoming coherent as the ancient device came to life.

"Greetings, travelers. Parameters prevent me from allowing you access to this place. Initiating neural scan now." Vergil silently prayed that either the machine was too broken to effectively perform this, or else he was one of the few who could gain access. A light-blue beam shot out and struck his forehead, but otherwise no other sensation was felt by the gecko. After a minute of this, the beam faded, and a green light appeared on the screen. "Neural pattern recognized. Welcome back, traveler." Vergil sighed gratefully, and relaxed visibly.

"Yes!" he whispered, but the sphere wasn't activating for some reason. Suddenly, a red light washed over the screen.

"Warning: Differences detected in neural patterns. Inconsistencies perceived. Conclusion: you are not the same traveler who programmed these parameters. Access denied."

"What?" Vergil asked, surprised. "Wait a minute! I've been here though! You said that! Isn't there some way to prove that?"

"I am only programmed to allow access to the one who programmed me. Processing... processing... unable to reconcile neural inconsistencies. Access denied." the console repeated.

"Dammit! Isn't there some way to show that I was one of the ones here before? Some way to prove it? Some way to unlock these parameters?" Vergil figured this machine was seriously malfunctioning, or worse, it did recognize him, but only accepted Rex as its programmer, which meant they were screwed anyway. "Some sort of other test? I can prove I was here before and that I can access the waypoint!" he demanded.

"Processing... processing... please wait... solution confirmed. You must face a trial by combat to prove you are a match with my data banks. Succeed, and you may progress. Fail and you will die." With that, the console blinked red over and over again, and suddenly, the ground began shaking.

"Oh shit! The hell?" Tony exclaimed, struggling to keep his balance as panels in the ground began to slide back, splitting the Earth and throwing up dirt as they moved away. Out of the ground, giant insects began to crawl. But not organic... they were metallic as proven by the glint they gave off in the low light. They weren't like the previous droids, however. These were agile looking, with four legs, long, thin bodies, and once again the arrowhead featured craniums. Long, prehensile tails whipped gracefully behind them, and they let out unearthly shrieks in the night that split the ears and caused Vergil to temporarily hold his hands over his ear holes to block out the banshee wails.

"Agh!" he gasped, noting two green lights blink to life on each of the creatures, creating ghostly sets of "eyes." There were nine in all this time, their tails cracking in the night and their legs digging into the ground as they got ready to charge. These roughly resembled cheetahs, or at least to Vergil they did. "Well... here we go again!" Vergil declared, igniting his energy blade, its red glow lighting up the night with an eerie ambiance. "I guess I have to prove I'm the warrior I was when I first visited this place with Rex and Kalis. I do remember we had to fight... but that's about it. All right... let's do it!" Vergil shouted, charging forward now towards one that sprang right towards him, its pointed front feet bared outwards. Suddenly, the feet sprouted multiple spikes, and Vergil just barely managed to dodge to the side in time. "Whoa!" he exclaimed, landing in the dirt a few feet away.

Tony pulled out his laser, figuring it'd be more useful here than his old-fashioned pistol. "Well Soren... you get your first taste of the killer droids... and I guess I do too!" Tony said now, gritting his teeth as he fired off a blast at the nearest one, only to watch in horror as the light beam refracted right off the surface. "Dammit! Must have weak points, like the other ones!" he shouted as the entire group was charged now by the machines...

Figuring that a steel harpoon that was designed to dig into solid rock would be more effective against an armored war machine than copper jacketed lead bullets, Soren opted to use the piton gun. He grunted as he dropped to avoid one of the droid's lunging at him.

Swearing profusely, he took aim at one of the glowing green eyes and pulled the trigger. The gunshot echoed painfully in the dark chamber.

(OOC - I'm picturing the droids as lean anthro Cheetahs but they're hunched over.)

"Smart girl." Emilena sheathed her pistol. "Alright, ladies, its all ours. Tuck in."

Foley immediately popped the trunk and began checking the make and model of the car. "Steering column is locked, but I can get around it," he said to nobody in particular, as technicians have an annoying habit of doing.

Flora giggled as she grabbed the coat Rose had left in the backseat. "Ooh, doesn't this look splendid on me?" she curtsied sultrily at Rio. "Tell me I look darling..."

Nairda was busy stealing all the loose change from the glove compartments and drink holders. There wasn't much, this being a rented car, but he was certainly giving it his best shot.

Emilena glanced at the direction Marion had taken. "I think she's following the group. Well, that's our best chance of figuring where they're going. Nairda, with me. The rest of you, get these cars somewhere else and hold this position unless I radio you otherwise."

"Wait...we're staying behind?" asked Flora, lip quivering.

"No complaints here," shrugged Foley, who was already unscrewing the metal casing covering the wiring harness connector. Nairda seemed ready to volunteer Flora for his position, but knew better than to argue, and nervously exhaled and followed the leader.

"Oh come on! What the hell is it with these places and killer robots?!" Axel yelled, grabbing Lily and tugging her over to the side, out of sight behind one of the small, jagged ruins. Bending down, he quickly patted his pockets, feeling for a weapon - but he had nothing on him. "Shit..."

Gritting his teeth, he peeked over the top of the stone and saw Tony trying to shoot them. "That doesn't work!" he called over. "You've gotta break the weak points! They're at... hold on..." Axel switched his vision and focused on one of the machines charging around. He instinctively looked on their back... but there wasn't anything there. "What..." Then he saw a bright glow lower down on the robot's body, on its underside between the two rear legs - protected by its hunched posture and spiked legs. Axel glanced quickly at the other eight and saw the same glow in identical locations. "Guys, the weak points - they're between their back legs! In the... ah, special place!" He looked down and Lily and grimaced. "What kind of weirdos built these things?" Raising his head, Axel's face blanched when he saw one of the machines turn and fix its set of green 'eyes' on him. Swiveling its body, it charged across the grounds towards their position. "Aw, crap..." Scrabbling to his feet, he ran out, waving his arms, trying to lead the machine away from Lily. It started to close with him, quicker than he'd anticipated. Swearing, Axel swerved and scrambled up a tall, moss-covered pillar that had toppled over, leaning at an angle against one of the crumbling walls.

Reaching the top, Axel looked back... and his stomach dropped when the machine arrived at the base and kept going, creeping lithely up the stone towards him. The rat tried backing up, but his hand closed on empty air. There was nowhere else to go... and the fall down to the floor didn't look inviting. Three quarters of the way up now, the machine hunched down, preparing to leap at him. Axel gritted his teeth - then gasped as a spike slammed into the side of its head, causing it to lurch to the side. A rope was attached to the end of the spike and as he watched the rope looped up and around its neck, again and again, pulling the robot down and holding it fast to the pillar.

As the robot struggled, Triste shimmered into sight on its back, holding her piton gun. Cutting the rope and slinging the gun over her shoulder she jumped back, landing on the pillar behind the machine, and stabbed her knife up between its legs. Sparks flew out from the energy source, and the robot slumped over, the green lights on its head dying out. Triste looked up and met Axel's eyes. "That's twice," she muttered, stepping off the pillar and sprinting away.

"And I'm... I'm grateful every time!" Axel called after her numbly. "Holy shit..." Taking a deep breath, he slid down and wrapped his hands around the spike embedded in the machine's head. Straining, he managed to tear it free and ran down the rest of the pillar to try and help the others, holding the spike as an impromptu spear.

Rio looked up from the mess of belongings around him, and smirked at Flora. "Makes you look like a fucking lesbian," he told her breasts, as he fished out an expensive looking pair of sunglasses and slipped them on.

When he heard Emilena's command, the boy looked up at her. "What? We just wait here?!" He grimaced and brushed his hair out of his eyes. "That sucks..." As the pair headed off, Rio sighed and rushed over to Nairda. "Be careful!" he said, hugging his waist.. and snaking thin fingers into the fox's pockets, fishing out all the change Nairda had found. Surreptitiously palming the loot, he broke the hug and grinned up at him. "Good luck!"

Great' More robots for us' To kill' Marita groaned as the machines rushed at them. these were smaller than the robots they fought at the first Waypoint, they were also faster. Marita moved around the ruins, ducking behind the stone pillars and making her way over the uneven ground. Rose tried shooting at the Machine pursuing her, but the shots simply pinged off the robots midsection. marie was throwing small rocks at her pursuer, and not having much luck.. Rose finally managed to get a shot on the inside of the machines legs and destroyed the energy source keeping it alive.. ' shoot.. well its privates!;' she called to the others. ' those things dont have privates! Marie retorted as she ran ' Well, where its privates would be if it were a living breathing thing!" ((Not anthro; they're kinda like this: this (http://img3.wikia.nocookie.net/__cb20130929030903/finalfantasy/images/a/aa/Klikk-enemy-ffx.png)))

Vergil lunged at his opponent, thrusting his blade forward to have it knocked aside by the sharp tail, which the gecko was discovering could be used just like a sword. He'd need to get force behind his swing to shear it off, he reckoned, but right now, he went for one of the legs. Ducking under the slashing tail, Vergil ran forward and cried out, hacking off the right foreleg of the machine and watching it totter before it righted itself.

The thing must've utilized nanotechnology however, for a new leg began sprouting from the stump of the old one, a process that was curious to watch as it seemed to simply grow out from the remnants. "These guys regenerate!" he shouted out to the others, finally hearing Axel shout out where the weak spot was. Perfect...

Dodging another lightning slash from the creature, Vergil leaped up, and landed upon its back. This was short-lived however, for an electric jolt suddenly passed through his body, hitting him like a brick, the force of which threw him off the back of the creature and deposited him unceremoniously on the ground. "Agh!" he cried out, his backside burrowing into the dirt. "Ugh... OK... these things don't like you touching them..." he murmured, getting back up as the droid advanced once more upon him.

Tony meanwhile was feeling a bit in over his head. He wasn't able to line up a shot on his opponent, and was fleeing across the ground, trying not to stumble and break his leg on any of the numerous stones poking out of the ground. He came up with the idea to get the creature to pass over one of the numerous piles of temple jutting out of the ground, hoping it'd rip its vital spot open. The first attempt was interesting, if unsuccessful. Tony vaulted over a block in his path, the droid followinghim right over it and demolishing the ancient stone as if it were nothing more than a toy, rocks flying everywhere in the process. One struck the ferret in the back, knocking him to the ground with a sharp exhale.

He'd just barely managed to avoid having the wind knocked out of him as he rolled over on to his back and attempted to struggle his way back to standing, something he failed at as the creature loomed over him, its spikes extending from its hands as it went for the killing blow. Tony flinched, and then took his shot, noting that as the creature reared up it exposed itself. Firing off multiple shots with a shout, he missed the first few times, growing more and more desperate, his heart pounding in his chest with fierce hammer blows before his fourth shot finally scored. The laser beam lanced into the creature's underside and it screamed out, toppling forward onto him.

Tony shut his eyes and shut down, crying out as the thing's head landed on top of him. "Ooof!" Opening his eyes, the ferret saw he was still alive, and began fighting to lift the thing off of him. He was slowly succeeding, groaning with exertion as he managed to start to wiggle out from underneath.

Vergil meanwhile was still battling with his first opponent. He was attracting the attention of another one though, and knew he had to finish this first one off quickly. Spinning underneath the droid, he drove his sword upward, slicing into the thing's underbelly as he ran along the length of it, slashing through the weak point and clearing the creature by its tail as it shuddered and then collapsed onto the ground. Four down, five to go...

He barely had time to catch his breath however as the second droid attacked him, Vergil feeling the rush of wind on his back as the creature missed within centimeters of his skin. Vergil spun and sliced off the spikes, which quickly regenerated.

The piton that imbedded in the eye of one of the creatures from Soren's shot was quickly electrified, the charge shooting out down the wire and right towards Soren, even as the droid advanced on him, claws flexed for action, and a laser bolt shooting out of the only functioning eye it had left right towards him...

Soren screamed in agony as the electric shock forced his muscles to contract, locking the gun in his grasp. Luckily, the shock was also strong enough to throw him away from where the droid had aimed with its laser as well as rip the piton from its eye.

The Human groaned as he lay prone on the rocky ground. It was then he heard someone say that the robots' weak points were where the genitals on a living creaturw would be.

He reached for his piton gun and removed the wire spool, leaving just the ten round harpoon magazine. Normally the gun could not fire without both components but he decided to shove a piece of debris into the spool holder in an attempt to bypass the safety.

He lay down in the rocky debris field. Soon, he felt the ground shudder as one of the war machines crawled over him. By the light of the energy blade Vergil was using, he was able to see what looked like a battery pack between the droid's hind legs. He only had one shot at this, seeing as the machine's tail and legs were out of the way.

Muscles screaming in agony, he braced himself against the rocks, raised his piton and pulled the trigger, sending the metal harpoon flying sans cable to its target. Unfortunately, the recoil of the projectile forced out the rock Soren had lodged in the spool holder.

"Well, I guess I could try tripping them with the cable," he muttered as he slowly searched for the discarded cable spool.

Trying to move as quietly as possible, Axel sprinted through the ruins, trying to avoid coming into direct contact with one of the machines. The night air was filled with sounds of shouting, shooting and the bizarre, piercing screams that the robots emitted. He swallowed, and was about to start making his way back to check on Lily when he heard another robotic scream, this one much closer than the others, and a reverberating thump as something hit the floor. Picking up his pace, Axel vaulted over an old slab, rounded a section of wall... and almost fell flat on his face as he caught his foot on the machine Tony was trapped under.

"Jesus!" he gasped, steadying himself then quickly bending down to help Tony struggle free. "Never thought... I'd say this," he panted as he heaved the 'dead' machine up. "But... fuck robots..." Tony had just managed to crawl out when Axel was struck hard from behind. Flying forwards, he landed heavily on his stomach. Struggling around onto his back, the rat gaped as he saw one of the machines looming over him. It swiped a spiked limb down, aiming to skewer him. Yelling, Axel raised the spike he'd retrieved before, stabbing the point into the limb and stopping it inches from slicing into him. Straining to keep the machine at bay, Axel shouted across to Tony. "Kill it! Fucking kill it!"

Across the other side of the ruins, Triste was ducking out of the way as a robot lunged at her. Rolling on the floor, a cloud of dust flying around her, she turned to face the machine as it started pacing. Triste was waiting for an opening, a way to get at its energy source, but the machine wasn't making it easy. Gritting her teeth, she activated her cloaking... but the machine's eyes tracked her, and as she tried to move in for the kill it swiped its tail at her, forcing the spider gecko back. Okay... so that's not going to work...

Deactivating the cloak, Triste looked around for something that could help... and her eyes settled on Soren as he searched for something. Swallowing, she darted across towards him, feeling the ground vibrate as the machine gave chase. She reached the human and, unceremoniously seizing the back of his shirt, Triste threw him over to the side. The pursuing machine swiveled its head towards the sprawled human, and started approaching him instead. It reared up, and just when it was about to strike him Triste darted in from the side, running beneath its body and skewering the power core. As the robot toppled to the side, Triste made her way over to Soren and offered him a hand up, frowning. "Had to be done."

Emilena gritted her teeth as she pulled herself hand-by-hand up the rope. "You better not be falling to your death back there!" she snapped over her shoulder at Nairda.

"Doing my best! Hehe..." Nairda shivered as the air got thinner and colder.

"Whatever you do, just don't look down!" Emilena advised.

"Gotcha!" he replied nervously. Don't look down... he thought to himself, don't look down...

And then they reached the top and to his delight he had managed to restrain himself from looking down.

"Now where'd that overgrown hang glider get off to?" Emilena muttered to herself.

Flora sniffed at Rio's suggestion. "Well, I never!" she scoffed, mimicking a British noblewoman's voice. "I am a refined gentlewoman, you scurrilous whelp!"

"Could you two be dumb somewhere else?" groaned Foley, still tinkering under the steering column with a long thin silver instrument. "I'm working here."

Flora walked further away from the Jeeps, and noticed a waterfall not too far away. "Oh, Rio..." she whispered coyly, so that Foley couldn't hear. "It was an awful long trip to get here. How about we take a little...shower? Hmm?"

They were down to only three opponents now, but one was hotly engaged with Vergil, and the second was approaching Tony and Axel. "Thanks!" Tony grunted, crawling out as Axel lifted the deceased robot's head off of him. "Fuck robots? Heheh, Fucktherobots.com, right?" he asked, chuckling a bit at the joke they'd developed about the Purifiers half a year ago, which seemed like forever now.

"Oh shit!" the ferret exclaimed, eyes going wide as he saw another one aiming to attack them now. Axel managed to block the blow however, and the rat yelled at him to kill it. "Uh... right!" Tony replied, quickly springing back into action. The moonlight certainly lent an unearthly feel to this battle, with light sources dancing and being snuffed out, then reappearing and swirling about in the darkness.

Tony darted forward as Axel held the droid off, moving underneath rapidly as he raised his laser and fired just as the droid multitasked like a boss and whipped its tail underneath its body to strike at Tony. The laser burned into the sensitive area of the droid, causing it convulse and shudder but not before its tail struck Tony, tossing the ferret into a stone pillar and causing him to fall painfully to the ground with a brief cry and look of anguish on his face, his arms drawn in close to his body as he lay sprawled on the ground.

Vergil twisted and spun in his "dance" with the penultimate droid. His sword flashed here and there, looking almost like a glow stick at a rave as the gecko tried to get in and deal the finishing blow. He ducked low to avoid incoming spikes, hacking the hand off only to have it reform. He felt a sharp pain in his back this time as the claws didn't miss, and raked across his backside, drawing some blood. "OK you son of a bitch..." Vergil replied, skidding in the dirt with a look of intense concentration on his face. The droid was suddenly lifted off the ground, though it was clear Vergil was exerting himself greatly to do so. Sweat ran down his skin, and what muscles he had bulged as he telekinetically held the droid in place in the air.

Roaring out, he threw it backwards against part of the temple, the thing rattling and shattering a bit as its spine broke and it was nearly torn in half. Vergil struck like lightning, darting forward as the droid began repairing its midsection, and plunged his sword into the now very exposed weak point, watching the robot writhe and die in front of him like a mortally wounded animal. One to go...

Marion was at the top of the mountain. "What the..." She trailed off as she watched the fight between the robots and Vergil's crew through her compnoculars.

"Mace," she said into her throat mike. "Do you see this?" Thanks to the encrypted satellite uplink, Mace was seeing everything that Marion saw.

Soren accepted the hand. "Thanks," he said with a grunt as he pushed himself to his feet.

He looked at his piton gun. "So did I kill it?" His bosy twitched a"slightly as an aftereffect of the electric shock.

Axel heard a cry from Tony, but with the robot shuddering and convulsing above him he couldn't see what had happened. "Tony! You alr- Argh!" The disabled machine's body collapsed down on Axel, winding him. Struggling, he stretched out a hand and hooked his fingers into the dirt, managing to drag himself out from beneath the metal shell.

Rolling over and stumbling to his feet, Axel darted his head around. He couldn't see the ferret anywhere. "Tony? Where'd you go?!" He suddenly saw a dark shape huddled on the floor, and his eyes widened. "Oh crap..." Rushing over to Tony's side, he crouched down and gently shook his shoulder, starting to help him up. "You okay? Come on, we need to get moving..." He knew trying to move Tony probably wasn't a great idea in case anything was broken... but they were exposed out here, and he had no idea how many more of those machines were roaming around - he didn't fancy their chances if another came across them.

Further across the grounds of the ruins, Triste helped Soren up. "Yeah, you got it." She noticed his twitches, and cocked an eye. "You feeling alright? Keep your guard up, I think most of them are down..." From behind, she heard a sudden rush of movement. Triste spun around to see the final machine rushing across the grounds, almost on them. Swearing, she shoved Soren out of the way and raised her knife to try and go for its weak spot... but too late. The robot slammed into her and she sailed backwards, flying up and over one of the ruined walls and landing none-too-gracefully on the other side. Grunting, holding her side as she rolled over and stood up, Triste caught a flash of white and glanced to the side to see Vergil standing over a 'dead' robot. "I can't say this is the vacation I hoped it'd be..." she muttered, wincing at the pain in her ribs.

She was about to say more, when the wall she'd been thrown over crashed inwards in a rain of dust and broken stone. The machine charged through, and darted towards them.

Rio shook his head at Flora's voice, annoyed at being interrupted from his game of 'Flick the pebbles at Foley'. "What? No. I already had a shower a few weeks ago." After a second he paused mid-flick and looked up, sensing the tone of Flora's voice. "Wait... are you..." He beamed. "Well, shit! Yeah! I want a shower!"

The next time Flora blinked, Rio had already shot past her, tearing off his grimy T-shirt as he practically flew towards the waterfall.

Soren grunted as he was thrown aside. He swore as something dug into his side. He silently cheered as he realized it was the cable reel for his piton gun.

Loading the reel, and waiting for the harpoon to attach to the cable, he took aim at the creature's battery pack between its hind legs. Seeing as he had only one shot, he pulled the trigger. But mindful of what happened last time, he immediately cut the cable. This time, the steel harpoon went towards the target trailing a remnant of the cable.

Mace could see the battle on-screen, and nodded to himself. "Yes... yes I can... it's not the first time I've seen these... creatures, either." he added. He knew full well what was below his building. His brother had told him, and he'd investigated it himself, but had decided after losing some personnel that it wasn't worth pursuing. It had led to his brother's defection and demise after all, and that was something that still rankled with him. He didn't elaborate just yet though, silently watching the battle unfold as Marion broadcast it back to him.

Vergil, though exhausted, noted that Triste was in trouble, and shook his head. "No... no!" he exclaimed, trying to stand up straighter so he could spring back into action. "Dammit... get out of there!" he called, but that didn't help, as the machine advanced relentlessly on her. Soren managed to fire off the piton at the droid, and though it found its mark and impacted on the soft spot, it had no visible effect. Vergil immediately realized it hadn't had the strength to penetrate the still considerable armor these things were sporting, most likely due to the greater distance this time.

"No!" Vergil gasped as it continued moving on Triste and Soren. "Dammit!" He ran towards its back, knowing he'd only have one chance or he'd be spent. He held out his hand, focusing on the spike, and trying with all his might to drive it up further into the belly of the beast.

Tony coughed a bit, regaining his breath, and was helped up painfully by Axel. "Oh!" he winced. "I... I dunno... I can stand... maybe..." But he instead wobbled, almost toppling if not for the fact Axel had him. "Ow! That... that really hurt..." Tony said, feeling as if his back had been struck multiple times with a sledgehammer.

He looked up in time to see the piton Soren had imbedded in the beast get telekinetically pushed upwards into the creature, as if by magic. Vergil was there, straining himself visibly as he managed to drive the spike upwards, causing the machine to start convulsing, its arms gyrating violently before it collapsed in a scrap heap on the ground in front of Triste and Soren. Panting, Vergil stumbled over towards them, making right for Triste. "Are you... are you all right?" he asked her, concern on his features before he sank down to his knees in front of her, gazing up into her face with hope.

"Ugh... I guess we did it!" Tony exclaimed painfully, having Axel move him over to a stone block so he could sit down. "That was... pretty tough. Hey uh... Rex didn't reprogram any more waypoints, did he?" Tony asked, with Vergil shaking his head.

"No... I don't think so." he replied breathlessly.

"I think I'm... I think I'm OK..." Tony informed Axel. "I think... I'll tell you in about ten minutes, how's that sound?" he asked.

"Neural pattern recognized in combat scenario. Deactivating security parameters. Have a nice day." the console spoke up now, its screen turning green and then going off as the waypoint activated. The chrome sphere lit up like a Christmas tree, millions of points of light shooting out of it to form a 3D projection of the Earth that began rotating, like before. Now only three red dots blinked into existence on the surface: one in the Atlantic between South America and Africa (though it was closer to Brazil than Africa), the second either in southern Egypt or the northern Sudan, and the final one in the southern China region.

Lily had found somewhere to hide. This wasn't exactly her forte. She glanced at Axel nervously. Why couldn't he demonstrate some amount of self-preservation?

Flora grinned and raced after him. At the edge of the water she stripped off her shirt, revealing her fluffy white chest.

"Why can't Emilena be more like you?" She giggled, keeping only her skirt on for the time being to toy with him. "We're going to have so much fun!"

She paced towards Rio, muscles arched, herding him into the water. Her bright blue eyes were inflamed with expectation, and her hands were quivering.

Emilena and Nairda stumbled back to the cars. "These mountains are impassable..." she groaned. "Did you crack them yet?"

"Yes, ma'am!" Foley sat up, wiping his brow on his shirt. "These vehicles are driveable and humming! You're welcome, by the way."

"Excellent, let's get moving." Emilena hopped into the driver seat of the first one. "Where's Flora? Driving is her only blasted job."

maerita, Rose and Marie slowly approached the others, their clothes stuck to them, from the exertions of avoiding the machines..' so whixh one do we tackle next?' Marita asked ' The one in the Atlantic looks closest.' Axel looked down at Tony and nodded. "Alright. Well... just take it easy, okay?" He tried to give a small smile. "If you need a band-aid, you know who to ask. First one's free." Scratching his ear, he turned and made his way over to Lily. "You okay, honey? I think they're all dead." Sitting next to to her, he sighed and rubbed her shoulder. "Hey, you know what I was saying before? About taking a vacation here?" Axel frowned. "I, ah.... I think I've changed my mind. I want to stay at home, where the only thing that could kill us is my cooking."

A short distance away, Triste leaned down and gently pulled Vergil up to his feet. "I'm alright... just disappointed I can't get my hands on whoever built these things." She tilted her head. "How about you? Your psionics are useful, but... I know how exhausting using them can be..." Triste said quietly, her face looking concerned as she saw how worn out Vergil appeared.

The voice coming from the console interrupted her before she could say anything else. She looked around to see the globe spring into existence and start rotating slowly. Her eyes flicking between the three remaining waypoints highlighted on the hologram, Triste shrugged. "I'll go with what the majority vote for. The waypoint in the Atlantic's as good as any."

"I, ah, vote for somewhere that doesn't have killer robots trying to blow our asses off," Axel called out.

"Hell yeah, we are!" Rio agreed vehemently with Flora. He reached the small water pool just by the waterfall and started hurriedly kicking off his trainers. "This is gonna be -" he started, hopping around on one leg as he pulled his shorts off. He glanced over one shoulder and froze mid-hop when he saw she'd taken her top off. "Fucking awesome..." Rio finished, staring with wide eyes. His foot skidded on the wet rock, and he tumbled backwards into the water pool with a splash, the cold hitting him like a brick wall.

With a splutter, his head cleared the top of the water and he shook his wet hair out of his eyes. "C... come on, hurry up! It's not cold!" Rio lied, trying to stop his teeth chattering as he reached down and pulled his shorts all the way off, then threw the wet clothing next to his discarded T-shirt.

Vergil sighed as Triste helped him up to his feet. "Yes... I... I just exerted myself too much, that's all. I can't remember the last time I had do something like that." he stated, shaking his head. "But how would you know...?" he trailed off here, flashing back to her battle with Rex on the bridge of his ship. "Wait... wait you... you have those abilities too... don't you?" he asked, remembering specifically her combat against Rex now. "I just... remember seeing it... but you never mentioned it before." he stated, being interrupted by Axel chiming in about where they should go next, as well as Marita.

Looking over to the globe, Vergil watched it spin pensively. "I don't care!" Tony piped up now. "I just... we gotta do this after all."

Vergil considered this a moment. "Yes... yes we do. If I recall... the ones who made these robots are long dead so... no chance of vengeance there, I'm afraid." he chuckled now. "Anyway... let's go to the Atlantic." Vergil concluded, nodding here. He approached the waypoint now, gazing at it as it spun around, but taking no action. He only stared, as if entranced by all the lights. Finally, he reached out, and touched the one over the Atlantic. Coordinates sprang up on the screen now, but oddly, it didn't look as if the waypoint was on an island... or any landmass for that matter. Pulling out his phone, Vergil snapped a picture, and the map, after completing one rotation, disintegrated and faded from view.

"That's strange..." the gecko commented here, looking down at his phone. "It didn't look to be on land..." Pushing the coordinates into a finder on his phone, the finder quickly sent back the relevant information. "Huh... you know it's funny but... I don't remember anything about this waypoint. It says the coordinates are the location of a deep sea mining platform run by Judaken Industries called Voltaic Station, but a floating resort has also sprung up around it, also run by Judaken. It's capable of submerging itself to give visitors 'a view of the ocean they won't forget.'" Vergil read from the wikipedia article. "Apparently, in 2009, Air France Flight 447 crashed in the vicinity, and the discovery of the wreckage during the investigation also unearthed an incredibly rare substance buried on the sea floor: koltonium. Koltonium is extremely rare but extremely useful in the production of high-powered lasers, so Judaken naturally filed a claim and now owns exclusive mining rights to the site. Well... if it's a resort, it at least gives us cover for being there, but I also read that Judaken takes security there very seriously, so we'll have to tread carefully." The gecko chewed his lower lip now, glancing up from his phone.

"Really? It's the site of the Air France crash? I remember watching a special about that. Scary shit... but still... the waypoint... is what? On the bottom of the ocean? How in the hell...?" the ferret trailed off here.

"I'm not sure... perhaps a straightforward approach would be best here. Talk to the Judaken executives directly when we get there to avoid tension. I don't remember anything about this waypoint... it's possible Rex accessed it without me." Vergil commented. "Is everyone ready to head back to the SUVs? At least we can simply ride the ropes down, this time." he commented on a lighter note.

"She was here a minute ago..." Muttered Foley, suddenly realizing he had been all alone in camp.

"Well, go find her then!" Snapped Emilena. "They could be back any minute!"

As Flora's excitement grew, her skirt slowly stopped hiding the one last surprising part of her bizzare body.

Hungrily she tore her skirt off and combat-rolled into the water. Springing up and looming over Rio, she gave him an all-too-good look at her fully-functioning male genitalia.

"All right, little boy..." She panted with expectation, her every muscle quivering with lust, "bend over!"

"Yeah," I don't see much reason to hang around here," agreed Lily.

She had been particularly useless on this trip. She began to wonder whether it was worth the group even having her around.

"It's underwater?" Axel shook his head. "Well... that's something. At least this time, we're gonna have the choice of getting ripped to pieces or drowned if everything goes wrong." His tail flicked nervously. "Alright. I'm good to head back when you all are." Axel started to rise up when he noticed Lily's despondent expression. "Hey... are you okay? You know, I was only kidding about the 'getting ripped to pieces or drowned' thing. We'll probably get shot way before then." The rat started to grin, then realised it probably wasn't the best kind of comment to make. "Uh, I... I mean, you only live once, right?" He paused. "Actually, that's not really much better..."

As Axel comforted - or, at least tried to comfort - Lily, Triste glanced over at the couple, her eyes narrowing thoughtfully as she watched the human woman. After a second, she rubbed a hand over her still aching jaw, and turned her attention back to Vergil. "So, we'll be going in blind for this waypoint. Let's hope our luck'll hold out." All things considered, they had been extremely lucky - after all this combat, none of them had lost so much as a digit.

We've decided on our next destination - the Atlantic, near a deep sea mining rig called Voltaic Station.

Good. Anything else, Agent Acyle?

No. He still can't remember, and... I'm keeping it that way.

"You're right... about my psionics," she said out loud to Vergil, nodding. "I do have some ability, although it's not really anything to write home about." She shrugged. "And I never mentioned it because... well, I'd only ever use it as a last resort. Using them takes a... toll on my body. Besides," Triste said, pulling out her hooked knife so it glinted in the moonlight. "This works for me. And it's more personal... just how I like it."

As Flora rose up from the water, Rio's grin broadened as his eyes moved down, over her shoulders, her chest, and then lower, to her... His grin suddenly froze. "What." He stared at Flora's decidedly non-female body part for a moment, before finally his brain registered that yes - it was, in fact, a penis. Rio's expression transformed into one of horror. "What the fuck that's a fucking are you kidding me you've... what?!" he spluttered, his words a dumbstruck ramble.

Rio's stomach churned at her command, and he took a nauseated step back. "No! What the hell is this? You're packing heat?!" Stumbling, he floundered in the water for a second before managing to start splashing his way towards the side of the pool. "How is that even... even a thing?! You were meant to be the one bending over!" Rio wailed sorrowfully over his shoulder as he tried to scramble up the rock to dry land.

"Let's get going, then." Vergil stated, beginning to head off now towards the exit of these ruins and back towards the cliff. It was pretty damn cold up here, that was for sure. He wanted to get back into the car and off this mountain; back to a hotel in La Paz for a long night's sleep.

"Yeah... ugh..." Tony groaned, standing up now, and beginning to slowly follow.

"Hmmm, well... it certainly tires me out if I use it excessively, as you saw." the white gecko commented as he walked next to Triste. "But still... good to know you're one too. Varanus was one as well... Kalis must be collecting them or something." he mused aloud bitterly. "Makes sense though... Rex was one of the best out there." he stated. "At least of what I remember of him. Still... glad to know I'm not alone in this. I guess I just feel... a bit isolated sometimes." he confessed.

"You guys hear... shouting?" Tony asked, hearing distant voices off down on the Yungas Road. "Sounds familiar actually..." He clutched his side as he quickened his pace a bit here.

"Hmmm... not to me." Vergil responded, moving ahead a bit here towards the edge of the cliff. Stopping near the drop, he crouched at the edge and looked down. "We got some company it seems." he informed the others.

"What? Lemme see!" Tony moved over to the edge as well, looking over. "The fuck? Isn't that Emilena and... that brat that was in your house a few weeks ago?" Tony asked, motioning for Axel to join him. "The hell is she doing... messing around near our vehicles... and... why are all my clothes on the ground?" he demanded, angrily, eyes flashing a bit as he stood up here.

Soren scrambled up through the entrance to the hole. "What's all theóHey! That's my stuff!" He exclaimed as he saw the group rooting through their vehicles.

Sure enough, Soren's spare ammunition and his various personal goods were strewn all over the rocky ground. What's worse was that his wallet appeared to be missing too.

Marion was perched above the group and listening in with her directional microphone. The conversation she recorded was transmitted straight to Mace.

"Mace, Marion here. It looks like the group's heading to Judaken's Voltaic Platform out in the Atlantic. I have transmitted the whole conversation to you. Marion out."

Unfortunately, just as she ended the transmission, the weathered rock face that her diamond tipped grappling claws had dug into finally gave way. Swearing profusely as her flying frame automatically deployed its wings and ignited its wngines, she quickly veered behind the rock face to avoid being seen or having the moon cast a shadow.

Soren scowled as he heard the distinct whine of a flying frame engine. "Do you hear that?" He looked skywards. All he saw were stars and the moon.

'Lets just get down there and grab our things and get going' Marie said ' I dont know why they are here, but its obvious our little quest isnt exactly a secret. I wager we're being marked, if not by them, then by others. I just want to get back on the road ' She finished. " Havent seen Emilena in a long time ' Marita said. ' as I recall we were not exactly on good terms the last time I saw her. so its not as if we can count her as an ally." Marita began working her way down the cliff, going doing was easier than climbing up, the trick was not to descend too fast.

"Yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah." Vergil said, shooting the piton into the cliff for anchorage as he clipped on the harness. Marita was sure jumping the gun here, but whatever. They'd need to crash this party at some point. Activating the descent, Vergil began to drop down the cliff face. In regards Soren's comment about the flying frame, he looked up as he dropped down, noticed Marion with his keen orange eyes, and pointed her out to Soren. "Might be her again!" he called up to the human. "Doesn't look like she's attacking yet so..." he trailed off as Tony got ready.

Tony did the same as Vergil, setting up the piton and strapping on his harness as well. "Forget her for now, let's deal with these clowns first!" Descending, he drew his laser and leveled it down at the group below them. "Hey! The hell you doing with our stuff?" he demanded angrily, snarling a bit as he dropped down at a controlled rate, not wanting to go too fast. "And the fuck are you doing here in the first place? You can just back away nice and slow, you got that?" And if you go over the edge, not my problem, he didn't add.

Soren saw the faint outline of the frame. "Ehh, she's flying off."

He fired his piton, anchored himself to the rope and slid down. When he reached the ground, he had his rifle out and leveled at the group. "Drop whatever you've got and step away from our vehicles!" he ordered.

"Not you too!" screeched Flora, eyes bulging. "First Emi, now you! I can't take it any more!"

She darted forward, snarling, cornering Rio so he couldn't escape the lake.

"Flora!" Foley, who had just arrived on the scene, quickly gauged the situation and darted forward. "Flora, you get the hell away from him!"

Flora ignored him until he drew his sidearm and fired it in the air. "Flora, I'm not fucking around!"

Flora growled threateningly, but Foley splashed into the lake and, defending himself with his sidearm, wrenched Rio away. "Go jerk off or something!" he snapped angrily at the seething folf.

Just then Emilena appeared behind him. "I have a better solution," she responded grimly. "Run."

"What's going on?" asked Foley, confused, as the others followed Emilena's lead and booked it.

"The group returned with inhuman speed," Emilena responded. "I literally don't think anything but light particles were capable of moving at that velocity. Regardless, our cover is blown."

Nairda waved his arms excitedly at the people pointing guns at him. "Oh, hello! Hello my friends!"

He started jumping excitedly. "Soren! How I've missed you! I haven't seen you in ages! Marie, my darling damsel! Shame you and Zula didn't work out!"

Soren's eye twitched; Nairda was no less annoying than he was at Lanthae. "Shut the fuck up, drop our stuff and get the fuck away from our cars!" The rifle was trained on Nairda's chest.

"Soren, Soren, Soren...don't be that way..." Nairda smiled and approached him. "You know...I never told you......but I kinda...have a crush on you..." he squealed and blushed. "I never...had the courage to tell you. You're still single, right?"

Lily groaned. "The, uh, others are getting away," she pointed out. Maybe if they were captured she'd have an opportunity to debrief with them. She hoped Nairda (and Axel, for that matter) was smart enough not to reveal her association with them.

Axel blinked at Nairda, then watched with a frown as Emilena and the rest of her gang tried to make their escape. "What..." He glanced at Lily out of the corner of his eye. I know they're working with her, but... did they need to go through our cars?

Stepping to the front of the group, Triste shifted her position. "We can still catch them... Did they take anything important?" she said, looking around at the others, not asking how they knew these individuals for the moment.

Axel paled and ran over to the car he'd been riding in. He quickly rifled through the compartment he'd stored his wallet in. Of course, it was gone. "Oh godammit, Rio! Not again!" he called after the boy as he sprinted away with the others.

As he ran, awkwardly pulling on his clothes while moving, the weight of all the wallets he'd snatched making it even more difficult, Rio shuddered. "What the hell Foley?! You could've told me I was going to a fucking sausage party!"

Tony quickened his pace down the mountain, trying his best to rappel and not hit anything. The terrain wasn't always even, but it wasn't a gradual slope either, and mostly just straight down.

Vergil seemed to be doing it much easier, but he was a nimble little bugger, Tony would give him that. Vergil reached the ground before the ferret, and unclipped himself quickly. "Hmmm... Rio... is that the... 'brat'"? the gecko asked, referring to Tony's term for the kid.

"Yeah! That's him!" Tony said as he hit the ground a bit harder than he wanted to. He was in no position to chase after the fleeing group, so he lined up a shot on Emilena, who was already a good ways down the road. He dialed back the power level on the laser, leaving it just enough to stun her if it hit her, but not kill her; it was rather a low setting. Firing off, he unclipped himself and headed for the Rover, stopping to look down at all his stuff scattered about. "What the hell?" he exclaimed with exasperation. "What the fuck were they looking for?"

"One way to find out!" Vergil responded. "They're fleeing on foot... and we have cars. May as launch an effective pursuit!" He threw his hand out, and effortlessly tripped Rio with a single thought, causing the kid to go sprawling out face first. "Axel, you want to do the honors of retrieving your wallet?" he asked the rat, turning to him.

"Well I can't just..." Tony was bending down now, starting to collect his stuff.

"Forget it! Get to the other Rover! The one that hasn't been searched!" Vergil insisted, looking behind him.

"Right!" Tony dropped a pair of his pants, and started to make his way over to the Rover Marita had been driving before.

Emilena skipped through a fern, accidentally bushwacking Flora in the process. "Head for the trees," she commanded. "It'll be tougher for their vehicles to navigate there!"

Foley sighed at Rio's statement. "You really need to stay away from her," he cautioned, "she's absolutely insane. Psychotic."

As if to drive the point home, Flora was pleasuring herself as she ran, tongue lolling happily. Then, in a sudden whirlwind of leaves, a noose tightened around her ankle and dragged her into the boughs of a tree, dangling from one leg.

"What the...?" Emilena gasped, before ducking away from automatic fire. As she hit the dirt, she got a glimpse of heavily armed men hiding in the bushes, reloading for another salvo. "Oh goddammit. We stumbled across poachers..."

Axel winced as he saw Rio go sprawling, just as he reached the treeline. He glanced back at Vergil. "You bet. This is the second goddamn time he's taken it!" Shaking his head, he ran towards Marita's Rover and slid into the passenger seat. Just as the car door slammed, the rattle of automatic gunfire drifted towards them, from the direction Emilena and her group had run in. Axel froze and looked around at the others.

Tilting her head at the sound, Triste sighed and jogged up to the car. "I'll back you up," she muttered, sliding her knife out.

Skidding face-first along the dirt, Rio rolled over and looked down at his knee, where the rough ground had scraped the skin. "Son of a bitch -" he started to yell. Then two things happened almost simultaneously. Flora flew up into the air with a crashing of leaves, and gunfire exploded from nearby, kicking up clouds of dust from the floor all around him.

Swearing, he scuttled crab-like along the ground until he bumped into Foley, who was taking cover behind a thick tree trunk. "What the fuck?!" Rio yelped, pressing himself into Foley's bulk as the bullets started to tear apart their cover.

Gunfire erupted as Soren grabbed his ammunition and threw them into a suitcase. "Not this shit again!"

Tony winced as he heard the sound of gunfire. But the road really had no trees except shrubbery growing on the side of the cliff, and he could see that this was a terrible place to run into... well who were they? Freedom fighters? Why anyone would lie in wait on a road only about seven feet wide with a sheer cliff on one side and a sheer drop on the other was beyond him. It made zero sense, but he supposed it was in line with what they were encountering so far. Was this Varanus returning? He couldn't tell at the moment.

"What?" Vergil asked, noting the newcomers. They were coming around the bend in the road that the party had parked behind, though they'd apparently set traps along the cliff as well. He flipped backwards, towards the Rover.

"Well shit! What do you want me to do?" Tony asked now as Triste stood by his window. "I can't exactly turn around on this road!" the ferret pointed out.

"Just back up! Run 'em over! We'll sort 'em out later! But watch the kid!" Vergil cautioned.

"Run 'em over?" Tony asked, gulping, but Vergil was right. His vehicle could be used as a deadly weapon against people on foot on this road. They had seven feet maximum on either side of them. They'd either have to climb the mountain or drop to their deaths down the cliff. With such choices, it made vehicles all powerful on this road. Turning the Rover on, he threw it into reverse and began backing up, creating a wall that would force everyone behind him to start running down the road or else jump to their deaths. Looking behind him, the ferret began "plowing" the road, backing up towards where Flora hung from the tree.

He hit the brakes before he ran over Rio however, and nodded at Axel to open his door and pull him inside. "Grab him!" Tony ordered.

Vergil was following after the Rover, but saw there wasn't much he could do. He couldn't really walk around the Rover while it was moving without getting crushed against the mountain, since Tony was playing it safe and sticking to the wall (nor would he want to walk into the fire of the gunmen either). "Why don't we let these assholes kill Emilena and her group?" Tony shouted out to Vergil as he popped his head out the window and began returning fire to cover Axel.

"Up to you! I barely know her, after all!" Vergil pointed out, considering briefly leaping over the Rover to cut Flora down... but he'd wait for this firefight to die a bit first before taking part. Why lend Emilena any assistance after all? She was now sandwiched between the Rover and the gunmen. It was an ideal situation for his group at this point. There was literally nowhere she could go. To her left was the sheer sides of the mountain they had just climbed down, to her right was the cliff that dropped hundreds of feet to the jungle below, ahead of her were the gunmen, and behind her was the Rover, completely blocking the road.

"I suggest you come towards us... without your weapons!" Vergil called over the Rover to her. "You've got nowhere to go, and we're you're only way out!" he pointed out the obvious. "Or you take your chances with whoever's shooting at you!" As he spoke, Tony managed to score a hit on one of the gun toting poachers and watched as he fell off the road and down towards the jungle.

"Score!" he shouted, grinning here as he kept it up.

Emilena sent a combat knife twirling towards the rope binding Flora, who fell to the ground with a crash.

"What are...?" asked Flora, dazed.

"You sprung a poacher's trap," Emilena said crossly, "And now we're trapped."

Foley took one look at his options and decided, "Screw that!" He made a run for Vergil's group.

Emilena dragged Flora behind a tree. "Where the hell are your clothes anyway?" She opened fire with her pistol. Flora didn't respond, busy watching Emilena's beast heave with barely-hidden excitement.

The poachers, realizing that they weren't fighting for a successfully captured victim, began retreating.

Axel reached out and dragged Rio inside the car as Tony covered him. "Got you, you little douchebag! Where the hell's my wallet this time?!" he demanded as he dumped the kid in the back next to Triste.

Rio blinked as he saw who it was, then swore loudly. "Aw, fucking hell. Alright, here - take it back," he muttered, fishing it from his pocket and holding it out. "I left your credit cards in the other car though! I'm not a total dick!"

Outside, the gunfire had started to die down as the poachers retreated. Snatching the wallet from Rio's fingers, Axel saw an overweight human dashing towards the car, and from his appearance, guessed he must be the 'Foley' that Lily had told him about. He was about to yell for the human to hurry up when he heard Triste speak up behind him.

"Why don't we just kill them? They know you... they could be a threat."

Axel turned, and saw Triste pressing the edge of her knife painfully against Rio's throat. His eyes widened - without Emilena and her team, the chances of finding Ejlert were slim to none. "What the hell are you doing?! No! We can't kill them!"

Triste squinted at him, not lowering the blade, the hooked edge curving neatly around the boy's throat.

"This is the worst day ever!" Rio wailed.

Axel swallowed. "Look... Emilena helped me and Lily before... back in Lanthae. We can't just kill her. Or her team. We owe her that much."

After a moment Triste sighed and lowered the knife, and Rio scrambled to get away from her. "Fine. But if we're bringing them back, let's get on with it."

Marita Rose and Marie had joined the others after climbing diown the mountain. seeing Tony had grabbed her rover, Marita went for the other Rover, the one that had been searched. ' Better Buckle up girls' This is going to be a hairy ride' Marita said as she strapped into the Drivers seats and started the engine. the lights of the rover turned on and Marita crouched, hoping they weren't hit by any stray gunfire. Marie and rose had done the bare minimum of cleanup, basically all they had done was pull clothes off off the road and thrown them onto the floor behind the front seats before climbing in and getting buckled. " so whats the next move?'

Marie asked as they looked forward at the shrubbery where the remaining members of Emilena's group were located. ' so what do we do with them?' Rose asked " bring them back with us into town , I guess' Marita said ' thats what I would do, but I dont think I get to make that call.

Soren was more or less blindly firing in the direction of the poachers' gunfire. He ducked down and changed magazines.

As the poachers retreated, he watched as Foley and Rio climbed aboard. The Human watched as Emilena retreated. As much as he wanted to put a few rounds into her, he decided to follow Axel's wish and let them escape.

"All right, now what?" he asked as he let his rifle dangle from its sling.

"What the hell?" Tony asked, noticing that Marita was backing up the first Rover to join them. He was afraid she'd block him in, and having two Rovers was completely redundant to plug the road, so he did the only thing he could. He blared his horn at her, and waved at her to move the Rover up so she wasn't blocking him in in case he needed to accelerate. He wasn't going to go back any further, after all. "Move up a bit!" he called.

Vergil allowed Foley to pass by him, noticing the poachers were retreating. "Oh sure! The hell we CAN'T KILL HER!" Tony snapped at Axel. "She helped us in Lanthae and then loots our stuff? Screw her, I say! She's probably working with Kalis! And I swear to god kid..." Tony swiveled to look at Rio now. "If I find my hat isn't in my luggage, you're gonna be eating your own brand of sausage tonight, get my drift?" he snarled.

"Just hold on, Tony." Vergil said, attempting to calm him. "Now let's think about this. She wasn't with Varanus's crew."

"Still, she's NOT coming with us." Tony shot back. "We seat 10 here, so unless any of you want to volunteer giving up your seats and hitchhiking back to La Paz, we don't have room for them since last I counted, we're at nine right now." the ferret pointed out to Triste.

"Right... anyway..." Vergil stepped from behind the Rover now. "Care to explain what you were doing going through our things?" the gecko asked as he approached Emilena.

"Who cares? Let's just search 'em and ditch 'em!" Tony muttered, gritting his teeth as he gripped the steering wheel. He wanted to be back in La Paz on a bed relaxing... not... dealing with Emilena.

Emilena stashed her pistol and stepped out, hands raised. Flora did the same, giving everyone an uncomfortably good view.

"We were hired by a government agent named Marion," Emilena said slowly. "She was the woman in the flying frame. I don't know what her agenda is, it was a simple escort mission. But I heard her mention someone named 'Mace' over the radio."

Vergil narrowed his eyes. "Well then you're an idiot for thinking she was a government agent, or a liar. Mace is CEO of Zaloga Industries. I see he's keeping tabs on us. Well it's not worth the money he's paying you." he told her bluntly. "We'll let you go this once, but we catch you tailing us again, we'll ensure you can't follow, do I make myself clear?" the gecko asked, giving her a steely glare. "Also, hell of a way to repay your former comrades, wouldn't you say?"

"She's scum!" Tony cut in. "Soren, don't you have a grudge to settle with her? Now's your chance! Skin her alive! Hold her over the edge of the cliff! Drop her sorry ass! And remember... a dead woman has few secrets! A flayed woman has none!" Tony goaded the human on in the back seat.

Veril's eyes widened a bit, but he said nothing at the moment.

Marita heard Tonys horn and moved forward by about 10-15 feet, enough so tony could squeeze past her. Soren recalled what Emilena did to him in Lanthae. How she attacked him for simply calling the cops. How she did jack shit when the Purifiers burnt his house down and nearly killed him.

"Tony, shut the fuck up," Axel glared at the ferret, then stuck his head out of the window. "Soren... we can leave her behind," he called out as the human forced Emilena to strip down, "But you can't. Kill. Her."

Triste slid the knife back into the sheath. "If you want to kill her, Mr. Almaya, I don't see why not." She shrugged, ignoring the look Axel threw back at her, and rested her chin in her hands as she waited for whatever Soren was planning to play out.

Rubbing his throat, Rio sneered towards Tony. "That was your hat? It made a better frisbee, believe me."

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on June 26, 2014, 09:03:40 AM

"The hell we can't!" Tony shot back, ignoring Axel. "She's NOT a reliable ally! I don't know why Axel insists she is!" He glared right back at the rat. "But he apparently forgets she was willing to lead Lily into a trap! I don't care if she helped us in the end... the only thing that proved is that she's not reliable to start off with. She's working with Zaloga! You really want THEM following us around from now on! Make an example of her!" he shouted to Soren.

This could've continued, but then Rio opened his mouth, and that was it. Tony opened his door, and went around to the back door. "Move it, Triste!" he ordered, reaching over her and roughly grabbing the boy. "A frisbee, huh? Let's see how good of a frisbee you make!" Pulling Rio out and purposely holding him low so he'd be dragged over the ground, Tony walked to the edge of the Death Road.

Vergil would've intervened, but he sensed no intent to kill the boy just yet within Tony, so he held up his hand towards Axel in case the rat got any ideas and lightly shook his head. He was standing near Axel's door, so was in good position to catch his attention.

Holding him out over the edge of the Yungas Road now, Tony snarled, then dropped Rio without warning, but quickly caught him, though by now, Rio was about level with Tony's knees. "You now owe the Straccis, kid. And if you've never heard of them, you'll know who they are soon enough. You won't be able to take a piss without one looking over your shoulder, making sure you're working hard to repay me, got it? If I don't hear a 'yes sir' out of your mouth RIGHT NOW, I'm gonna send you on a way one trip to look for that hat of mine, got it?" he asked, shaking the kid a bit here.

Vergil could sense Tony's irrationality building now, and prepared to catch the kid should Tony make good on his threat... and hope he didn't miss.

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: bushwacked on June 26, 2014, 11:10:00 AM

Rio's teeth rattled as Tony shook him. He could feel the wind whipping at his hair, tearing at his clothes. Holding onto the ferret's wrists, he looked down, and saw the huge fall stretching beneath his dangling feet. Then his eyes focused on a thick branch just a short distance down the cliff, almost exactly beneath him, poking out over the drop. It looked sturdy enough to take the weight of an adult.

Looking back up at Tony, Rio narrowed his eyes. "The Straccis? Why the fuck would I give a shit about them?" Tightening his grip on the ferret's wrists, he grinned. "And seriously? You're threatening me with heights? Bad move, fucker." Hooking his trainers on a small rocky outcropping beneath him, Rio pulled down with his legs, sending him and Tony tumbling over the edge. As they fell, he angled Tony so he'd slam painfully into the overhanging tree branch. Letting himself fall slightly below, he shot out his hands and hooked his fingers into the cliff, sticking himself to the side.

Still grinning smugly, he climbed spider-like up and past Tony. Near the top of the cliff he turned, and dangling one-handed, flipped the bird at Tony. "Now, you owe me, cocksucker. Hope you're not afraid of heights!" Reaching up, he flipped himself nimbly over the side and back up onto the road.

Axel had been gaping ever since he saw the two of them vanish over the edge. When Rio lifted himself back into view soon after, Axel leaned out the window. "Rio?! Oh my... what the fuck did you do?!" he gasped.

"Relax... he's hanging in there," Rio said, stepping away. He looked around. "Someone might want to help him before he goes on the fall of his life," he smirked.

Title: Racing the Storm
Post by: Pterano on June 26, 2014, 11:43:29 AM

There was nothing Tony could do. One moment, he was standing up, the next, Rio played it suicidally, and sent the two of them toppling over the edge. Despite it looking as if the branch would be large enough to support an adult, the branches here weren't particularly strong, growing on the side of the cliff as they were. They held the mountain together, but their roots were stronger than their branches. Tony could only cry out in pain as the branch struck his side, and then... began to snap. It seemed as if Rio had miscalculated rather badly...

The ferret's arms flailed out, but they couldn't grab hold of anything but the branch as before Rio's eyes, it broke, and with an incomprehensible shriek, the ferret plummeted into the jungle below.

Vergil didn't have time to react. His eyes widened as he charged forward, sliding over the roof of the Rover but it was too late. He couldn't see Tony... and with no visual, it was impossible to catch him. "NO!" Vergil cried, shoving Rio out of the way as he bent down on his knees, but could see nothing but jungle... green as far as the eye could see, and no ferret.

"No!" Vergil slammed his fist into the ground, tears starting to stream down his cheeks as he searched desperately for Tony's life force. But there was so much down there... it was confusing him with his anger and anguish. He couldn't get a lock on anything solid... plenty of animals... but where was Tony? It was too dark to see anything... far too dark, even with his vision.

Getting shakily to his feet, his mind clouded over. He drew his blade and ignited it, then walked over to Emilena. Without warning, he brutally sliced into her hamstring, bringing her down on her knees. He then gripped her chin with one hand, and looked straight into her eyes. "If I ever see your face again... I'll cut it off and feed it to the catfish, you got that?" he asked, then beaned her with his own head. "She's all yours." he said to Soren.

Deactivating his blade, he gazed darkly at Axel. "Well... you insisted on saving the brat before... now Don Stracci will flay him alive... speaking of flaying. We're leaving him to his fate. We're not sheltering him, end of discussion. I don't need Kalis AND the mob down on me for this. You can be the one to make the call and explain why his son is dead. Let's get out of here..." Vergil stated, heading for the Rover now. "You better find a place to hide kid, and fast... but it won't do you any good, now that I think about it. His father will find you no matter where you go. You can stick with miss hamstring over there, except I don't think she's done much for you to start off with."

He slid into the seat where Tony had been only moments before, tears welling up in his eyes. "Marita! Start driving! We'll proceed down the road and get to Coroico, then turn around and pick up the highway to La Paz!" he ordered, gripping the steering wheel tightly, his hands shaking violently as he struggled to control his emotions. Flashes of red... the desire to kill Rio on the spot were murderingly strong. Something was in him... a part of him he didn't know existed... it was fighting for control, urging him to kill everyone and face Kalis himself. He could do it... he was strong enough... he could kill Kalis...

But he knew leaving them out here with no transportation and with Emilena having a sliced hamstring meant they were as good as dead anyway. If the mining conglomerates didn't get them, the rebels would. Throwing the Rover into gear, he gave one final look at Rio, being within inches of mentally crushing his skull. Perhaps the kid would feel a headache, or perhaps not, it was hard to say. Vergil didn't care. It was time to get out of this hellhole.

Down the road, Varanus watched the whole thing. He could see perfectly in the dark thanks to his eyes, and smiled wickedly to himself. He could sense Vergil's anguish and frustration... but something else as well. Something he hadn't felt in a long time. He could see what Vergil couldn't, and it was delicious. Positively delicious. It also made Vergil vulnerable, and could perhaps be something they could exploit later on.

"Kalis..." He opened up a direct channel to his lord now via an implanted comms link in his throat, speaking softly. "You need to hear this... you'll never guess what I just saw..."

"Aaaauuugh!" screamed Emilena, falling to her knees as often happens to those who have had their hamstring cut. "Jesus, what did I do to you? What's with people I don't know being violently mad at me?!?!?"

Lily ran over and grabbed Rio. "Oh, Rio...what have you done? Are you okay?" she asked nervously, eyes misting over. She tried to sense Tony, but her powers weren't nearly powerful enough. She could only feel people within tactile range.

"Because you brought him here in the first place!" Vergil called back to Emilena. "And you meddled in our affairs! I don't need to hear surprise from you!" He then turned his attention to Lily as she got out of the Rover.

"I already told you... we're not taking him with us! You want to stay with him and face the don's wrath, fine! But this is where you get off!" he shouted over to her sternly. "Who cares if he's OK? He just KILLED our friend! Isn't Tony a little more important here? Are you coming or staying?" he asked, drumming his fingers impatiently on the steering wheel. "That brat doesn't set one foot in either Rover though... final warning."

Soren's heart raced. Anger, fear and pretty much every emotion possible ran through him. In just a span of minutes, he had seen Rio kill Tony and Vergil cripple Emilena.

It was then he realized something terrible. Rio was going to get them all fucked. First he had pissed off the Bak Long Triads by stealing creds from one of their low level black marketeers. And now he had killed Tony Stracci. He did not want two powerful organized crime syndicates after him. And there was of course, the fact that he considered Tony and Axel to be good friends of his.

His arm twitched as he slung his rifle across his back. He headed for one of the rovers but instead of getting into the backseat, he grabbed the metal jack handle from the trunk.

Without warning, he swung the metal pipe at Rio's head. "You cocksucking brat! We helped save your ass from the Bak Long Triads! And this is how you repay us!?" he shouted. "By stealing Axel's wallet, killing Tony and marking everyone else as targets for Don Stracci!?"

"Tony was dangling him over a cliff, I'm not sure what you all were expecting him to do!" snapped Lily. She stepped in the way of Soren. "Soren, put that pipe down! You'd hurt a little boy? And Vergil, I'm ashamed of you! Letting your aggression and anger get the better of you! Where I come from we don't solve our anger problems by hurting people weaker than us!"
